The facts of the case are that one Ramanand Singh was the original owner of certain properties situate in villages Sarangpur, Ahrani and Pipri, Pargana Barausa, District Sultanpur, and died in 1925 leaving behind him his widowed daughter-in-law Mt Marjadi Kuar and the defendants Surajpal Singh and Lakhni Singh (defendants 2, 3 and 4) as his collateral heirs. On his death Mt Marjadi Kuar, his widowed daughter-in-law, applied for mutation of names in respect of the said property in her own favour. The aforesaid defendants raised objection in the revenue Courts to mutation being effected in favour of Marjadi Kuar Th plaintiff Jageshar Singh was also an objector in the same proceedings During the course of mutation proceedings defendants 2 to 4 named above executed a sale deed in favour of defendant 1, Jiyaoo Singh who is now the appellant before us, on 22nd March 1926. By virtue of that sale deed defendants 2 to 4 transferred a moiety of the properties belonging to Ramanand Singh, and to which they alleged they were entitled, for Rs 1,000 Under the terms of the sale-deed Rs. 200 alone were paid to the vendors at the time of the execution of the sale-deed and the remaining Rs 800 were left with the vendee Jiyaoo Singh for meeting the expenses of the litigation relating to the property in suit from time to time It might be mentioned here that although Mt Marjadi Kuar was successful in obtaining mutation in her favour from the lowest revenue Court, yet she subsequently died and the mutation of names was ultimately effected in favour of defendants 2 to 4 who were the collaterals of Ramanand Singh and were entitled to the entire property left by him

The plaintiff-respondent Jageshar Singh has brought the present suit for pre-emption in respect of the half-share transferred by defendants 2 to 4 in favour of defendant 1 under the sale-deed mentioned above He claimed pre-emption on the payment of Rs 175 only which had been paid to the vendors at the time of the execution of the sale-deed He claimed pre-emption on the ground that he was preferentially entitled to the property in suit, it being situate within Mahal Ramanand Singh in which he himself was a cosharer

The defendant-appellant Jiyaoo Singh contested the suit on two grounds Firstly that the sale evidenced by the deed dated 22nd March 1926 was merely a sale of a law suit and could not therefore form the subject of pre-emption and secondly that if the plaintiff be held entitled to pre-empt he must be ordered to pay Rs. 1,000, the price of the property entered in the sale-deed

The learned Munsif of Musafirkhana at Sultanpur by his decree dated 1st August 1927 held that the deed in suit was not a sale of a doubtful claim amounting to a sale of a law suit but was a sale-deed relating to the property belonging to the vendors and was therefore one which could validly give rise to a right of pre-emption. He found that the actual price paid was Rs 175, Rs 25 having been spent in purchasing stamp and meeting other costs of execution of the deed, and this the vendee was bound in law to bear On these findings he decreed the suit of the plaintiff-respondent, Jageshar Singh and gave him a decree in respect of the property covered by the sale-deed on payment of Rs 175.

The vendee-appellant Jiyaoo Singh appealed to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur who passed a decree dated 24th October 1927 allowing his appeal to this extent that he decreed pre-emption in favour of the respondents on payment of Rs. 1,000 instead of Rs 175 as decreed by the learned Munsif On an interpretation of the sale-deed he agreed with the learned Munsif and came to the conclusion that the transaction was not a sale of doubtful rights which could be considered as a sale of a share in a law suit and as such not liable to pre-emption

The vendee Jiyaoo Singh has now appealed to this Court The case was originally set down for hearing before one of us but as it appeared that the question involved was one of importance it was referred for decision to a Bench of two Judges and the case is now before us

The case has been argued at great length and the only point which we have to decide is whether the transaction evidenced by the sale-deed of 22nd March 1926 amounts to such a sale of the property covered by it as would validly give rise to a right of pre-emption or whether it is merely a sale of a doubtful claim falling within the description of a sale of a share in a law suit which would not give rise to a right of pre-emption

We have read the deed carefully and have come to the conclusion that on a proper interpretation of the same it cannot be held to be a sale of a law suit, and we now proceed to give our reasons for holding this opinion The deed recites that the property belonged to Ramanand Singh and on his death the vendors were his nearest collaterals and that Mt Marjadi Kuar had no right to the property in suit. It further states that the said lady had filed an application for mutation of her own name after the death of Ramanand Singh to which the respondent Jageshar Singh and other persons as well as the vendors had objected It was further stated in the deed that a litigation (muqadma bazi) was therefore going on in the revenue Courts and as the vendors were not possessed of sufficient means to fight the case they were compelled to transfer a half-share in the properties left by Ramanand Singh to the appellant Jiyaoo Singh, for a sum of Rs 1,000. Out of this sum, a sum of Rs. 200 was stated to have been received by the executants for their own expenses as well as to meet the costs of the stamp and registration of the deed, and a sum of Rs 800 was left with Thakur Jiyaoo Singh for the purpose of fighting out the case. It was further stated in the deed that the consideration for the sale had been fixed at Rs. 1,000 which was to be treated as the purchase money (zarsaman) and that if the vendee had to spend more than Rs 800 left with him for the litigation expenses he would not be entitled to recover it from the vendors and if he spent less they would not be entitled to claim any refund of the said amount In the end the deed was described as a deed of absolute sale (bainama qatai)

From the provisions of the deed which we have stated above it would be clear that the price fixed in the deed was an ascertained sum, it being Rs. 1,000 It would also appear from the terms of the deed itself as well as from the facts proved that there was no doubt of any sort as to the rights of the vendors Surajpal Singh and others Mt Marjadi Kuar being the widowed daughter-in-law of Ramanand Singh could not be considered to have any right to the property left by him under Hindu law, her husband having predeceased Ramanand Singh The appellant has not drawn our attention to any circumstance which might enable us to hold that the right of the vendors in this case was a doubtful one It was only pointed out that the vendors were out of possession and consequently the sale of the property must be held to be a sale of a law suit We regret that that circumstance alone, unless it is accompanied by other circumstances, would not justify us in holding that the property sold was merely a law suit In Abdul Wahid Khan v Shalika Bibi (1), a suit for pre-emption brought by the appellant Abdul Wahid Khan was dismissed on the ground that he had previously denied the title of the respondent Mt Shaluka Bibi and which had compelled her to raise money to defray the costs of a suit to recover her share and the consideration of the sale-deed executed by her was for the purpose of providing the money necessary for carrying on the suit, the amount of which could not be estimated In these circumstances the Privy Council dismissed the suit holding the transaction to be one which should be called a sale of a share in a law suit We asked the learned Advocate for the appellant to point out to us whether the respondent Jageshar Singh had at any time denied the title of the vendors of the appellant, namely Surajpal Singh and others. He had frankly admitted that he was unable to do so We are, therefore, compelled to hold that the two elements, namely, denial of the right of the vendors by the person claiming pre-emption and the sale-price being not an ascertained one were not present in the present suit and consequently the present case was one which could clearly be distinguished from the case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council

Our attention was next drawn to three cases decided by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Mirza Mohammad Abbas Ali v A Quieros (2), Khurshaid Ali v Rashid Husain (3) and Babu Lal v Ali Ahmad Khan (4) In these cases it was held that where property was not in possession of the vendor at the time of the sale and he had only a doubtful right to recover it, the sale could not be considered to be such a sale of a proprietary or under-proprietary tenure or a share of such tenure within the meaning of S. 9, Oudh Laws Act, as could give rise to a right of pre-emption We do not dissent from the view laid down in these cases though we must state, as was pointed out in a subsequent decision of the same Court in Gajadhar Prasad v. Maurokhan (5), that the mere fact that a person is out of possession would not alone justify a Court in holding that the sale in dispute was a sale of a share in a law suit if unaccompanied by other circumstances It must, in our opinion, further appear that the right sold was really a doubtful right No definite rule can be laid down for determining in what cases such a right must be held to be doubtful. It must depend upon the facts of each case. If it is found that the property sold consisted merely of a doubtful right, the rule laid down in the three cases mentioned above would apply. In conclusion we would also like to refer to a recent case of this Court which is reported in Rampher Singh v Sheo Saran Singh (6) It was held in that case that before a pre-emptor can succeed in such a case he must assert title in the vendor and he must also show that the deed of conveyance is one evidencing a transaction of out-and-out sale, and not merely a promise to sell the property in future. It was also held in that case that the fact that the vendor is out of possession or in possession would not matter. It was further laid down that the price must be stated or ascertainable at the time of the execution of the deed, and therefore where a conveyance was executed in consideration of a price and also a promise to do certain things which was to cost an indefinite sum of money, the conveyance would not give rise to a right of pre-emption We are in entire agreement with the view of law laid down by this Court in that case

On the interpretation of the deed in suit and on a consideration of all the circumstances, we are driven to the conclusion that though the vendors in the present case were out of possession at the time of the execution of the sale-deed in suit, yet their claim which formed the subject of the transfer could not be considered to be a doubtful claim, nor could the sale be considered to be a sale of rights to come into existence at some future time or a mere promise to sell the same rights at some future time; nor could it be said that the sale was not for a definite sum mentioned in the deed The conclusion at which we have therefore arrived, as will appear from what we have stated above, is that the sale in the present case was an out and out sale in præsenti, that it was not a sale of a doubtful right and that a definite sum was stated in the deed as the sale-price for which the property was sold. Under these circumstances we hold that the transaction evidenced by the sale-deed dated 22nd March 1926 was one which could give rise to a right of

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal against the dismissal of his suit The plaintiff, Hafiz Imdad Ali is a resident of Khairabad in the district of Sitapur He is now a man of over eighty years of age He is a Sunni by religion and governed by the Hanafi law He has no near relations On 15th January 1924 he executed and registered what purported to be a deed of wakf by which he vested practically the whole of his property in the names of trustees who were to devote the income to charitable and religious purposes in conformity with the dictates of the Sunni faith Amongst other provisions in the deed were provisions for the maintenance of Imdad Ali and certain of his relations We have it admitted that shortly after the execution of this deed, Imdad Ali himself applied to the revenue authorities to remove his name from the revenue registers and to record the names of the trustees as the persons responsible for the payment of the revenue of these properties So the trustees took over the management and administered the property. On 15th January 1927 Imdad Ali brought the suit out of which this present appeal arises to set aside the deed in question upon the grounds that he was an illiterate man, that for five or six years he had been suffering from physical and mental debility, that his execution of the deed in question had been procured by fraud and undue influence, that he had actually executed the deed under the impression that he was to retain possession of the property in question during his life and that possession over it was only to pass to the trustees after his death He further attacked the deed on the ground that its provisions were contrary to law and that it was unenforceable in law (The judgment then discussed the evidence and holding that plaintiff was a free agent proceeded ) The learned counsel has attacked the deed on the ground of vagueness and uncertainty on the following argument. The deed makes provision for the payment of maintenance to certain persons including the plaintiff-appellant himself and declares this maintenance to be non-transferable and non-heritable As each person dies or in certain other circumstances the amount saved was to go into a taufir fund. The learned counsel suggests that this allotment to the taufir fund makes the disposition void for uncertainty but we find in para 12 that the trustees are given explicit directions as to the utilization of the taufir fund and we find nothing uncertain about those directions They could use the taufir fund for propaganda in support of the Muslim religion or they could use it for relief to distressed Muslims and there is nothing uncertain about that disposition

We now come to the last point The learned counsel has attacked the deed strongly on the ground that it provides maintenance for Ashiq Ali, the son of Imdad Ali's half-brother, Sadiq Ali, the son of Imdad Ali's father's brother, Ahmad Ali, the grandson of Imdad Ali's father's brother and Mt Najuban, Imdad Ali's half-sister His argument here is that these persons were not members of Imdad Ali's family and that, therefore, the disposition is null and void under the provisions of S 3, Act 6 of 1913, the short title of which is the Musalman

Wakf Validating Act. Before we discuss the construction that the learned counsel would have us place on the words in S 3, it is necessary to refer very briefly to the circumstances in which Act 6 of 1913 came into being. As a result of the decision in what is known as Abdul Fata case—Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v Russomoy Dhur Chowdhary (1) by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, Act 6 of 1913 was passed In that decision their Lordships laid down that under Mahomedan law a perpetual family settlement made in an alleged wakf is not legal merely because there is an ultimate but illusory gift to the poor, and in that decision their Lordships refused to a great extent to recognize dispositions which were colourable wakfs on the ground that they transgressed the law relating to perpetuities Their Lordships did not discuss a wakf of the nature of the wakf before us in which there is nothing approaching creation of a perpetuity, and in which the maintenance is in every instance for the lifetime only of the maintenance-holder Act 6 of 1913 was passed to protect from attack certain wakfs based upon grounds of contravention of the law relating to perpetuities It was intended to expand the law relating to the creation of a wakf and not to restrict it and a wakf which would have been considered good wakf before the Act was passed could not possibly be considered a bad wakf owing to anything contained in the Act

As we are of opinion that the wakf before us would have been a good wakf in the light of the principles of the Hanafi law and of the directions given by their Lordships in Abul Fata's case, it is hardly necessary to say anything more But as the point has been raised before us and as we have been referred to a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh we think it advisable to make some remarks to the meaning of the word "family" in S 3, Act 6 of 1913. The decision in question is not reported in any authorized edition. It is, however, reported in Abdul Mabud Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (2), and as it seems to have been utilized as a guide in some Courts we think it better to refer to it. In that particular case a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh decided that cousins in the fourth and fifth degree could not be considered members of a person's family within the meaning of S. 3, Act 6 of 1913 We do not decide whether such distinct relations should not be considered members of a family, but we are concerned with some remarks made in that decision. At p. 154 it is said :

> " We consider that the correct meaning of the word "family" in the sub-section is that it includes only those persons residing in his house for whose maintenance the author of the trust is mainly responsible."

We see no reason whatever for introducing this restriction It does not appear to us material whether the person in question resides in the house or whether the author of the trust is mainly responsible for his maintenance We have not the slightest hesitation in finding that a brother is a member of a Muslim's family within the meaning of this section even when such brother lives in a different country and supports himself He does not cease to be a member of the family thereby In the particular case before us we have not the slightest hesitation in finding that Ashiq Ali, Sadiq Ali, Ahmad Ali and Mt Najuban are members of Imdad Ali's family These findings dispose of all the pleas argued before us in appeal. We dismiss this appeal with costs

Application No 21 of 1928, Decided on 30th August 1928, from order of Addl Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 31st March 1928.

(a) Civil P C., O. 21, R. 90—Material irregularity—Property to be sold in two lots—Creditor allowed to bid not below his claim—At sale of one lot creditor offering certain price and reserving right to offer balance at sale of second lot—Sale officer refusing to accept bid—Property sold for much lower price—Material irregularity is caused resulting in substantial injury to decree-holder.

Decree-holder applied to the Court for permission to be allowed to bid for the purchase of property to be sold in two lots in execution of his own decree. The Court granted him permission but imposed condition that he would not be permitted to bid for any amount below the amount due under the decree in his favour. When one of the lots was being sold, the decree-holder offered a certain bid, reserving his right to offer the balance of the amount due in his favour at the time when the second lot would be sold. The sale officer refused to accept the bid and knocked down the sale at a price much lower than that offered by the decree-holder.

Held, that material irregularity was caused in the conduct of the sale, and that substantial injury had been sustained by the decree-holder by reason of such irregularity. [P 29 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of the order setting aside a certain auction-sale passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda on 31st March 1928

The facts which have given rise to this application are as follows :

On 8th October 1925 three persons Jagdish Prasad, Gaya Prasad and Gur Prasad who are respondents 1, 2 and 3 before us, obtained a decree for sale from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda for Rs 2194-15-6 against three persons, namely, Chaudhri Hargobind Singh, Chaudhri Bala Prasad and Babu Aditya Prasad, the applicant before us. The decree clearly stated that the sum mentioned above should be paid by defendants 1, 2 and 3 upto the 8th April 1926 and in case defendants 1 and 2 or defendant 3 paid the decretal amount in Court on or before the date fixed for payment, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendants all documents in their possession or power relating to the mortgaged property and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendants free from mortgage or other incumbrances existing in their favour The mortgaged property, we may mention consisted of a two annas share in village Dewari Khera and a three annas share in village Bodhipur, both situate in pargana Sadulahnagar, District Gonda

None of the three defendants against whom the decree was passed made the payment on the date fixed and on 29th May 1926 a decree absolute was passed in favour of the three decree-holders named above against the three judgment-debtors already named Babu Aditya Prasad, the applicant, was also a party to that decree absolute for sale and the decree clearly stated that as the sum due had not been paid into Court on the date fixed, the property against which the decree for sale was passed should be sold and the proceeds realized from the sale spent in the payment of the decree passed in favour of the decree-holders The amount for which the decree was made absolute was Rs 2204-8-6 with future interest reckoned from 29th May 1926

On 8th October 1926 the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree absolute for sale passed in their favour and on 24th February 1927 the Court ordered the mortgaged property mentioned above, against which the decree for sale had been passed, to be sold in two lots, one consisting of the share in village Dewari Khera and the other consisting of the share in village Bodhipur Two separate proclamations were therefore ordered to be issued in respect of those two properties The date fixed for the sale in both the cases was 20th April 1927 On 23rd March 1927 the decree-holders applied to the Court for permission to be allowed to offer bid for the purchase of the property to be sold in execution of their decree. The Court granted them permission on the same date but imposed a condition that they would not be permitted to bid for any amount below the amount due under the decree in their favour

On 20th April 1927 the sale officer sold the two annas share in village Dewari Khera, it having been purchased by the applicant, Aditya Prasad for Rs 700. On the date of sale the decree-holders put in an application to the effect that the sale had wrongly been knocked down for Rs. 700 in favour of Babu Aditya Prasad although the decree-holders were willing to offer a bid of Rs 2,355-1-0 and that it was not proper for the Court to have ignored their bid They also stated in the application that the property was very much more in value than the sum of Rs 700 for which it had been sold to Babu Aditya Prasad The sale officer rejected the application on the ground that it had been made too late

On 21st April 1927 the decree-holders filed an application to the Court which had passed the decree under execution, for setting aside the sale on the ground that the Court had acted irregularly in not accepting the bid of the decree-holders and had therefore committed a material irregularity in the conduct of the sale It was also alleged by them in the said application that the result of the irregularity was that the property had been sold for much below its value and thus the decree-holders had suffered substantial loss On these grounds they asked that the sale be set aside

The learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda who tried this application for setting aside the sale came to the conclusion that there had been no material irregularity in the conduct of the sale and no substantial loss was established to have been suffered by the decree-holders. In this view of the case he dismissed the objection of the decree-holders and refused to set aside the sale

The decree-holders carried the matter further in appeal and the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda came to the conclusion that material irregularity had been established to have occurred in the conduct of the sale and it was evident from the sale proceedings that the property had been sold for much below its value On these findings he reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge and set aside the sale

Babu Aditya Prasad, the auction-purchaser, has applied to this Court in revision for setting aside the order passed by the Additional District Judge and it has been again urged by the learned advocate appearing on his behalf that the learned Additional District Judge was wrong in holding that there was material irregularity in the conduct of the sale and that the property had in consequence been sold for a low sum thus causing substantial loss to the decree-holders. We have looked into the record and we find that what happened at the time of the sale on 20th April 1926 was that at first Babu Aditya Prasad offered a bid of Rs. 500

Then one Mirza Sulaiman Shah offered the next bid for Rs 600. Babu Aditya Prasad then again raised the amount of his bid to Rs 700 One Raj Bahadur, guardian of the minor decree-holders, was present at the time and he offered a bid for Rs. 1800 The sale officer asked him to bid up to the decretal amount but he said that he would offer a bid for the balance when the other village would be sold The sale officer under the circumstances refused to accept the bid of the guardian of the decree-holders and knocked down the property in favour of Babu Aditya Prasad for Rs 700 These facts are established from the evidence of Raj Bahadur Lal, the guardian himself, who was examined as witness 1 and from the evidence of Pandit Ram Kewal, reader of the sale officer, who was examined as witness 2 This evidence therefore established clearly that it is not true that the decree-holder had not made any offer and the fard boli must be read in the light of the evidence of Raj Bahadur and of Pandit Ram Kewal, who was responsible for the writing of the said fard. We are therefore of opinion that the officer conducting the sale was clearly wrong in refusing to accept the bid offered by Raj Bahadur Lal on behalf of the decree-holders The permission granted by the Court to the decree-holders on 23rd March 1927 did not specify what amount the decree-holders were to bid when one item of the property covered by the sale-decree was to be sold The decree-holders' guardian was therefore clearly within his rights to offer a bid for Rs 1800 when the village Dewari Khera alone was being sold, reserving his right to offer the balance of the amount due in his favour at the time when the second item of property covered by the decree, namely, the share in village Bodhipur was sold We are in entire agreement with the view taken by the learned Additional District Judge The refusal on the part of the sale-officer to accept the bid of the decree-holders, in our opinion, amounts to a material irregularity committed in the conduct of the sale.

As to the substantial injury suffered by the decree-holders by reason of this irregularity the position in our opinion is so obvious that it requires no argument. The decree-holders could have realized the entire amount of their decree or at least such portion of it as they might have chosen to have offered the bid for and by not being allowed to offer bids at the time of the sale which was the action of the sale officer there has resulted a loss to them in the property being sold for a a sum of Rs. 700 only It is clear that they had offered at least Rs 1,800 and if the sale officer had accepted their bid for that sum, the decree would have become satisfied at least to that extent The substantial injury suffered by the decree-holders by reason of the irregularity committed in the conduct of the sale is, therefore, in our opinion amply established by the facts proved

We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Additional District Judge was quite correct in holding that there was irregularity committed in the conduct of the sale and that substantial injury had been sustained by the decree-holders by reason of such irregularity and therefore no case for interference in revision has been made out on the merits. But we should like to point out that their Lordships of the Privy Council have frequently observed that the High Court in exercising its revisional powers is not justified to exercise them merely on the ground that the order passed by the Court below seems to it to be erroneous. If the Court, whose order it is intended to revise, had jurisdiction to decide the matter and has acted properly in the exercise of that jurisdiction, its order should not be set aside merely on the ground that the High Court cannot agree with the conclusion arrived at by the trial Court whether the case is decided rightly or wrongly If the Court deciding it had jurisdiction to decide the matter, it cannot be considered to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity simply because the case appears to the High Court to have been decided wrongly—vide Rajah Amir Hasan Khan v Sheo Bakhsh Singh (1), Muhammad Yusuf Khan v Abdul Rahman Khan (2). In a recent case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council and reported in Balakrishna Udayar v Vasudeva Aiyar (3) their Lordships observed at p 267 (of 44 I A) that S 115, Civil P. C, applies only to a case of jurisdiction alone the irregular exercise of it or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it, and that the section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved It, therefore, appears to us to be clear on the authorities quoted above that even if the conclusions arrived at by the learned Additional District Judge had been erroneous we would not have been justified in interfering with them in our revisional jurisdiction.

We might also mention that we are in entire agreement with the principle of law mentioned by the learned Additional District Judge in his judgment that where a person is a party to a decree and is bound by its terms he cannot be allowed to act in a manner so as to nullify or evade the terms of that decree The learned Additional District Judge observed that the applicant Aditya Prasad was a judgment-debtor in the decree obtained by the respondents against him and others on 8th October 1925. That decree clearly specified that Babu Aditya Prasad who was impleaded as defendant 3 should make the payment as ordered by the decree within the time fixed by it and that if the money was not so paid the property mortgaged or sufficient part of it was to be sold This would not enable Babu Aditya Prasad who was bound by the decree to purchase the same property after having made a default in making the payment he was directed to make It appears to us to be clear that no judgment-debtor can be permitted to do this. Allowing such a thing to be done by the judgment-debtors would clearly enable them to nullify the effects of the decree by which they are and must be held to be bound

We, therefore, dismiss this application with costs

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 60—Clog on redemption—Stipulation not to redeem for 35 years—No other advantageous provisions to mortgagee—There is no clog on redemption.

Where a term of the mortgage is thirty-five years and the deed does not contain any provisions as are wholly advantageous to the mortgagee and do not confer any corresponding advantages in favour of the mortgagors, there is no clog on the redemption A I R. 1914 P C 36, A I R. 1921 Oudh 45, A I R. 1925 Oudh 403, and A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 237, Foll. [P 31 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S 60—Clog on redemption—No undue influence—No unfair dealing—Mere stipulation of high rate of interest is no clog.

Where there is no undue influence or unfair dealing, no case of clog can be put forward merely upon the ground that a high rate of interest has been stipulated for in the mortgage deed 7 O. L J 389, Foll. [P 32 C 1]

Judgment — These two appeals, Nos 129 and 130 of 1928, arise out of suits Nos 235 and 252 of 1927, decided by the learned Munsif of Tarabganj on 30th November 1927

The dispute in these suits relates to a 1 anna 4 pies share in village Inderpur in the district of Gonda. The circumstances out of which these suits have arisen, so far as they are material to this judgment, may be shortly stated :

Drigbijai Lal and Girwar Lal, son of one Raj Bahadur, were owners of the property in suit. They mortgaged the property to Gur Partab Singh for Rs 950, for a period of fifteen years, on 5th September 1911. It was a possessory mortgage.

On 14th October 1925 Drigbijai Lal and his son Gur Charan and Girwar Lal's widow, Mt Parshadi, mortgaged the property in suit to Sarfaraz Singh for Rs 1,600, out of which Rs 900 were left with the mortgagee for redemption of the prior mortgage of 5th September 1911. The term of the mortgage in favour of Sarfaraz Singh was thirty-five years and six months. The mortgagee was to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest on Rs 1,000 and interest was to be paid by the mortgagors on the remaining Rs 600 at Rs 18/12 per cent per annum, compoundable yearly

On 29th July 1926 the mortgagors (Drigbijai Lal and others) sold the property in suit to Udwat Singh, brother of Gur Pratab Singh, prior mortgagee Udwat Singh and Gur Pratab Singh are admittedly members of a joint Hindu family

Sarfaraz Singh deposited Rs 950 in Court under S. 83 of Act 4 of 1882 on 2nd April 1927 to pay off the prior mortgage of 1911. However, Gur Pratab Singh refused to accept the money and the result was that the application was dismissed on 28th May 1927 Suit No 235 was thereupon brought by Sarfaraz Singh on 11th August 1927 for redemption of the prior mortgage of 1911, against Gur Pratab Singh and Udwat Singh. The defence was that the mortgage was extinguished as Udwat Singh had already redeemed the property from his brother Gur Pratab Singh and thus nothing was left to be redeemed

Suit No 252 was then brought by Udwat Singh and the original mortgagors, against Sarfaraz Singh, on 6th September 1927 for redemption of the mortgage of 1925, on the allegation that the terms of the mortgage constituted a clog on redemption and that they were therefore entitled to redeem the mortgage at once without waiting for the term entered in the deed

The claim was resisted by Sarfaraz Singh He denied that the terms constituted a clog on redemption and contended also that Udwat Singh, being transferee from the mortgagors, could not raise the plea of clog on redemption

Both the suits were tried together by the learned Munsif of Tarabganj. He found in Sarfaraz Singh's suit that the latter was entitled to redeem the mortgage as the alleged redemption by Udwat Singh from Gur Pratab Singh was a bogus one The suit of Sarfaraz Singh was therefore decreed by the learned Munsif He found in Udwat Singh's suit that the terms of the deed do not constitute a clog on redemption and the claim for redemption was therefore premature He therefore dismissed that suit

Udwat Singh and his transferrers then appealed. Both the appeals were allowed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge The result was that the claim of Udwat Singh was decreed and Sarfaraz Singh's suit was dismissed with costs

Sarfaraz Singh has now come to this Court in second appeal He challenges the findings of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the points decided against him.

The plea that Udwat Singh could not raise the plea of clog on redemption has now been given up by the appellant's learned counsel He contends, however, that the terms of the mortgage of 1925 do not constitute a clog on redemption and the claim for redemption should therefore be rejected. The only point for determination in appeal No. 130 of 1928 is whether the terms of the deed in suit (i.e., mortgage-deed dated 14th October 1925) operate as a clog on the equity of redemption We have heard the learned counsel on both sides at some length We have also examined the deed in suit carefully We think the terms of the deed in suit do not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption

It has now definitely been settled by the case of Bakhtawar Begam v Husaini Khanum (1) that ordinarily there cannot be any redemption before the term of the mortgage expires. As pointed out in the case of Sohan Lal v Kunwar (2), a stipulation for a long period before which redemption is not to be allowed does not by itself amount to a fetter on the right of redemption, but it may when coupled with other collateral covenants in the mortgage, go to show an intention on the part of the mortgagee to render redemption extremely difficult, if not altogether impossible, so as to constitute a clog on the equity of redemption. It was of course held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Muhammad Khan v Ram Lal Kalwar (3) that a postponement of the right of redemption for a long period, when coupled with such other provisions in the mortgage-deed as are wholly advantageous to the mortgagee and do not confer any corresponding advantages in favour of the mortgagor, operates as a clog on the equity of redemption and the mortgagor is entitled to be relieved of it. As pointed out in the case of Dargahi Lal v. Rafiq-un-nissa (4), decided by a Bench of this Court on 20th April 1927, if the effect of a condition postponing redemption for a specified term of years is to make the mortgage practically irredeemable, a Court is justified in setting it aside, but ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which a mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period

Where a mortgage contains a condition that it should not be redeemable for 75 years and the condition is not unreasonable and its effect is not at the end of that period to raise the amount payable for redemption to an unconscionable figure, the condition which prevents redemption until the period of 75 years has passed is enforceable. Each case has to be decided on its own facts and circumstances There is nothing more dangerous and misleading than to apply the inferences to be drawn from one set of facts to the facts and circumstances proved elsewhere We have examined the deed in suit carefully The term of the mortgage is of course thirty-five years and six months, but we find no other provisions in the mortgage-deed as are wholly advantageous to the mortgagee and do not confer any corresponding advantages in favour of the mortgagors The mortgagors or their ancestors had already mortgaged the property in suit to Gur Pratab Singh for Rs·950 by the deed dated 5th September 1911. It was a mortgage with possession and the mortgagee was to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest.

(1) A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 36=36 All. 195=41 I A. 84 (P.C.).
(2) A. I. R. 1921 Oudh 45.
(3) A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 406.
(4) A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 237.

It appears that the profits accruing from the property were sufficient only to pay the interest due on the mortgagee for redemption of the prior mortgage The mortgagee was to appropriate the usufruct in lieu of interest on Rs 1,000 and interest was to be paid by the mortgagors on the remaining Rs 600 at Rs 18-12-0 per cent per annum with yearly rests The profits of the mortgaged property were not sufficient to cover the interest accruing on the said sum of Rs 600 and hence the mortgagors had covenanted to pay interest at the rate mentioned above. In the first place, the rate of interest is not a high rate In the second place, in the absence of undue influence or unfair dealing, no case of clog can be put forward merely upon the ground that a high rate of interest has been stipulated for in the mortgage-deed see Saheb Bakhsh Singh v. Muhammad Ali (5) As pointed out in the case of Gokul Prasad v Goitri Prasad (6), where the profits of the mortgaged property are not enough to cover interest accruing on a portion of the mortgage money and that portion is left to carry interest at the rate provided for in the document, there is no reason why the enforcement of a covenant of that nature would constitute any clog on the equity of redemption. It is true that interest, if it remains unpaid, may accumulate, but who is to blame for that. It cannot accumulate if it is paid by the mortgagors at the proper time. The mortgagors can easily stop the running of interest by making payments at the proper time. If they fail to do so they have themselves to thank for the consequences We do not find that the conditions entered in the deed are unreasonable The covenants in the mortgage in suit do not show that there was any intention on the part of the mortgagee to render redemption impossible or extremely difficult. Under these circumstances, we are not prepared to agree with the finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the point under consideration. We hold, agreeing with the learned Munsif, that the terms of the deed in suit do not constitute clog on the equity of redemption Udwat Singh's suit is therefore premature and the claim for redemption must therefore be rejected.

The result is that we allow appeal No 130 of 1928 and, setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, restore that of the first Court. The appellant will get his costs from Udwat Singh respondent in all the three Courts

We cannot dispose of appeal No 129 of 1928 which arises out of suit No 235 of 1927 The appeal which arises out of that suit was not disposed of by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the merits. Having disposed of the other appeal, he did not think it necessary to dispose of appeal No 3 of 1928, before him on the merits and made the following observations in his judgment :

"In view of the decision in the first case the second suit should be dismissed. Therefore the decree of the Court below in the other suit No. 235 of 1927, decreeing the suit for possession, is set aside and the appeal No 3 of 1928 is also allowed with costs and the suit No. 235 of 1927 is dismissed with costs "

We allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its original number in the register of appeals and proceed to determine it according to law Costs will abide the result.

First Appeal No 32 of 1928, Decided on 10th October 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalganj, D/- 28th November 1928.

Oudh Laws Act, S. 5—Reasonable amount of dower should be determined from means of husband at the time of suit.

Section 5 lays down that the dower to be allowed by the Court shall be reasonable with reference to the means of the husband and the status of the wife. In determining what amount would be reasonable considering the means of the husband, the Court has to look to the means of the husband at the present time when the contract is sought to be enforced and not to his means at the time when the contract was entered into. [P 34 C 1]

Ghulam Hasan and Mohammad Husain —for Appellant

Wasim Anant Prasad and Sri Ram— for Respondent

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj, Lucknow. It arises out of a suit for the recovery of dower Admittedly the marriage of the plaintiff and the defendant took place on 5th May 1890. The plaintiff's case as alleged in the plaint is that the dower fixed at the time of marriage was Rs. 20,000 and that she had been divorced on 1st May 1926 and was therefore entitled to recover Rs. 20,000 on account of dower from the defendant The defendant in his defence pleaded that the dower fixed at the time of nikah amounted to Rs 111 only and that this amount had been paid up after the divorce. He also pleaded that the divorce took place about 30 years ago and so the claim was barred by time In any case, he pleaded that the amount claimed was excessive and unreasonable

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the evidence led by the plaintiff as well as by the defendant on the question as regards the time of the alleged divorce was unsatisfactory but accepted the plaintiff's case that she had not been divorced before the proceedings, which took place in the City Magistrate's Court on 21st May 1926 On the question of dower he found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that it was fixed at Rs 20,000 He further held that the evidence given by the defendant about the dower being Rs 111 was far from satisfactory However, he held that as the plaintiff had failed to establish her case the Court had no option but to accept the defendant's figure. He also disbelieved the evidence relating to the alleged payment of dower by the defendant. On these findings he gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs 111 only. It should be noted that the learned Subordinate Judge also recorded a finding to the effect that if the dower had been proved to have been Rs 20,000 he would have awarded Rs 5,000 as a reasonable amount

The plaintiff comes here in appeal She has confined her claim in this Court to the sum of Rs 5,000 The contentions raised on her behalf are that on the evidence, oral and documentry, it has been satisfactorily established that the amount of dower fixed at the time of marriage was Rs. 20,000 and that at any rate it should be found that the customary dower in her family was Rs. 20,000

Both parties are agreed that on the day when the plaintiff was married to the defendant the plaintiff's sister, Mt. Mariam Khanam, was also married to one Wali Bakhsh Both marriages took place at one and the same time The plaintiff's case was that at the time of her marriage there were executed two documents, one a nikahnama (Ex. 1) and the other an iqrarnama (Ex 2) by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff Two similar documents were executed in connexion with the marriage of the plaintiff's sister, one being nikahnama (Ex 4) and the other an iqrarnama (Ex 3) by Wali Bakhsh in favour of Mt Mariam Khanam. All these four documents were denied by the defendant In his statement as D. W. 1 he alleged that no nikahnama was written in the marriage But the genuineness of the two iqrarnamas (Exs 2 and 3) was accepted in the course of the trial of the suit and their genuineness is no longer disputed The learned Subordinate Judge did not accept the nikahnamas (Exs. 2 and 4) to be genuine We cannot see our way to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in this matter. In the first place, when the plaintiff and her sister adopted the rather unusual course of getting deeds of agreement on stamped papers in their favour containing stipulations intended to safeguard themselves against ill-treatment and securing promise for suitable provision for their food and raiment, etc, it is in the highest degree improbable that they should not have resorted to the very common practice of getting nikahnamas executed. Realizing this fact the learned counsel for the defendant stated before us that nikahnamas were executed but they were different from Exs 1 and 4 This position is hardly available to the defendant's counsel when the defendant stated on oath that no nikahnamas were executed at all

Next, let us examine the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for rejecting Exs 1 and 4. (The judgment then discussed the of genuineness of Exs 1 and 4, and concluding that they were genuine proceeded) It was pointed out by the learned counsel for the defendant-respondent that at the time of marriage the plaintiff and her mother were almost paupers and it was argued that it was therefore most improper that such a large sum should have been fixed as dower The argument does not appeal to us, as it is a matter of common knowledge that the amounts fixed for dower are frequently out of all proportions to the means of the husband It is this practice which led the legislature to enact the provision contained in S 5, Oudh Laws Act We therefore find that the amount of dower fixed at the time of marriage was Rs 20,000 In this view, it is not necessary for us to enter into the question of customary dower but we might remark that the evidence with regard to it is very meagre inasmuch as it consists only of the uncorroborated statement of the plaintiff about the dower of her five sisters having been fixed at Rs 20,000

The next question is as regards the amount which should be considered reasonable within the meaning of S 5, Oudh Laws Act The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the defendant possessed property worth Rs 20,000 or Rs 25,000 The oral evidence on the point consists of the solitary statement of Abdul Aziz Khan (P W No 1), a brother of the defendant His evidence is quite vague and we have no doubt that he has very much exaggerated the means of the defendant It is admitted by the plaintiff that the defendant and his brother, Zahid Ali (P W 2), were not on good terms As regards the defendant's statement contained in the plaint in the suit brought by him for partition he did, no doubt, claim that his share in the entire property, moveable and immovable possessed by the two brothers was Rs 20,000 But it is obvious that at that time he was interested in exaggerating the value of his share in the property which he claimed from his brother Further the learned Subordinate Judge has fixed at Rs 5,000 as a reasonable amount with reference to the means of the husband He has entirely ignored another element which also requires to be considered, namely, the status of the wife S 5, Oudh Laws Act, lays down that the dower to be allowed by the Court shall be reasonable with reference to the means of the husband and the status of the wife In this case it is admitted by the plaintiff that her father was a khansaman, who had died 10 or 12 years before the marriage and that at the time of her marriage her mother used to live by sewing clothes. The defendant himself at the time of marriage was earning only a few annas a day and his father used to earn about Rs 5 or Rs 6 a month by private tuition. However this is immaterial as we have to look to the means of the husband at the present time when the contract is sought to be enforced and not to his means at the time when the contract was entered into Making necessary allowance for the exaggeration made in the evidence referred to regarding the means of the husband and paying due consideration to the status of the wife, we are of opinion that Rupees 2,000 would be a reasonable amount We hold accordingly

It remains now to deal with the cross-objections filed by the defendant The only point urged in support of them is that the divorce took place 30 years ago Reliance has been placed on the statements of Nur Khan, defendant (D W 1), Nazir Khan (D W 2) and Aziz Muhammad Khan (D W 3) The defendant is obviously a most interested witness His story about the dower having been fixed at Rs 111 only and about that dower having also been paid has been found to be utterly false Nazir Khan is his own brother and Aziz Muhammad Khan is his sister's son As pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff's statement about the wife of D W 2 having been present at the time of the divorce is contradicted by the statement of D W 2 to the effect that he had not been married when the divorce took place The learned Subordinate Judge remarked in his judgment that the evidence of these witnesses did not impress him at all favourably We can see no reason to disagree with the estimate formed by the learned Subordinate Judge regarding the veracity of these witnesses We therefore uphold his finding about the defendant having failed to prove that the divorce took place 30 years ago

The result is that we allow the appeal and decree the plaintiff's claim for Rs 2,000 The parties will receive and pay costs according to their success and failure in both the Courts The cross-objections are dismissed with costs

Misc. Appeal No. 24 of 1928, Decided on 17th October 1928, from order of Addl Sub-Judge, Gonda, D/- 24th January 1928

(a) Civil P. C., O 9, R 13 —Appeals against ex-parte decrees dismissed—They become merged into appellate Court's decrees and original Court cannot set them aside.

Where appeals against ex-parte decrees are dismissed, the decrees of the original Court cease to exist from the date of the dismissal and they become merged into the appellate Court's decrees. Thereafter the original Court has no jurisdiction to set aside its ex-parte decrees on the application of the judgment-debtors 37 All. 209, A I. R 1924 Cal 830, and *A. (b) Civil P. C., O 9, R 13—Ex-parte decree against criminal in jail for non-appearance—Application to set aside such decree—No special concession should be made in favour of criminals.

A Court while considering whether it is proper to set aside an ex-parte decree passed by itself should not make special concession in favour of criminals who were in jail which would not be granted to non-criminals who were prevented from personal appearance [P 35 C 2]

S. N Roy—for Appellants.

G H Thomas—for Respondent

Judgment —These appeals fail on a preliminary point Two decrees were passed against the appellants ex-parte by the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on 31st May 1927 The appellants who were convicts in jail at the time took two separate courses They applied on 13th July 1927 to the Subordinate Judge of Gonda to set aside these ex-parte decrees and they appealed on 11th October 1927, to the Chief Court against the decrees on the merits Their appeals were dismissed on the merits by the Chief Court in First Appeals Nos 122 and 123 af 1927 on 14th November 1927 After their appeals had been dismissed the learned Subordinate Judge refused to set aside the ex-parte decrees His order is dated 24th January 1928 The appeals must fail because the learned Subordinate Judge clearly took the right course as he had no jurisdiction to set aside these decrees. After the appeals were dismissed by the Chief Court the decrees of the Subordinate Judge from that date ceased to exist and merged in the Chief Court's decrees. This principle has been laid down very clearly by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Mathura Prasad v. Ram Charan Lal (1). This decision was followed by the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Mahabali Prasad v Balbhaddar Singh (2) and was again followed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Kalim-ud-din Ahmad v Esabak-ud-din (3) There is thus no force in the appeals But apart from that we are constrained to say that on the merits the applications for restoration rightly deserved to be dismissed The appellants interests were represented in the Court below both by their agent and by a pleader After a time the agent absented himself He stated that his absence was due to illness The trial Court has found, and has rightly found, that this story was untrue The pleader continued to appear until the end of the case when he stated that he had no further instructions and that he would do nothing more Then the trial Court passed ex-parte decrees very properly The trial Court would have acted very improperly if it had not passed ex-parte decrees at the time The argument put before us is that because the appellants were in jail special concession should be made in their favour We do not understand why special concessions should be made in favour of criminals which would not be granted to non-criminals who were prevented from personal appearance We dismiss these appeals with costs

First Appeal No, 21 of 1928, Decided on 15th October 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalganj, D/- 22nd December 1927

(a) Will — Construction — Lady devising property by will—Second son to have powers to make realization and collections from estate and to get 12 p. c., of gross rental as haq taluqdari—Other sons in their status of subordination to be entitled to share of profits — In previous proceedings Judges while interpreting her mother's will remarking that under this lady's will other sons were entitled to guzari only—Other sons are entitled to as good a title as second son—In previous case Judges made only passing remarks which cannot throw light on this will

"A lady devised her immovable property to her four sons and the will provided After me my second son M shall become my successor and under his subordination his three brothers shall remain M alone shall have power to make realization and collections from the estate M shall have power to take 12 per cent as haq talukdari on the entire gross rental, my three sons in their status of subordination shall be entitled to get profits at the rate of one-fourth each" In certain previous proceedings, in which the Judges were concerned with the construction of a will by the lady's mother, they had considered that under this document M's brothers had no right to anything more than a guzara or money payment. But no reasons were given in their judgment to support a suggestion that the mother and daughter had wished to dispose of their property in the same manner

Held. that on the correct interpretation of the will M's brothers had as good a title as M in respect of their shares They were certainly not guzardars. The power of management, the dignity of the position, and the right to haq talukdari were reserved for M, but apart from that there was no distinction in title. [P 38 C 1]

Held further that the Judges in the previous case had only made a passing remark as regards this will, and their decision regarding the mother's will cannot throw light on the decision of the daughter's will for it is always dangerous to construe the words of one will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different will : *A. (b) Specific Relief Act, S. 42—One co-tenant managing estate and paying profits to other co-tenants - He asserting with success before revenue authorities that they were not entitled to proprietary rights —The other co-tenants suing for declaration as to their title without joint possession —Their prayer for declaration of title was correct

A tenant-in-common, who was entitled to the management of the estate and who paid other tenants-in-common their profits out of the estate, had asserted with success before the revenue authorities that they had no proprietary rights and that they were only maintenance holders. The other tenants-in-common sued for declaration as to their title ; but not for joint possession

Held : that the prayer for declaration was a correct prayer on their part. [P 38 C 2]

(c) U. P. A person entitled to three-annas share in a village, sued for portion of his share, but the revenue authorities recognized his title for one anna share only He applied saying that he would be satisfied if he obtained a portion of a share of one anna only for the present. But he stated very clearly that he did not withdraw his claim in respect of the remainder and that he was going to get his title settled in respect of the remainder by taking his remedy in a competent Court He then sued for declaration of his title to the remaining two annas It was argued against him that he could not obtain a decree for a declaration but he could only obtain a decree that he was in joint possession. It was also argued that his suit was barred under S. 233, Land Revenue Act

Held : that he could sue for declaration of his title to the two annas share. He need not have sued for joint possession for he did not desire to oust the other side from possession who were holding on his behalf.

Held further : that there is nothing in the Land Revenue Act, which prevents recorded cosharer from applying for a partition of only a portion of his share He asked the revenue authorities to partition the one anna in respect of which his title was admitted and to have the remaining two annas out of the case until he had obtained the decision of a competent Court It could not be said that there was in respect of the two annas any objection under S 111 raising the question of proprietary title The suit was not therefore barred by S. 233, Land Revenue Act 38 All. 302 (F.B.), Foll. [P 39 C 2, P 40 C 1]

M Washim and Khaliq-Uz-Zaman— for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by certain defendants against a decree in which the plaintiffs have obtained a declaration that they are co-proprietors in certain property, co-under-proprietors in certain other property and co-muafidars in certain other property In order to understand the questions for decision it is necessary to state the following facts : A lady called Mukhtar-un-nisa was married to a gentleman called Ghazanfar Ali. She owned certain property in her own right He owned certain property in his own right This lady admittedly made a will on 15th October 1889, devising all the property in her possession. According to the plaintiffs she devised under this will her immovable property to her four sons The disposition was, according to the plaintiffs, that her second son Mohsin Ali, should remain in possession of the whole of the immovable property but that he should enjoy only a portion of the income and that her three remaining sons should own the remainder with no power of management (that being left entirely to Mohsin Ali) but as proprietors with a title similar to the title of Mohsin Ali Put in the shortest manner their case would thus be that the four brothers were tenants-in-common, Mohsin Ali, however, being in complete charge of the property and being considered in a social position analogous to that of a taluqdar He was to receive as a special allowance twelve per cent of the entire gross rental, which was described as haq taluqdari The lady died on 22nd June 1890 and Mohsin Ali, as would be expected from the terms of the will, engaged with the revenue authorities for the payment of the Government revenue of the revenue paying property The names of the other sons were entered in the revenue papers but from the entries in the revenue papers it would almost appear that Mohsin Ali was the proprietor He died in 1920 and he is now represented by his sons, the appellants in this appeal His brother Tahawar Ali predeceased him and it is accepted by both sides that Mohsin Ali, succeeded to Tahwar Ali's rights The plaintiffs-respondents are Ikram Ali, another son of Ghazanfar Ali and Mukhtar-un-nisa, the two sons of another deceased son Ashiq Ali and a son of a deceased son of Ashiq Ali

There has been no contest as to the fact that the rights of the parties in the property are hereditary. But at the recent settlements of the Bara Banki and Lucknow Districts the appellants asserted that the four plaintiffs respondents had only the position of maintenance-holders and that they were not entitled to have their names entered in the proprietary registers The revenue authorities accepting this view, the plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to obtain a declaration that they have proprietary interests Their case was not that they were out of possession They admitted that they have been paid their share of the income regularly. They were not entitled to management. Their case, however, was that they were proprietors or under-proprietors or muafidars, as the case might be with exactly the same title which Mohsin Ali had possessed, although they made no claim to the special privileges allowed to Mohsin Ali under the terms of the will. The learned trial Judge having decided in their favour the appellants have come here contesting his decision on various grounds It is sufficient to say, as far as this appeal is concerned, that a previous plea taken to the effect that the suit was barred by limitation has now been abandoned and that all other pleas have been abandoned except the following three pleas

It is argued in the first place that on a construction of Mukhtar-un-nisa's will the plaintiffs are clearly maintenance-holders and no more It has been argued that in no circumstances can a suit for declaration lie and that in particular no suit for declaration can lie with reference to any part of the village Jasmanda It is further argued that the plaintiffs are debarred under the provisions of S 233 (k), Land Revenue Act, (Local Act 3 of 1901) from asserting title to any portion of the village Jasmanda After having heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellants and the reply of the learned counsel for the respondents we dispose of the pleas as follows · We agree with the construction placed by the learned trial Judge on the terms of the will of Mukhtar-un-nisa to which reference has already been made This will is Ex-A-2. A correct translation of the important passages is as follows

"1 After me, my second son Mohsin Ali shall be my successor in respect of my entire immovable property specified below and under his subordination his three brothers, viz Tahawar Ali, Ashiq Ali and Ikram Ali, shall remain Mohsin Ali alone shall have power to make realization and collections from the estate make payment of revenue, other Government demands, the subscriptions of the British Indian Association and of the Canning college.

"2 My successor Mohsin Ali shall have power to take 12 per cent. as haq taluqdari on the entire gross rental in which are included the Government revenue, other Government dues, the subscription of the Association and of the Canning College. After deducting the above-mentioned items my three sons, viz., Tahwar Ali, Ashiq Ali and Ikram Ali in their status of subordination (mataht) shall be entitled to get profits, by way of samjhauta at the rate of one-fourth each, from my successor Mohsin Ali

"6 In respect of such liabilities as might be payable from me after my death, all my four sons shall be liable in equal shares. The debt of the Allahabad Bank, which is at present due from me, shall be paid according to the instalments provided in the document of the said debt, and until that debt, i. e., principal and interest, be paid up in full ; the profits of the estate mean that sum which shall be surplus after paying the said debt and other liabilities. But if my successor, without any cause, neglect to pay that debt and other liabilities, then each of my other three heirs shall be competent to recover from him full share of profits due to him and pay in his own way his respective share in the debt."

The office translation in paragraph 2 "in their capacity of under-proprietors" is incorrect The correct translation is the translation which we have given "in their status of subordination" We agree with the learned trial Judge that on the correct construction of this document Tahawar Ali, Ashiq Ali and Ikram Ali had as good a title as Mohsin Ali in respect of their shares. They were certainly not guzaradars The power of management, the dignity of the position and the right to haq taluqdari were reserved for Mohsin Ali, but apart from that there was no distinction in title. It has been suggested to us that in previous proceedings a Bench of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court considered that under this document Mohsin Ali's brothers had no right to any thing more than a guzara or money payment. The reference is to an appeal Mohammad Ahsan Ali v Masud Ali (1) The portions in question will be found at p. 342 and p 344 (of 10 O L J) it is admitted by the learned counsel for the appellants not only that this decison can have no effect as res judicata but also that the learned Judges composing that Bench were not concerned with the construction to be placed on the will in question and that it was not necessary for the purpose of their judgment that they should even refer to it. They were concerned in that case with the coustruction of a will made by Mt Mukhtar-un-nisa's mother Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mt Sasiman Choudhurain v. Shib Narain Chawdhury (2) stated in one portion of their judgment that it was always dangerous to construe the words of one will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different will No reasons were adduced in the decision in question to support a suggestion that the mother and daughter would have wished to dispose of their property in the same or a different manner and we agree with the learned trial Judge in respect to the light afforded on the decision of this appeal from the decision in the previous case that the learned Judges who decided the previous case had only made a passing remark as regards Mukhtar-un-nisa's will. We therefore find against the appellants on this point

In respect to the second point we think it necessary to add very little to what the learned trial Judge has said He said that as the plaintiffs were in joint possession and in receipt of their shares of the profits it was only open to them to ask for a declaration as to their title in order to remove the cloud cast upon it It has been argued before us that they should have sued for joint possession But on their own showing they are already in joint possession There case was that the tenant-in-common, who was entitled to the management of the estate and who paid them their profits out of the estate had asserted with success before the revenue authorities that they had neither proprietary, under-proprietary nor maufidar's title and that they were merely maintenance-holders In these circumstances we consider that a prayer for a declaration in respect of the majority of the property at any rate was clearly a correct prayer but it is argued that the case of the village Jasmanda stands on a different footing To understand this last argument, however, it is necessary to go into the question of what occurred in previous proceedings before a revenue Court

We have already stated that Ghazanfar Ali owned certain property and that Mukhtar-un-nisa owned certain other property Ghazanfar Ali owned a four annas share in Jasmanda The four annas share of Ghazanfar Ali descended in equal parts to Tahawar Ali, Mohsin Ali, Ashiq Ali and Ikram Ali. They each received one anna Under the terms of their mother's will they each received two annas Thus they had three annas each When Tahawar Ali died his share of three annas descended to Mohsin Ali Mohsin Ali then had six annas Ashiq Ali had three annas and Ikram Ali had three annas. Mohsin Ali sold six annas to a certain Gaya Prasad The transfer was not questioned at the time and no claim has been made now against Gaya Prasad or his successors-in-interest The remaining six annas stood in the name of Mohsin Ali only This fact was not surprising as the whole of the property of the estate stood in the name of Mohsin Ali Ikram Ali, however, and the three plaintiffs mentioned sued in regular partition proceedings before the revenue Court each to have a three annas share divided The partition Court at first refused them any relief on the ground that their names did not appear on the registers Then followed certain proceedings and eventually the revenue authorities entered their names in respect of two annas leaving the names of the present appellant in regard to the remaining four annas Then the present plaintiffs-respondents came back to the revenue Court and they put in applications which will be found on this record as Exs 79 and 81, in which they said that their names had now been recorded in respect of one anna each and that they would be satisfied for the present if they obtained partition of a share of one anna each but they stated very clearly and very distinctly that they did not withdraw their claims in respect of the remainder and that they were going to get their title settled in respect of the remainder by taking their remedy in a competent Court The suit out of which this appeal arises has been the remedy to which they referred

The case for the appellants here is that the plaintiffs-respondents have put themselves completely out of Court in respect of that four annas share for it is argued that they cannot obtain a decree for a declaration and that at the best they could only obtain a decree that they were in joint possession We do not think that there is any force in this argument for according to their plaint the other side were naturally in possession of the share and were holding it on their behalf They clearly did not desire to oust the other side from possession and they never asked that the other side should be ousted from possession Another point is raised that under S 233 (k), Land Revenue Act, the plaintiffs-respondents are deprived of all remedy. A civil Court is not permitted under S. 233 (k) to take cognizance of a suit for partition or union of mahals except as provided in Ss 111 and 112. This takes us back to S 111 We are not concerned with S. 112. The pertinent portion of the section is as follows:

"If on or before the day so fixed, any objection is made by a recorded cosharer, involving a question of proprietary title which has not already been determined 'by Court of competent jurisdiction' the authorities can either refuse to proceed with the matter until the question has been determined by competent Court, or require the person making the objection to institute a suit within three months for the determination of the question or inquire itself into the merits of the objection."

Even if this section had application it is difficult to see how the appellant could succeed on this argument for even if it be taken that the plaintiffs-respondents had in the revenue proceedings made an objection involving this question it could well be considered that the revenue authorities had declined to grant any application for the partition of the four annas until the question in dispute had been determined by a competent Court The matter could hardly be carried further than that We have it from Exs 80 and 82 that what the revenue Court did, after hearing the statements of the plaintiffs-respondents, was to partition off the two shares of one anna recorded in their names, without any reference to the remainder of their application Although the Court did not in so many words decline to grant the applications for the partition of the four annas until the question in dispute had been determined by a competent Court it received the application of the plaintiffs-respondents that they were going to take the disputes to a competent Court and then proceeded not to grant partition over the four annas But apart from that fact we do not find that there was at the time any objection in respect to four annas involving a question of proprietary title before the revenue Courts, for these objections had clearly been withdrawn.

It was laid down by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Kalka Prasad v Manmohan Lal (3), that there is nothing in the Land Revenue Act which prevents a recorded cosharer from applying for a partition of only a portion of his share We can find nothing in the Act which will prevent a man, who has a six annas share, from obtaining a partition of two annas only and in the future obtaining a partition of two annas more. This is what the plaintiffs-respondents could have done in the matter. They said that they were now recorded in respect of two annas but that their remaining four annas was not accepted by the revenue authorities. They therefore asked the revenue authorities to partition the two annas in respect of which their title was admitted and to leave the remaining four annas out of the case until they had obtained the decision of a competent Court upon the subject It cannot be said that there was in respect of the four annas any objection raising the question of proprietary title. This plea therefore also fails As all the three pleas, which have been argued at the Bar, have been decided by us against the appellants we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Misc. Appeal No 37 of 1928, Decided on 29th October 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, D/- 16th April 1928

Deed—Construction—Mortgagor creating further charges — Mortgagee rights sold — Sale referring to rights sold by terms "Haq Murtahini" — Both mortgage and further charges pass by sale.

S executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of Y and subsequently by two other deeds created further charges on the same property in favour of Y. The mortgagee rights of Y were then purchased by another man as "Haq Murtahini" and no reference was made at the time of sale to the further charges.

Held: that the rights which were purchased included both the mortgage and the further charges. There was no need that any specific mention should have been made of the existence of the further charges they being already included in the term "Haq Murtahini" *A. I. Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki remanding a suit to the lower Court for decision of certain issue. The suit relates to the redemption of certain property which was mortgaged by one Subba on 27th April 1898 to Abdul Rahman. This was an usufructuary mortgage and Subba executed two deeds of further charge in favour of the same Abdul Rahman on 4th August 1899 and 15th October 1900. A creditor of Abdul Rahman subsequently brought a suit and had the mortgagee rights of Abdul Rahman in this property put up for sale. These mortgagee rights were purchased by the present respondent on 21st November 1905 and he obtained possession of the property Subsequently in the year 1916 Patan Din, who was the heir of Subba, sold the equity of redemption to one Karim Bakhsh and this transaction was confirmed by a subsequent transfer made by the widow of Subba Karim Bakhsh then gifted the equity of redemption to Rahmat Ali who is the plaintiff-appellant before us and who is also the heir of Abdul Rahman. Rahmat Ali brought the present suit for redemption as the representative of the original mortgagor, claiming that he should only be required to pay the five hundred rupees due on the mortgage of 27th April 1898, because that alone had been purchased by the respondents in 1905 and the two deeds of further charge not having been purchased devolved upon himself as the heir of Abdul Rahman The only question which we are called upon to decide at present is whether the respondent purchased the mortgagee rights contained in the deed of 27th April 1898 only, or whether he also purchased the rights contained in the deeds of further charge dated 4th August 1899 and 15th October 1900

On this point the two Courts below have taken diametrically opposed views The learned Munsif considered that the word "haq murtahini" being in the singular could refer only to the right conveyed by a single document, namely the original mortgage, and as no reference was made at the time of the sale to the two deeds of further charge it should be concluded that these deeds of further charge were not purchased The learned Subordinate Judge takes the opposite view. He points out that the word "haq" in the singular is generally used for "haquq" the plural, and he points out that both the deeds of further charge, charge the money on the property mortgaged in the original mortgage and cannot be separated from it.

We have read the two deeds of further charge and there can no question that they are both charges on the property and that they provide that the original usufructuary mortgage cannot be redeemed unless they are also discharged We have no doubt that the view taken by the lower appellate Court is correct, because the mortgagee rights which were purchased by the respondent in 1905 must be held to include both the mortgage and the further charges which cannot be dissociated from one another. There was no need that any specific mention should be made of the existence of the further charges when they are already included in the term "haq murtahini" We have been referred to a decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court, Har Prasad v Ram Chandra (1), where purchaser from the mortgagors managed to oust the mortgagee on payment of the original mortgage money and a suit was brought by the mortgagee to recover possession relying upon certain subsequent charges on the same property In this case it was held that the effect of the deed of subsequent charge was to create a further usufructuary mortgage on the share of the executant which was already under the mortgage and the mortgagee was held to be entitled to retain possesion of his share in the property until the amounts secured by the two documents were paid to him This was a case in which emphasis is laid on the fact that such deeds of further charge cannot be dissociated from the original usufructuary mortgage where they themselves are made a charge on the same property

We find that the "haq murtahini" purchased in this case includes the deeds of further charges and we, therefore, agree with the lower appellate Court in remanding the suit for decision of certain other issues, and we dismiss this appeal with costs

Second Appeal No. 375 of 1927, Decided on 26th July 1928, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Bahraich, D/- 11th August 1927.

 (a) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 22—Account suit—First appeals filed by both parties—That of one party dismissed—Second appeal not filed by that party from dismissal of his first appeal—His claim cannot be taken by way of cross-objections to second appeal filed by opposite party

In a suit for accounts, after hearing objections to the Commissioner's report a certain sum was found to be due to the plaintiff and a decree was accordingly passed. Both parties appealed from it and on plaintiff's appeal an additional sum was decreed, but defendant's appeal was dismissed. Plaintiff filed a second appeal, but defendant filed only cross-objections.

Held that the cross-objections should be dismissed as the decree against defendant had become final by the defendant's failure to appeal from the dismissal of his first appeal and the defendant is not entitled to claim by way of cross-objection what he had claimed in his first appeal. [P 42 C 1]

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for accounts in relation to a certain partnership The plaintiff-appellant, Sant Ram, brought a suit for rendition of accounts for the years 1329 Fasli to 1332 Fasli relating to the partnership in respect of a certain theka of villages Alipur, Kalbi Parsia Alam, Kharthua, Jaisora Patti and Vaini as detailed in the plaint. The plaintiff alleged that he and the defendant were joint thekadars of these villages during the aforesaid years, and that he was, therefore, entitled to take accounts

The defendant, while admitting the theka denied his liability to account. A preliminary decree was, however, passed by the Munsif directing the accounts to be taken A local pleader was appointed a commissioner and was directed to go into the accounts and to report what sum, if any, was due to the plaintiff on adjustment of accounts. After considering the report of the commissioner and the objections of the parties filed against the said report, the Munsif held by his decision dated the 11th February 1927, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for Rs 267-15-6

The matter was taken by the parties in appeal before the Subordinate Judge, and after going through the accounts he found that the plaintiff was further entitled to a sum of Rs 249 over and above what had been decreed to him by the trial Court. He, therefore, modified the decree in plaintiff's favour to that extent He, however, dismissed the defendant's appeal The plaintiff has now further appealed to this Court and has urged that he is entitled to more than what has been decreed to him by the lower appellate Court The defendant has also filed cross-objections.

We may in the very beginning state that the defendant-respondent has not chosen to appeal against the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge in his appeal to the said Court He is not, therefore, any more entitled to claim what he claimed in that appeal by way of cross-objections in this appeal His appeal having been dismissed, the decree so far as that appeal is concerned, has now become final, and it is no more open to the respondent to claim anything which he claimed in his appeal by way of cross-objections The cross-objections are, therefore, dismissed with costs

Regarding the plaintiff's appeal we may state that three points were urged by the learned counsel for the appellant in respect of that appeal. They are detailed below. Firstly, objection was taken to the two items, one of Rs. 1,070-11-9, and the other of Rs. 218-3 which are to be found in list B Figure (i) under the heading of " Account of collections made by the parties jointly " The first item is on account of collections for Parsia Alam for 1330 Fasli made in that year and the second item is on account of collections for the same village for 1329 Fasli made in 1330 Fasli The objection was to the effect that it was admitted in the pleadings that defendant himself had made collections in that village during the year 1330 Fasli and reference was made to paras. 10 and 11 of the written statement.

Secondly, objection was taken to the item of Rs. 658-12-3 which is to be found in the same list, under Figure (ii) as item No 20. The item relates to the collections in respect of the same village Parsia Alam for 1332 Fasli made in that year. The objection was to the effect that the evidence relied upon by the Courts below in proof of the said item having been collected by the plaintiff, was not legally admissible in evidence ; and that if that evidence were to be rejected there was no other evidence in proof of the said collection having been made by the plaintiff Thirdly, the plaintiff-appellant was not entitled to interest on the sum decreed to him by the Court below in his favour. We now proceed to deal with each of these objections in seriatim :

First objection (relating to Rs 1,070-11-9 and Rs. 218-3-0. The commissioner reported that the plaintiff had collected these sums in 1330 Falsi and he, therefore, made him liable to account for them The trial Court as well as the lower appellate Court took the same view The learned advocate for the appellant raised two objections regarding these items One was to the effect that the evidence on record in proof of these items having been collected by the plaintiff was not reliable ; and the Courts below had erred in accepting it : the other was to the effect that the Courts below had erred in holding the plaintiff liable for these items in face of the admission of the defendant himself contained in the pleadings. As pointed out above, paras. 10 and 11 of the written statement filed by the defendant on the 12th September 1925, were referred to in this connexion.

As to the first objection, we are of opinion that it is not open to us in second appeal to appraise the value of the evidence which was produced by the defendant to show that the said amount had been collected by the plaintiff. That was a matter for the lower appellate Court to decide and if the trial Court accepted that evidence ; and the lower appellate Court agreed with that Court in its view of the evidence, the matter cannot now be opened in second appeal. We, therefore, reject the first contention raised by the learned advocate for the appellant in respect of these two items.

As to the second objection, we may point out that it has also, in our opinion, no force. The allegations contained in paras. 10 and 11 of the written statement formed the subject of an inquiry in the trial Court before the preliminary decree was passed The finding of that Court was to the effect that the defendant had not succeeded in establishing his plea. It was held that the arrangement alleged by the defendant in those paragraphs, was not proved, nor had it been proved to have been acted upon

On this finding a preliminary decree for accounts was passed. We are, therefore, of opinion that it is no more open to the plaintiff-appellant to go behind the finding of the trial Court which passed the preliminary decree which has now become final, and the plaintiff cannot be allowed to urge that the defendant should now be held to be bound by that plea and that the Courts below were not justified in making an inquiry regarding the collections for Parsia Alam in view of the allegations contained in those paragraphs of the written statement. It is a setlted rule of law that if a particular fact is alleged in his pleadings by a party to a litigation and an inquiry is made regarding its truth or otherwise, and as a result of that inquiry it is found to be untrue and decision is given on the basis of such finding in favour of the opposite party, such party is no more in a position to ignore that finding and to ask the Court to hold the party originally taking such a plea to be bound by it. This would appear from a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Motabhoy Mulla Essabhoy v. Mulji Haridas (1) where it was remarked by their Lordships that although it was permissible to accept a part and to reject a part of the witness's testimony, an admission in pleading could not be so dissected. The admission having been made subject to a condition, it must either be accepted subject to it or not accepted at all. The defendant-respondent alleged in those paragraphs that there had been an arrangement arrived at between the plaintiff and himself that they should remain in possession of certain villages and make collections in them separately and consequently no accounting should take place in respect of them. Parsia Alam was alleged to be a village subject to such an arrangement, the collections therein having been made by the defendant. We have already indicated above that this was found not to be true, aud the defendant was held liable to account We are, therefore, of opinion that it is no more open to the plaintiff-appellant to take advantage of that admission and to contend on the basis thereof that the Courts below should not have held that the plaintiff-appellant made collections in that village We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff has been rightly held to have collected these two items in the year 1330 Fasli in respect of village Parsia Alam. (The judgment then dealt with the second objection relating to Rs. 658-12-3 and holding that the lists produced by Patwari were not admissible as secondary evidence as no condition for admitting secondary evidence as in Evidence Act S 65 existed and dealing with the third objection as to interest and deciding it in plaintiff's favour modified the decree accordingly )

Cases of undue influence, allowing them a fair latitude of construction, must come either under the head of fraud or under the head of coercion.

Two persons possessed a fiduciary relation with the plaintiff, the one by reason of his long and useful service and the other being the successor in title of the plaintiff. Both of them were trusted by the plaintiff and these persons used their fiduciary relation to induce the plaintiff to enter into an agreement of divesting the estate in favour of one and granting an enhanced monthly allowance to the other by putting him in fear of criminal prosecution by a third person and by representing to him that he and his estate was in great danger at the hands of a band of people of a rival sect, all which was untrue to the knowledge of those two persons.

Held that it could be said that there was such undue influence and fraud practised upon the plaintiff within the meaning of S. 16 which would vitiate the agreement entered into. Smith v. Kay, (1861) 7 H. L. C. 750, 36 All. 81 (P. C.), and A. I. R. 1924 P. C 60; Foll.

Judgment—This is the defendant's appeal from the decree of Pullan, J., dated 28th November 1927

The property in suit is an estate within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869 and is situate in several districts of the Province of Oudh Almost the whole, if not the whole of this estate was acquired under grants from the former Kings of Oudh by one Mahant Gur Narain Das The Mahant during the long course of his possession acquired considerable other immovable property. At the annexation of the Province of Oudh by the British in the year 1856 Mahant Gur Narain Das was found to be in possession of this large estate. Accordingly the First Summary Settlement in respect of this estate was made with Mahant Gur Narain Das Then followed the Mutiny of 1857 and on the conquest of the Province of Oudh by the British troops the famous proclamation of Lord Canning dated 15th March 1858, was promulgated with the result that with the exception of six estates specified in the proclamation, the proprietary right in the soil of the Province of Oudh was confiscated to the British Government. Accordingly within the ban of confiscation fell the estate held by Mahant Gur Narain Das on the date of the proclamation. Subsequently when the conferment of title came to be made in respect of the confiscated estates by the British authorities, the Second Summary Settlement of the estate held by Mahant Gur Narain Das was made with him. On 18th January 1860, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh issued his well-known Circular No. 7/1217 calling upon every taluqdar of Oudh to file a written declaration expressing his desire that his estate should not be sub-divided at his death or in any future generation In response to this circular Mahant Gur Narain Das, as many other talukdars, filed the declaration of 14th May 1860 (Ex 32) and subsequently another dated 25th May 1860 (Ex. A-524) By the last-mentioned declaration Mahant Gur Narain Das nominated his disciple Har Charan Das as his successor to the estate Declarations such as Mahant Gur Narain Das made on 25th May 1860, have been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee to operate as wills [Hur Prasad v Sheo Dayal (1)] and it is agreed in the present case that it is a valid testamentary disposition of the estate by Mahant Gur Narain Das in favour of Mahant Har Charan Das. It is also agreed that soon after a primogeniture sanad was granted by the British Government to Mahant Gur Narain Das in respect of the whole estate which is collectively known by the name of Maswasi situate in the district of Unao. Other portions of the estate are situate in .the districts of Lucknow, Gonda, Bahraich, Kheri, Hardoi and Sitapur

Mahant Gur Narain Das died on 2nd December 1862 When the Oudh Estate Act came to be passed in year 1869 and lists of taluqdars in accordance with the provisions of S. 8 of that Act were prepared the name of Mahant Gur Narain Das was entered in lists 1 and 2 of the lists prescribed by that section. As observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mohammad Abdulsamad v. Kurban Husain (2) :

> "Entries on the names of deceased persons in the lists mentioned in S. 8 do not appear to have been contemplated by the Act, but such entries have, no doubt been made and they are practically harmless if the names were already in former lists made under the orders in Council, or if the entries do not alter the previously acquired rights of anyone."

It is not suggested that the entry of Mahant Gur Narain Das's name has in any manner affected the previously acquired rights of anyone. Mahant Gur Narain Das was, therefore, taluqdar within the meaning of the Oudh Estates Act 1869 and the immovable property held by him and now in suit is an estate within the meaning of the same Act This conclusion was agreed to by both sides during the course of the arguments before us In the trial Court, however, the plaintiff set up the case that the estate in suit was burdened with a religious trust and the succession to it was regulated by the custom of the foundation to which it was attached This foundation according to him is the Nanakshahi Sanget situated in the City of Lucknow. According to the custom, the plaintiff said the title to succession is with him and according to the same custom it is not with the defendant-appellant. The trial Court rejected this case of the plaintiff and found that the estate in suit was held by Mahant Gur Narain Das in his own right without any obligations of a religious trust and that incidents of an estate as defined in the Act 1 of 1869 are applicable to it. This finding of the learned Judge was not questioned before us by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent and is therefore, agreed to by both sides.

On the death of Mahant Gur Narain Das, Mahant Har Charan Das succeeded to the estate in suit under the devise of 25th May 1860, already mentioned Mahant Har Charan Das made a will (Ex 3) on the 1st December 1898, and a codicil (Ex. 4) on 13th June 1907. By these testamentary dispositions Mahant Har Charan Das appointed Mahant Sant Rain Das as his successor. Mahant Sant Rain Das was the illegitimate son and disciple of Mahant Har Charan Das. Mahant Har Charan Das died on 17th April 1910, and was accordingly succeeded by Mahant Sant Rain Das who died intestate on 8th January 1922 On his death controversy as to the title to succession arose and three claimants appeared on the scene: 1 The plaintiff. 2, The defendant, and 3 Mt Sheoraj Kuar, mother of Sant Rain Das

The plaintiff claimed title on the ground that he was the disciple (chela) of Mahant Har Charan Das, the defendant on the ground that he was the disciple of the deceased Mahant Sant Rain Das, and Mt. Sheoraj Kuar on the ground of her natural relationship with Mahant Sant Rain Das The defendant-appellant is also the son of the illegitimate daughter of Mahant Har Charan Das and sister of Sant Rain Das.

On the intervention of several respectable citizens of Lucknow notably Rai Bahadur Pandit Sital Prasad Bajpai who was then Additional District Judge of Lucknow, the dispute as to the succession to the estate of Maswasi was amicably settled by an agreement (Ex 135) dated 20th January 1922. At the time of this agreement the defendant was only sixteen years of age and consequently his father Pandit Jadunandan Prasad acted as his guardian in the matter of the settlement. The substantial terms of the settlement were that the plaintiff, Mahant Har Narain Das, was to enter into the possession of the estate and other moveable and immovable property "for his lifetime without power of transfer in any form" The remainderman's estate in full was conferred on the defendant Satgur Prasad who was given the name of Baba Hari Saran Das. During the subsistence of the life-estate the liability for the expenses of the education and maintenance of the defendant Hari Saran Das as also for an allowance was imposed on Mahant Har Narain Das as well as on the estate. The extent of this liability was specified in para. 6 of the deed of 20th January 1922

In pursuance of the terms of the agreement the plaintiff entered into the possession of the estate. His name was entered in the revenue registers of the villages comprising the estate. In short he was installed with the necessary ceremony as the lawful successor of Mahant Sant Rain Das and the defendant at the instance of the plaintiff was admitted into the Colvin Taluqdar High School at Lucknow on 2nd February 1922. This school was founded for the purpose of educating the scions of the families of the taluqdars of Oudh. On the occasion of the admission of the defendant into the school the plaintiff wrote a letter (Ex. D W. 1) to the Principal of the School and described the defendant Hari Saran Das in this letter as his "future successor."

It would seem from what has been stated so far that peace had come to reign in the affairs of the estate of Maswasi. But it was not to be so On 31st August 1923, the defendant was removed from the Colvin School. In the letter which the plaintiff sent to the Principal of the School on this occasion he stated that he wanted "to engage him (defendant) in estate work" (Ex. 20 D. W 1). Soon after the defendant was put in charge of a large portion of the estate situate in the District of Bahraich and worked there for a period of about ten or eleven months He returned to Lucknow about September or October 1924, and lived with the plaintiff.

At the time when succession opened on the death of Sant Rain Das one of the servants of the estate was one Nand Kumar. He is now arrayed amongst the defendants in the present suit. The plaintiff at that time was at Hoshangabad in the Central Provinces. Nand Kumar at once took up the plaintiff's cause and summoned him to Lucknow by wire. Another servant of the estate at the same time was one Tirbeni Prasad. He was the treasurer.

On the 23rd November 1924, the plaintiff, the defendant and Nand Kumar left Lucknow, according to the plaintiff by motor car about sunset for Bara Banki where the party took a railway train for Gonda leaving the station of Bara Banki at about 10 o'clock in the following morning According to the defendant the party left Lucknow by railway train for Gonda in the day time and reached Gonda in the afternoon At Gonda there is an estate house then in charge of one Pyarelal. On 25th November a document (Ex. 136) purporting to be an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant was executed at Gonda. It was registered on the same date and at the same place.

By this document the plaintiff surrendered his life-estate in favour of the defendant Hari Saran Das and in consequence thereof the remainderman's estate fell into the immediate possession of the defendant. The usual applications for mutation of names were made on 26th November at Gonda in respect of villages situate in that district

One of the conditions of the document of 25th November 1924, was that the defendant was to pay to the plaintiff

" Rs. 1,000 per month by way of pocket expenses every month at any place where the executant 1 (the plaintiff) might demand and this pocket expense shall continue for the lifetime of executant 1 plaintiff. If the payment be delayed and neglected then executant 1 (the plaintiff) shall be competent to take possession over all the ilaqas and then all rights of executant 2 (the defendant) which had accrued according to this deed as well as according to the agreement dated 20th January 1922, shall cease to exist. Executant 1 shall further be competent instead of taking possession to realize from the executant 2 the arrears of the pocket expense by auction sale of movable and immovable property "

The defendant also undertook the liability of paying Rs. 100 a month from the estate to Nand Kumar, and after the death of the latter to his widow or male issue an allowance of Rs 25 a month for her or their lifetime. The allowance was to constitute a charge on the entire estate and in case of neglect in payment the agreement shall be deemed to have been cancelled. In pursuance of the agreement the defendant admittedly entered into the possession of the entire estate of Maswasi, was regarded and accepted as the taluqdar of the same and continued to pay the appointed allowance to the plaintiff upto the end of October 1926 The allowance due for the months of November and December 1926, and January 1927, had remained in arrears according to the plaintiff when the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted on 21st February 1927.

The substance of the plaintiff's claim is that the document of 25th November 1924, is liable to be set aside on two distinct but alternative grounds: (1) That the plaintiff executed it under undue influence and fraud practised by the defendant-appellant and Nand Kumar defendant 3 ; and (2) that the defendant has failed to fulfil his obligation as to the payment of the monthly allowance to the plaintiff.

On the basis of the second ground of claim it was further urged by the plaintiff that the defendant had also forfeited his remainderman's estate and other benefits which he had obtained under the dettlement of 20th January 1922 The secree which the plaintiff has obtained from the trial Court and which is now under appeal gives the following reliefs tothe plaintiff: —

(a) the deed of 25th November 1924, be and it is hereby set aside as void ;

(b) it be and is hereby declared that defendant 1 is not entitled to any benefit under the agreement of 20th January 1922;

(c) the plaintiff be and he is hereby granted possession in respect of the properties mentioned in schedules A, B and C attached herewith.

The decree also awarded mesne profits to the plaintiff, the amount of which was left to be determined subsequently.

Before proceeding further it is necessary to clear one important matter. The plaintiff founded his title to immediate possession exclusively on the settlement of 20th January 1922 This was clearly stated by the learned counsel for the plaintiff on the day of the opening of the trial of this case before Pullan J. This statement will be found at p. 32 of Part 1 of the record. The statement is as follows ;

" Mr. Niamutullah (counsel for the plaintiff) states that his client claims the property as the successor of Mahant Sant Rain Das but not independently of the agreement of 20th January 1922."

The question of the plaintiff's title having thus been confined to rest on the settlement of 20th January 1922, the counsel for the defendant-appellant stated in reply that " in view of the statement just made by Mr. Niamutullah, for the plaintiff he does not now consider it necessary to set up the title of defendant 1 prior to the agreement of 20th January 1922."

In this state of pleadings it is clear that all questions relating to the titles of the plaintiff and the defendant to the property in suit under a claim of succession to the estate of Mahant Sant Rain Das outside the terms of the settlement of 20th January 1922, are beyond the scope of the present suit. It follows, and this was agreed to by the learned counsel on both sides before us, that in the event of the later agreement of 25th

November 1924, being set aside as vitiated by undue influence and fraud, the parties, in respect of their rights are relegated to the position which they occupy under the earlier agreement of 20th January 1922, and in the same event it is further agreed that the decree of the trial Court must be modified by deleting the relief in respect of the deed of 20th January 1922. It will appear from what has just now been stated that the primary question for decision in the appeal is the one which is covered by issue 8 (b) (see p. 31, Part 1 of the printed record) of the issues framed in the trial Court, and if we uphold the finding of that Court on this issue no other question need be decided We may, however, mention that on behalf of the appellant the findings of the trial Court on issues 12 and 11 and on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent on issue 10 were also challenged. After hearing prolonged arguments on both sides and after having taken time for considering our judgment we have come to the conclusion that the finding of the trial Court on issue 8 (b) must be affirmed In consequence of this conclusion we would refrain from deciding any other issue in the appeal

The case of fraud and undue influence was stated by the plaintiff in paras 15, 16, 17 and 18 of the plaint. Those paragraphs are as follows :

15. That in 1922 the plaintiff was elected president of " All India Udasi Sadhu Maha Mandal" a body formed to counter-act by constitutional means the Akali movement in the Punjab the object of which was to enable the Akalis to take forcible possession of the property held by Mahants of Udasi sect.

16. That the plaintiff who mostly spent his time in devotion entirely depended on defendant 1 who had a hand in the management of the estate on behalf of the plaintiff and on defendant 3 the naib who controlled the entire staff, and implicitly trusted the aforesaid persons.

17. That in November 1924, the aforesaid persons represented to the plaintiff that he and his estate were in a great danger at the hands of Akalis he being the mahant, and prevailed upon him to execute a deed dated 25th November 1924, purporting to release the entire estate in favour of defendant 1 for the purposes of management and to enable the plaintiff to go abroad on pilgrimage. They assured the plaintiff that management of the estate would continue through the same agency as before and that the plaintiff's rights would not be affected by the deed which was

18. The acting on the representation and importunity of defendants 1 and 3 aided by other servants of the estate the plaintiff executed the deed of release aforementioned agreeing to take Rs. 1,000 per month which was considered enough for the personal requirements of the plaintiff.

A perusal of the foregoing paragraphs will at once disclose the fact that they also involve a case that the document of 25th November 1924, was executed by the plaintiff under a misapprehension caused by the defendants as to its scope and as to its intended effect. This case of the plaintiff broke down in the trial Court and was not reiterated before us It was agreed that the true and intended effect of the document was the surrender of the life-estate by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant-appellant and the acceleration of the remainderman's estate to the latter and that the plaintiff was under no misapprehension as regards that fact on the date of the document. The issue, therefore, in dispute is the simple issue of fraud and undue influence. The finding of the trial Court on this issue in favour of the plaintiff covers larger ground than the ground specifically stated in the plaint To bring this into relief it is now necessary to state some facts which were not disputed before us though they were disputed to some extent in the trial Court

In the keeping of the plaintiff for many years past as his mistrees is a woman called Sundar Dei. Out of this connexion between the two a daughter was born. She is still alive and her name is Krishna Kuar Mt. Sundar Dei and Mt. Krishna Kuar have been treated all along for all purposes as the wedded wife and lawful daughter respectively of the plaintiff Indeed they have so been described in documents In or about the year 1916 Krishna Kuar was married to one Dalip Singh, a resident of a village in the Indian State of Nabha in the Province of the Punjab. It appears that soon after, Krishna Kuar was remarried at Lucknow to one Atma Singh, a resident of Amritsar in the same Province. After his marriage with Krishna Kuar Atma Singh came to live at Lucknow and when the plaintiff succeeded to the estate of Maswasi, Atma Singh took up residence with him The plaintiff's case is that a link in the chain of events the fact that the two defendants 1 and 2 entered into a conspiracy with Dalip Singh the former husband of Krishna Kuar and falsely represented to the plaintiff that Dalip Singh intended to take proceedings for the arrest and prosecution of the plaintiff on a charge of abetment of bigamy of the girl Krishna Kuar.

At the close of trial of the case and at the time when final arguments of counsel were heard it was contended on behalf of the defendant that the particular just now mentioned was not stated by the plaintiff in his plaint and, therefore, the Court should not address itself to the consideration of it The learned Judge of the trial Court overruled the contention ; but the arguments on behalf of the appellant before us were opened by the learned advocate Mr Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava with the reiteration of the same contention. In agreement with the trial Court we are unable to give any effect to it. There can be no question that much larger case which would also cover the ground objected to was stated in the plaint and we gather from the judgment under appeal that at the commencement of the trial and before any evidence was recorded the learned counsel for the plaintiff specifically stated that he intended to adduce evidence in proof of the facts mentioned above. Documentary evidence in relation thereto was then at once tendered and brought on the record Plaintiff then went into the witness-box and in his evidence stated those facts. All this happened in the presence of the defendant's counsel and without any objection on his behalf. Not only that but evidence in rebuttal thereof was produced by the defendant. When we come to discuss this aspect of the case in relation to the evidence in proof of it, it will appear that it is neither a new case nor so much a matter of pleading as of evidence. After the plaintiff's counsel had openly declared, to the knowledge of the defendant, his intention to produce evidence in proof of this case, and after such evidence has been produced, and after the defendant has also produced evidence in rebuttal and finally the trial Court has considered and decided it, it is futile to argue that we should shut our eyes to that case. In no manner has the defendant been taken by surprise or prejudiced. As observed by Lord Halsbury in Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (3) :

> " Whatever system of pleading may exist, the sole object of it is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues."

This object has been amply fulfilled in the present case.

Facts bearing on the question of undue influence and those bearing on the question of fraud cannot be placed in the present case in separate compartments and dealt with accordingly. They act and react on both questions, will be found interwoven in the two. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (3) mentioned above, Lord Halsbury said:

> " The question of what is undue influence is sometimes a difficult one."

Lord Cranworth when giving judgment in the House of Lords in the case of Boyse v. Rossborough (4) gives this definition :

> " It is sufficient to say, that allowing a fair latitude of construction, they must arrange themselves under one or other of these heads coercion or fraud. "

To enable a complete appreciation of the case and the evidence relating to fraud and undue influence it is necessary to state a few historical events. Mahant Gur Narain Das, and his successors including the plaintiff belong to the Nanakshahi Udasi sect of the religion, Sikhism. The sect derives its name from the founder of the Sikh religion, Nanak who lived, preached and promulgated it in the middle of the 16th century mainly in the Province of the Punjab. It is not necessary to advert to the philosophic or religious aspect of the religion founded by Nanak. Nanak died in 1539 and his spiritual successor was his disciple Angad. Guru Angad's succession led to a schism amongst the followers of the new religion. While Angad became the spiritual successor, Nanak's son Sri Chand founded the sect of Udasis, a community mostly 'indifferent to the concerns of this world. The word " Udasi " etymologically means passive and recluse and thus the sect designated by that appellation remained altogether a separate sect from the active and domestic Sikhs, the separation being emphasized by the teachings of Amar Das the immediate successor of Angad. The active section of the Sikhs acquired and developed a wholly militant spirit under the guidance and preachings of the tenth and the last Guru Gobind Singh. His military exploits are well-known to history. He died in 1708.

About fifty years after the death of Guru Gobind Singh, though the seeds were sown in his lifetime, there arose :

" a body of men who threw off all subjection to earthly Governors, and who peculiarly represented the religious element of Sikhism. These were the " Akalis ", the immortals, or rather the soldiers of God, who, with their blue dress and bracelets of steel, claimed for themselves a direct institution by Gobind Singh. The Guru had called upon men to sacrifice everything for their faith, to leave homes and to follow the profession of arms ; but he and all his predecessors had likewise denounced the inert asceticism of the Hindu sects, and thus the fanatical feeling of a Sikh took a destructive turn. The Akalis formed themselves in their struggle to reconcile warlike activity with the relinquishment of the world. The meek and humble were satisfied with the assiduous performance of menial offices in temples, but the fierce enthusiasm of others prompted them to act from time to time as the armed guardians of Amritsar, or suddenly to go where blind impulse might lead them, and to win their daily bread, even single-handed, at the point of the sword. They also took upon themselves something of the authority of censors, and, although no leader appears to have fallen by their hands for defection to the Khalsa, they inspired awe as well as respect, and would sometime plunder those who had offended them or had injured the common wealth. The passions of the Akalis had full play until Ranjit Singh became supreme, and it cost that able and resolute chief much time and trouble, at once to suppress them ; and to preserve his own reputation with the people. (Cunningham's History of the Sikhs edited by Garrett, pp. 110 and 111) ".

Peace and prosperity remained with the Udasis, warlike activity and religious fervour with the Akalis. Most of the notable Gurdwaras or shrines situate in the Punjab were held, managed and controlled by the Udasi section.

We can now conveniently come to the immediate past and describe it in the words of Mr. L F Rushbrook Williams, Director, Central Bureau of Information, Government of India, in his book " India in 1921-22 " being a report prepared for presentation to Parliament in accordance with the requirements of S 26, Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo V, Chap. 61). At p. 60 of this book occurs the following :

".The Punjab also, was in a highly inflammatory condition. To the legacy of bitterness following the occurrences of 1919, there was now added a serious dispute between two sections of the Sikh community which, from the tragic interest it aroused merits a word of elucidation. The " new " reforming party had been for some time dissatisfied with the management of the Gurdwaras, or shrines, which for long years, under arrangements sanctioned by the " old " conservative party, had been controlled by resident abbots. Many of these Mahants, although enjoying wide discretion in the management of considerable revenues, were less Sikhs than Hindus—a fact not unconnected with an inextricable admixture, in the endowment of many of the shrines, of Hindu and Sikh beneficence. The " new " Sikhs alleged malversation and abuses of every kind ; the " old " Sikhs regarded the malcontents as inspired only by a desire for plunder. Into this quarrel primarily domestic to the Sikh community, the emissaries of non-co-operation now penetrated with the result that the " new Sikhs " and particularly the Akali jathas—bands of volunteers forming the most zealous section of the reformers—became strongly anti-Government and even revolutionary in their outlook. Refusing to be appeased by the efforts of Government to enquire into, and remedy, cases of alleged mismangement, the Akalis began to " occupy " shrines, and eject the lawful incumbents. Somewhat naturally, these tactics were combated by the other party. Bloody quarrels such as will necessarily occur between opposing factions of a simple-minded and warlike people, shortly broke out. In January, there was serious affray at Tarn Taran. In February India shuddered to hear of a terrible massacre, by the Hindu abbot of Nankana Sahib, of the band of " new Sikhs " designing to eject him from his great and wealthy shrine. "

Towards the end of 1920 a body known as the " Shiromoni Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, " or Committee for the management of sacred shrines was set up. Sikhs of various schools of thought joined the movement and the Committee shortly acquired great influence. Owing, however, to the methods which it began to employ the Committee soon became representative of extreme opinion It organized Akalis, a militant puritan sect of the Sikhs, into a regular miltia for the execution of its behests. Under the pressure of the activities of this Committee a Bill for the better management and control of the Sikh shrines was introduced in the Legislative Council of of the Punjab sometime in the year 1923. This step aroused the Udasi section of the Sikh community to fresher activities in opposition to the claim of the Akalis in the matter of the possession, and management of the shrines.

On behalf of the Udasis an institution called the "All India Udasi Maha Mandal" was founded at Hardwar in the Province of Agra and the present plaintiff became the President of it. The plaintiff took an active part in the work of the institution, gave pecuniary help to the propaganda set on foot by certain newspapers in the Province of the Punjab, allowed articles to appear in such papers above his name and took part in deputation to Lord Reading and the Governor of the Punjab. "Updeshak" was one of the papers subsidized by the plaintiff and in the issue of 26th May 1924, of that paper appeared an article under the caption "Akalis have also set their hands and feet in Lucknow." This article stated inter alia that a band of Akalis numbering about forty with lathis and kirpans had reached the Sangat of Harakh Ram Udasi. The Sangat referred to is the "Udasi Mandal" in Aliganj in the city of Lucknow. It is agreed that the statement in the paper was not true as a fact. But whether it was a fact or fiction is immaterial. What is material is that such a statement was made in a newspaper and brought home to the plaintiff.

The circumstances which we have described in the immediately preceding portion of this judgment are antecedent to and closely connected with the evidence as to the facts which according to the plaintiff's case made him susceptible to undue influence and fraud. The other set of circumstances producing the same result are as follows :

We have already stated that Nand Kumar defendant 3, was largely instrumental in the success of the plaintiff's cause when the inheritance opened on the death of Sant Rain Das. In the time of the latter Nand Kumar was drawing a salary of Rs. 8 or 10 a month As a reward for his services the plaintiff made him assistant manager of the estate on a salary of Rs. 40 a month. On the evidence it is perfectly clear that Nand Kumar occupied an influential and responsible position in the affairs of the estate and actively possessed confidence of the plaintiff. The provisions made for him in the document of 25th November 1924, strongly suggest the inference that he had rendered great service both to the plaintiff and to the defendant, and they were both prepared to compensate him generously. We agree with the learned trial Judge that :

"there can be no question that in the latter part of 1924 the plaintiff relied for the management of the estate almost entirely on Nand Kumar."

The defendant-appellant as early as the year 1923 conceived the idea of filing a suit against the plaintiff in order to obtain immediate possession of the estate. The evidence is quite clear and indeed it was admitted that while the desire of obtaining possession of the estate of Maswasi was being nursed by the defendant, the plaintiff stood in loco parentis to him. After the defendant was removed from the Colvin School early in 1924, he was put by the plaintiff in charge of the Bahraich circle of the estate yielding an income of about Rs. 62,000 a year and it is a reasonable inference from the evidence on the record that the defendant's appointment to the Bahraich circle was the fruit of the trust which plaintiff had come to repose in him At any rate all appearances pointed in that direction. The most cogent evidence supporting the conclusion is furnished by the recitals contained in the deed of 25th November 1924; and it is also clear from the same recitals that it was this trust which largely influenced the plaintiff's act of surrendering his life-estate in favour of the defendant-appellant.

The third set of circumstances which have a material bearing on the question under consideration arises out of the facts connected with the marriage of the plaintiff's illegitimate daughter Krishna Kuar first with Dalip Singh and afterwards with Atma Singh.

Having set forth all the material antecedent circumstances bearing on the precise case of fraud and undue influence alleged by the plaintiff, we are now in a position to enter immediately into the evidence produced in proof of that case. In doing so we must give full weight to the opinion of the learned trial Judge as regards the general appreciation and creditability of that evidence. The plaintiff while in the witness-box stated his case in the following words:

"I executed the deed of 1924 out of fear, and fraud also was practiced on me. I was afraid of the Akalis . . . . . In September or October Satgur Prasad (defendant 1) and Nand Kumar (defendant 3) told me that the Akalis were in Lucknow and that they were going about in gangs . . . . . In October the Akalis took possession of a house near mine belonging to a sadhu. I did not see this myself and Nand Kumar and Satgur Prasad told me about it . . . . . In the third week of November they told me that they had heard that the Akalis were going to make a raid on me. This was two or three days before the document was executed. I quite believed them and thought it would happen. They were both with me when I went out for my drive at 3-30 and when we got to Aminabad I saw the Akalis wearing black pagris. I think there were fifty or sixty of them. Nand Kumar said: There is Dalip Singh. He is one of them; I recognized Dalip Singh. He was wearing black pagri. Satgur Prasad said " Let us go and leave Nand Kumar here." I agreed and we went back telling Nand Kumar to bring us news. He came after an hour or an hour and a half. Satgur Prasad came with him. They said they had got definite information that Dalip Singh was also an Akali and had come with a warrant from Nabha for my arrest and would probably get it issued by the Magistrate here tomorrow. I objected that it was a Native State but they explained that " the State was now under the management of Government." They were informed of this by one Bishun Das. I said that they should go to the Deputy Commissioner. They said that in their opinion I ought to run away. They said we should go to Gonda. They argued with me and told me of cases in the Punjab where the Akalis had taken possession and so I agreed to run away. We all three went in a motor as far as Nawabganj . . . . . we went by train from Nawabganj to Gonda. The train left at 8 or 8-30 in the evening . . . . . They said we should think out what was to be done when we got to Gonda. After we had gone about two stations I asked them what they advised as they said I was not to go to the Deputy Commissioner what plan had they . . . . . Nand Kumar said " the best thing for you to do is to give up the management of the estate to Satgur Prasad."

When the Akali fear has subsided you will then be able to do what you like; I agreed and said " Let us go on and decide at Gonda." We reached Gonda at about 2 a. m. and stayed at my house there. My karinda at that time was Pyare Lal Tahsildar. He was there. There was no one there except him and the sipahis. Satgur Prasad and Nand Kumar stayed with me. Pyare Lal and the two others came to me after 7 o'clock with a long paper written out and said listen to it. It was a draft of the arrangement for the management of the estate on plain paper. They read it to me . . . . . I did not consult anyone because I had no suspicion. I asked them to get Banwari Lal the estate vakil to have the matter settled so that I may not have worry and trouble. Pyare Lal and Nand Kumar came back about 3 o'clock and said they could not get a stamp; Satgur stayed with me. The stamp was obtained and the document executed on the next day . . . . . Babu Banwari Lal asked me what the document was and I said I was making arrangements for the management of the estate by the boy. He asked me what I was writing and why and I said I would tell him later . . . . . I think Pyare Lal was the writer of the deed . . . . . I signed the document. They read it to me. Pyare Lal read it to me. After I had heard it I signed it. Satgur Prasad also signed it. Banwari Lal and Kishen Prasad khazanchi were witnesses . . . . . We stayed in Gonda till the evening of the next day. We went by the night train to Lucknow. I was still afraid of the Akalis and continued to be afraid of them until about a month before I filed this suit . . . . . They told me to stay at home and no one would be allowed to come and see me and they would manage the affair and I should not be afraid. Satgur Prasad and Nand Kumar asked me to pay them Rs. 15,000 to settle the matter with Dalip Singh. They told me before I went to Gonda that the warant was on account of the marriage of Dalip Singh's wife and the Rs. 15,000 was required to appease him."

In cross-examination the plaintiff stated:

" The conversation about the Akalis began about two or three months before the document was executed. I may have met Magistrates at that time but I did not mention the matter to them. Satgur Prasad and Nand Kumar told me from the beginning to remain silent and not to make any report about it. They made me afraid of going to the Deputy Commissioner saying that I would get a worse reputation. They (Satgur Prasad and Nand Kumar) said that if I made over a deed of management in favour of Satgur Prasad the Akalis would know that I had nothing left and would not disturb me. They told me that the Akalis had enmity with me personally and through me with the estate. I supposed that they were angry because I gave money for newspapers, etc., and because I was President of the " maha mandal." I thought that once I had no property there would be no more enmity. I had two causes of fear of the Akalis and Dalip Singh. I did not think that they had any connexion with each other. The Akalis numbered fifty or sixty. It was not so much for myself that I was afraid of from the fifty Akalis but I was afraid that the old established shrine of Baba Hazara would be dishonoured by my arrest. I give in to them on account of the fear of arrest and the raid. I spoke to Babu Banwari Lal after the execution. I was at the house at Gonda . . . . . I then told him that I had made a deed of management of the estate. I told him about Dalip Singh and the warrant. I also told him to tell nobody else . . . . . He did not make any reply when I told him about Dalip Singh and the warrant was in connexion with the girl's marriage which I had arranged."

These are the main outlines of the plaintiff's case and the learned trial Judge is of opinion that they are proved. Now the probability in favour of the truth of the plaintiff's statement is furnished in a large measure by the antecedent circumstances and the corroboration of that statement in material particulars, by genuine and admitted evidence both oral and documentary is so great that we are, after anxious consideration, persuaded to the view that the opinion of the trial Judge is correct. (The judgment discussed the evidence and proceeded) Therefore, our finding, in agreement with the trial Court, is that the two defendants Satgur Prasad and Nand Kumar stood in a fiduciary relation with the plaintiff and that they took advantage of that position by inducing through fear the belief in him that the band of Akalis including Dalip Singh had come to Lucknow with a view to get him arrested under a warrant and to take possession of his property, all of which was untrue to the knowledge of the defendants and that the agreement of 25th November 1924 was the result of this undue influence and fraud exercised by the defendants on the plaintiff. The case falls

" under the general and useful category which in the language of Lord Kingsdown in Smith v. Kay (5) applies to every case ' where influence is acquired and abused, where confidence is reposed and betrayed ' Per Lord Shaw in the case of Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (6)."

On the facts found the case also falls within the provisions of S 16, Contract Act 1872, as explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raghunath Prasad v Sarju Prasad (7) The element of fraud as defined by S 17 (1) of the same Act is also proved

In opposition to the plaintiff's right to the relief of cancellation of the agreement of 25th November 1924, two further arguments were addressed to us on behalf of the defendant-appellant. One was founded on the exception enacted in S. 19, Contract Act 1872. According to our judgment the argument is untenable on the evidence The plaintiff, in relation to the events disclosed in the evidence was so circumstanced that he had practically no volition of his own left in the matter and when he evinced a desire to approach the authorities either directly or through the two defendants, his desire was continuously thwarted In short he was not a free agent. The second argument need only be noticed and not decided by us on merits because it does not arise after our finding in favour of the plaintiff on the question of undue influence and fraud. The argument was that the plaintiff was estopped from or had waived his right of challenging the validity of the document of 25th November 1924, by reason of the fact that he had continuously received from the date of the document the allowance of Rs 1,000 a month from the defendant. On the facts involved in the argument we are in entire agreement with the learned Judge of the trial Court. It will suffice to quote the finding of the learned Judge which we adopt :

" It was only when the plaintiff came to know that he had been cheated and that there was no fear of the Akalis, that Dalip Singh was a mere tool who had no claim against him and that he had given up the estate without any real reason that he was able to challenge the document. . . . . ,he (Pyare Lal, P. W. 4) took his revenge by telling the Mahant the plaintiff) all about the fraud of which he had been the victim and by obtaining for him the invaluable evidence of the letter written by defendant to the Lat Sahib, and the letter and telegram sent by Bishun Das. The plaintiff states and I see no reason to disbelieve him, that he sent for the defendant and questioned him about his alleged marriage and his extravagant expenditure, and the defendant openly flouted him and said he was the owner of the estate and could do what he liked. This drove the Mahant to consult lawyers and when they advised him that he could have the document set aside on the ground of fraud as well as certain other grounds he filed the present suit."

On the grounds stated above we uphold the finding of the trial Court that the document of 25th November 1924, was executed by the plaintiff under undue influence and fraud and that, therefore, it should be set aside

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent the finding of the trial Court on issue 10 was challenged but as we have already said every other issue in the case becomes immaterial after we have affirmed the finding of the trial Court on the issue of undue influence and fraud We may, however, say that we are in entire accord with the opinion of the trial Court on the said issue 10. Defendant-appellant was never married to Raj Kumari defendant 2 but he has kept her as his permanent mistress The word 'zauja' (wife) used in Ex. P W. 29 is a mere euphemism and is intended to cover the grossness of the immorality which has been perpetrated in every generation of this house since the days of Gur Narain Das As the learned Judge points out Gur Narain Das's mistress was called 'zauja,' the plaintiff's mistress Sunder Dei is called 'zauja' (Ex. A-22) and Sheoraj Kuar, the mistress of Har Charan Das and mother of Sant Rain Das is similarly described.

The result is that we affirm the decree of the trial Court in so far as the relief of cancellation of the document of 25th November 1924, is concerned and also to the relief for possession in consequence thereof. As to the relief granted by that Court in respect of the forfeiture of the defendant-appellant's right under the settlement of 20th January 1922, we accept the appeal and reject that relief. As to the mesne profits the plaintiff is only entitled to them from the date of the suit till the recovery of possession by him, the reason being that the document of 25th November 1924, was only voidable at the option of the plaintiff and the plaintiff did not exercise that option earlier than the date of this suit. The amount of the mesne profits will be determined hereafter

As to costs we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to his costs in full because he obviously asked for more reliefs than he was entitled to and it was only before us that the claim to relief in respect of a declaration that the defendant 1 is not entitled to any benefit under the earlier document of 20th January 1922, that is to say, he has lost his remainderman's estate also was admitted by the plaintiff-respondent's learned counsel as a relief to which the plaintiff is not entitled if the relief as the cancellation of 25th November 1924, is granted in his favour. We, therefore, direct that the plaintiff will be entitled to half his costs from the defendant 1 Satgur Prasad in both the Courts and that the said defendant and the other two defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 182 of 1928, Decided on 1st November 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 6th February 1928.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 60—Clog on redemption—Long term of 99 years by itself is no clog.

Ordinarily in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term of mortgage, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period; but where it is shown on merits that the effect of condition postponing redemption for a specified term of years is to make the mortgage practically irredeemable, a Court is justified in setting it aside: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 237; A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 36; and A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 193; Foll. [P 54 C 2]

A long term of 99 years, by itself does not constitute a clog on the equity of redemption. [P 55 C 1]

M. Wasim and Bisheshwar Nath—for Appellants

A. P. Sen—for Respondents 1 and 2.

Stuart, C. J.—The question for decision in this second appeal is whether a provision in a deed of usufructuary mortgage by which redemption is postponed for 99 years is a condition which can be avoided by the mortgagor. This question has frequently been before the Judicial Commissioner's Court and the Chief Court I do not wish to refer to the long series of decisions that there have been on the point as, as far as I am concerned, I arrived at a conclusion upon this point in April 1927, which I see no reason to alter. A Bench of which I was a member then decided in Darghai Lal v. Rafiquinnisa (1) that we agreed with the view taken by my learned brother Hasan, J , when he was Additional Judicial Commissioner in Balbhaddar Prasad v Dhanpat Dayal (2). We then stated the view The view taken was that where the restriction had the effect of making the mortgage practically irredeemable by imposing upon the mortgagor such a burden at the date when redemption became open to him as was impossible in practice for him to bear, it was open to the Court to permit redemption before the period came to an end. While the ordinary rule is as laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Bakhtawar Begam v Husaini Khanam (3):

"ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which a mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period."

Where it is shown on the merits that the effect of the condition postponing redemption for a specified term of years is to make the mortgage practically irredeemable, a Court is justified in setting it aside.

(3) A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 36=36 All. 195=41 I. A. 84. (P.C.).

Here I am asked the same question in respect of a different deed. On the merits is the effect of the condition in this particular deed to make the mortgage practically irredeemable? It certainly has not that effect and further the terms of the mortgage were not unconscionable. It appears to me that at the time the mortgage was executed in the year 1897 the moragagee's return as interest upon the amount, which he advanced, was by no means excessive. It appears to me from the examination of the record that it could not have been much more than 12 per cent. The profits are now in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent But even if they were higher the fact that they have increased since the execution of the mortgage is immaterial. In these circumstances therefore I should give the mortgagee the right to enforce the condition postponing redemption The result of this will be that the appeal will succeed and the suit will stand dismissed The plaintiffs will then pay their own costs and those of the defendants in all Courts

Wazir Hasan, J.—My view on this subject was stated at considerable length in the case of Balbhadddar Prasad v Dhanpat Dayal (2). I have invariably followed the view taken in that case On several occasions other learned Judges, either sitting singly or in a Bench, have also accepted the view laid down in the aforementioned decision In the present case I am of opinion that there is nothing else, except the long term in the deed of mortgage in question, to which objection can be taken and the long term by itself in the present instance does not, in my opinion, constitute a clog on the equity of redemption. The contract, therefore, into which the parties entered with their eyes open must be upheld. I therefore, agree that the appeal should be allowed

First Appeal No. 133 of 1927, Decided on 7th May 1928, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Hardoi, D/- 28th May 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which may be moulded according to the justice of the case —In the case of trespassers even ordinary charges may be refused.

Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case. In the case of fraudulent and dishonest trespassers while awarding mesne profits against them on rent basis it is right to refuse them charges for collecting rent of property in their possession as trespassers. 27 Cal. 951 (P.C.) & 24 All. 376, Foll. [P 56 C 1]

A. P. Sen, H. K. Ghose and Vije Kumar Dat—for Appellants

Bisheshar Nath—for Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal is in respect of mesne profits awarded under a previous decree In the original suit the appellants were ordered to pay mesne profits to the present respondents and the decree directed that those profits should be determined under the provisions of O 20, R 12. Against the decree determining these mesne profits the present appeal is preferred. The facts in the previous suit can be stated shortly. There it was decided that the present appellants Rohan Singh and Gajraj Singh, who is his brother, had fraudulently and dishonestly taken possession over certain property belonging to Durga Bakhsh Singh, respondent who was their relative They did this at the time that he was a minor. Gajraj Singh secured a position as Durga Bakhsh Singh's certificated guardian and abused that position in every possible way Finally Durga Bakhsh Singh recovered his property but in order to be able to do so he had to part with a considerable amount to the other two respondents who are his transferees. As Gajraj Singh was the guardian of Durga Bakhsh Singh, it was incumbent on him to keep accounts of the income and expenditure of the ward. If he had kept such accounts and if those accounts were honest and if he had also kept the accounts which he could have been expected to keep with regard to the income and expenditure of his own property, there would have been very little difficulty in ascertaining the exact amount of mesne profits, but we find that the two appellants refused to produce accounts when the mesne profits came to be determined. We draw the necessary inference against them from their omission to do so.

The learned trial Judge has owing to their failure to produce accounts calculated the profits on basis of rental demand deducting 12½ per cent. for unavoidable failure to make collections. We consider that the learned trial Judge has very properly based his finding upon the rental demand and that, if anything, he has been too lenient to the appellants in giving them an allowance of 12½ per cent. There is, however, no cross-appeal or objections against his having given them this allowance and there the matter must stand But this is one of the most important points upon which the appellants apppeal We have no hesitation in deciding that plea against them

Two remaining pleas are these. The learned trial Judge has refused to grant the appellants rent collecting charges The appellants were not only trespassers. They were fraudulent and dishonest trespassers They had been guilty of a peculiarly mean form of fraud upon a minor In these circumstances they are entitled to no concession It was laid down by Lord Hobbouse in Grish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1) that mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case, and following this decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee a Bench of the Allahabad High Court decided in Dungar Mal v. Jai Ram (2) that in the case of trespassers, such as the appellants are, it is right to refuse them charges such as would ordinarily voluntarily be incurred by an owner in possession. We, therefore, decide the appeal against the appellants on this plea also.

One plea remains. The appellants have put forward a claim to be reimbursed amounts which they have stated they expended upon the food and clothing of Durga Bakhsh Singh. We do not know that they expended anything on the food and clothing of Durga Bakhsh Singh but they probably expended something The claim, however, which they have made in this respect is based on no reliable evidence of any kind. It is based upon statements in accounts which Gajraj Singh presented to the District Judge as guardian. We have examined those statements and are satisfied that there is every reason to suppose that they are not genuine. There is no evidence in support of these claims, and on the record as it is before us we find that the learned trial Judge rightly refused to admit them This is not a case in which it may be thought that the appellants are suffering for want of opportunity to produce evidence In the first place we have every reason to believe that if they spent anything on the food and clothing of Durga Bakhsh Singh they spent something very much less than the amount they have claimed But further it is noticeable that no moveable property, cash or jewellery held by Durga Bakhsh Singh's father has ever been traced, and considering the relationship between Durga Bakhsh Singh and the appellants, we find it safe to conclude that the appellants have not been losers, even although we refuse to make a guess as to what they may have expended on the food and clothing of Durga Bakhsh Singh and then to grant a set-off according to the guess. Accordingly we dismiss the appeal with costs.

STUART, C. J , AND PULLAN, J.

Amir and another—Defendants—Appellants

Mohamed Bakhsh and others—Plaintiffs and Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No 239 of 1928, Decided on 6th November 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Malihabad, D/- 10th April 1928.

Oaths Act (10 of 1873), S 9—Party includes an authorized agent.

The language of the Act shows that the word "party" can be used not only in the restricted sense but in the wider sense. A duly authorized agent of a party can make the offer contemplated in S. 9. 38 All. 131, Rel. on; 14 Bom. 455, Diss. from. [P 58 C 2]

Ram Prasad Varma—for Appellants.
Alli Raza—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises in the following circumstances. The plaintiff Mahomed Bakhsh entered into a partnership in 1925 with Abdul Subhan Khan and Noor Mahomed to manufacture soap. He advanced Rs. 1,000 which was to be used in the partnership and it was agreed that this amount should be repaid to him in any circumstances from the concern. The defendants Amir and Munir entered into an engagement as sureties to the plaintiff for the repayment of this amount. On 12th March 1927, Mahomed Bakhsh instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif (South) Lucknow against the four defendants on the following pleas He said that he had only been paid Rs. 475 out of Rs. 1,000 advanced. He asked that the partnership should be dissolved. He sued to recover Rs. 525 the balance of Rs. 1,000 advanced, Rs. 350 as profits and .Rs 250 as share of the stock. The four defendants were all represented by the same counsel Mr. A. C. Ghose and Mr S N Roy, to each of whom a vakalatnama was given in similar terms. We have gone through this vakalatnama and we translate the portions which have bearing on the matters in dispute as follows :

They gave authority to the counsel
" to file compromises and confessions of judgment "

on their clients' behalf They gave authority to the counsel to submit the disputes to arbitration and they ended up with the following words :

" We accept all acts done and everything executed by our pleader and approve of them. They will be considered as done by ourselves "

The matter was referred to the arbitration of a certain Bhulai carpenter Bhulai filed an award in which he stated that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff Rs 525 claimed in respect of Rs. 1,000 advanced, Rs. 250 for the share of the stock and Rs 314-10-0 for profits. He reduced the claim by Rs 35-6-0 only The four defendants filed objections against this award These objections came on for hearing on 24th September 1927 On that day the defendants had no evidence to support their objections Their objections were objections of fact complaining against the conduct of the arbitrator, and they were in no position to support them on that day. In view of the fact that there was no evidence to support these objections these objections would ordinarily have been dismissed unless an adjourned date for hearing had been fixed. There is a finding of fact that on that date the defendants Abdul Subhan Khan and Noor Mahomed were present in Court. Amir and Munir were not present in Court but they were represented by the counsel to whom we have already referred. We now quote the recorded proceeding of the learned Munsif.

" At this stage pleader for defendants states : 'If the plaintiff states on oath with the Quoran in his hand that the books of account prior to 26th November 1926, are with the defendants then the suit for Rs. 1,125 and for dissolution of partnership be decreed with costs. The award may be set aside. ' "

" Pleader for plaintiff states : 'My client is willing to take the required oath. I have no objection to the award being set aside. ' "

" Order. The award dated 12th September 1927, is hereby set aside with the consent of the parties. "

"The plaintiff on oath with Quoran in hand: 'My suit is correct. All the books of account including those prior to 26th November 1926, are with the defendants. Defendants ' pleader states . 'I pray that my clients may be allowed to pay the decretal amount by instalments. ' Plaintiff's pleader opposes the award. "

This apparently means that the plaintiff's pleader opposed the application to pay the amount in instalments. This seems clear from what happened subsequently.

" Ordered. The prayer for instalments cannot be granted as there is nothing to show that the defendants are unable to pay the decretal amounts. "

All the four defendants then appealed against this decision. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal of Abdul Subhan Khan and Noor Mahomed but modified the decree as against Munir and Amir in the following manner. He found that it was clear that the plaintiff Mahomed Bakhsh had not claimed against Amir and Munir more than the Rs. 525 alleged to be due from them as sureties. As they were not partners in the soap business they could not be held liable for anything more So he reduced the decretal amount as against them to Rs 525. Amir and Munir appeal here against the decree as modified. Abdul Subhan and Noor Mahomed have taken no steps and Mahomed Bakhsh has not objected to the reduction of the amount as against the present appellants

The appellants here are in a difficult position. If they were not bound by their counsel's agreement to accept a decree on the basis of the oath of Mahomed Bakhsh they had to return to the arbitration award which could not be held to have been set aside as against them unless they accept the action of their own counsel, for it was their counsel who agreed to the withdrawal of the award and if he was not authorized to do so the award would still stand. The objections that they brought against the award were not supported by evidence. They were not entitled to any adjournment to obtain further evidence and their objections should have been dismissed as being baseless The result would be that they would be left liable to satisfy Rs. 1089-10-0 instead of Rs. 525 under the present decree. Thus it is really to their interest to have this appeal dismissed. We have, however, heard the arguments of the learned counsel upon the point of law that he has advanced. He has put his case as well as it could be put and has brought out the different views of the law most satisfactorily. But before we proceed to the different views of the law we have first to decide on construction of the power-of-attorney to which we have already referred. We have no doubt whatever upon reading this power of attorney that the counsel concerned were given the fullest possible authority to do whatever they wished on behalf of their clients so long as the legal proceedings lasted. The learned counsel would have us read latter part of the power-of-attorney as being governed by the previous part, but we find that the latter part is independent of the previous part. The parties agreed to accept all acts done by their counsel. It is not said that they agreed to accept all "such acts" or "all acts as aforesaid." There are no qualifying words. The last paragraph standing alone gives as complete an authority as it is possible to conceive. Having arrived at this decision on the question of construction we proceed to look at the views prevailing in other High Courts. It is true that in a case decided by a Bench of the Bombay High Court: Sadashiv Rayaji v. Maruti Vithal (1), it was laid down at p. 458:

"Again, it may well be doubted whether under Act 10 of 1873 any person but the party himself can make such an offer as is contemplated in S. 9. The procedure there laid down is of a very special kind. Its efficacy is presumably dependent on the circumstances that the true merits of a case are better known to the parties than to any one else. Its adoption is an appeal to the conscience of the party to whom the offer is made and such an appeal can rightly be made only by a person personally interested, whose confidence in the justice of the case is based on his own knowledge of its merits. The right to make the offer cannot be properly transferred to another person whose interests are not at stake, and whose knowledge of the facts would ordinarily be derived from the instructions he might have received from the party. That, we, think, must be the right construction to put upon the Act."

The learned Judges composing that Bench, however, added words which would go far to deprive the present appellants from obtaining much benefit from this decision, for they say:

"Of course, if a party specially authorizes his pleader or an agent, to make an offer to be bound by a particular oath, he might be estopped from retracing the step he had taken if his offer were acted on."

The learned Judges here apparently considered that though the Act did not permit an agent to make an offer his principal could, by giving him special authority to make the offer, put it out of his power to object to an acceptance of the offer by being estopped from so doing. We need not discuss how far this modification should operate, for we do not accept the view taken by the learned Judges who composed that Bench. The section to be interpreted is S 9, Act 10 of 1873:

"If any party to any judicial proceeding offers to be bound by any such oath or solemn affirmation"

The question here is simple. Does the word "party" include a duly authorized representative The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were of opinion that it did not include a duly authorized representative A different view, however, was taken in Allahabad in Wasi-uzzaman v. Faiza Bibi (2). A Bench of the Allahabad High Court considered the Bombay decision to which we have referred At p 133 it is said by Tudball, J.:

"Sections 8, 9 and 10 of Act 10 of 1873 clearly contemplate that the action mentioned therein can be taken by a party to a suit. In the Act itself there is no language which goes to show that the word "party" can be used only in its restricted sense and not in the wider sense. The considerations which are to be found at p. 458 of the ruling in I. L. R. 14 Bombay are considerations which really apply to a person who takes the oath rather than to a person who makes the offer. I can see no good reason why a duly authorized agent of a party should not make the offer contemplated in S. 9."

Walsh, J, in referring to that decision says at p. 133:

"That decision is one which I am unable to follow. Under such authority as was given in that case, which in substance resembles the authority given in the present case, if indeed it is not stronger, the agent could do any act which he deemed proper, for the purpose of the conduct of the suit. The acts of the agent are acts of the parties. Act 10 of 1873 enables a party to make the offer which was made in the case before us. That is a step in a suit which, however rare in its occurrence, may arise as an incident in a suit. I see no reason why an agent authorized to conduct a suit is not authorized to take the step provided by Act 10 of 1873. The reasons given by the Bombay High Court, as my learned brother has pointed out, appear to be directed to questions relating to the person who takes the oath and not to the person who makes the offer."

We agree with the Allahabad view. For the above reasons we dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and the costs of Mahomed Bakhsh.

First Appeal No 80 of 1928, Decided on 9th November 1928, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Hardoi, D/- 14th April 1928.

Civil P. C , O. 34, R. 6—Decree under R. 6 is a supplementary decree and no question of limitation arises if the original suit was within time for relief on personal covenants —Limitation Act, Arts. 66 and 132.

In pursuance of a mortgage decree, mortgaged property was sold, but the net proceeds of the sale were found to be insufficient to pay the amount due under the decree. Steps were taken to get a decree prepared under O. 34, R. 6, for the balance of the amount decreed to be recoverable from the judgment-debtor otherwise than out of the property sold. The suit on mortgage was within time for the relief on personal covenant.

H. D Chandra—for Appellant

Shankar Sahai—for Respondent 1.

Judgment. — This is the judgment-debtor's appeal from the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hardoi dated 14th April 1928 in proceedings which have arisen under the provisions of R. 6, O. 34, Civil P. C. The respondents obtained a decree on the foot of a mortgage for sale of certain property against the appellant. The preliminary decree was passed on 29th January 1926 and was made absolute on 30th October 1926. In pursuance of that decree the mortgaged property was sold on 30th October 1927 but the net proceeds of the sale were found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiffs under the decree mentioned above. Steps are now being taken by them to get a decree prepared under R. 6, O. 34, Civil P. C., for the balance of the amount decreed to be now recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold. The judgment-debtor pleads limitation as against the passing of such a decree. The Court below has overruled the plea of limitation and has given the decree prayed for. The question for decision in appeal before us is as to whether the decision of the lower Court is correct.

We have heard arguments at considerable length in this case and have come to the conclusion that the appeal fails. In support of the appeal the learned advocate for the appellant relies on a recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ganesh Lal v Khetramohan (1) That case, however, does not help him except in so far that it may be assumed for the purposes of the decision of this appeal only as having laid down the law that the article of the Limitation Act applicable to the making of such a decree is Art 66, Sch 1 of that Act which provides for three years' limitation from the date on which the money becomes repayable. The difficulty is from which date the three years' limitation is to be reckoned It is agreed that the cause of action arose after the expiry of two years from the date of the mortgage when the money was made repayable according to the covenant contained in that deed. The date of the mortgage was 4th June 1919. It is also clear to us, in spite of arguments advanced by the learned advocate for the appellant to the contrary, that the deed of further charge contains a clear acknowledgment of the liability of the debt under the previous mortgage and thus under S. 19, Lim. Act, the period of three years must be reckoned to have commenced from the date of the acknowledgment which is 9th December 1922.

If the date of the initiation of the present proceedings is to be regarded as the terminal point of limitation, then on the assumption that three years' limitation is applicable the present proceedings are barred by time and this is the argument of the learned advocate for the appellant. But we are of opinion that the argument is untenable. The decree which is now being sought to be passed must be treated to be a supplementary decree in the suit which was originally brought by the mortgagee on the foot of his mortgage for the relief of sale of the mortgaged property, and if that suit was within time, as it is agreed that it was, for the relief founded on the personal covenant, then no question of limitation arises in the present proceedings. This view seems to us to be supported by a series of decisions in the High Court of Allahabad We may refer only to one of such decisions in Musaheb Zaman Khan v Inayat-ul-Lah (2) Apart from any authority for the opinion we have formed, it seems to us that no separate suit for a decree for the recovery of the balance is contemplated under the Code of Civil Procedure. R. 6, O 34, which authorizes the passing of such a decree is a rule relating to the procedure of working out the decree which is passed in the suit for the sale of the mortgaged property It appears to us that R 6, O. 34, provides for the final step by the adoption of which the decree originally passed may wholly be satisfied. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs

(1) A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 56=5 Pat. 585=53 I.A. 184 (P.C.).

Misc. Appeal No. 41 of 1928, Decided on 19th November 1928, from order of Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 11th May 1928.

(a) Oudh Rent Act, S. 108 (5-A) — Decision of the revenue Court that a plot is or is not a grove is final.

The decision of the revenue Courts in resumption proceedings on the question whether a plot still retains the character of a grove or not must be deemed as final, and cannot be assailed in the civil Court : 3 O. L. J. 717, Foll. : 41 All. 203; A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 205 , and 5 O. L. J. 639 ; Ref. : A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 458, Dist. [P 61 C 2]

(b) Oudh Rent Act, S. 54—Ejectment of grove-holder by notice is illegal—Proceedings under Chap. 7-A is the proper remedy (Obiter).

The mere fact that a land is liable to resumption or assessment of rent on the ground that a grove had ceased to exist would not make the grove-holder a tenant liable to be ejected by notice. Such a notice must be deemed to be invalid and the ejectment illegal, and it would be open to the grove-holder to bring a suit for possession against the landlord in civil Court. The proper remedy for a landlord is to take resumption proceedings under Chap. (7-A) 5 O. L. J. 639 and A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 458, Foll. [P 62 C 2]

Hakimuddin—for Respondent 1.

Gokaran Nath Misra, J.—This is an appeal arising out of an order of remand passed by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow dated 11th May 1928. The suit in which this order of remand was passed was a suit for possession of a grove No 102 old 218 new, situate in village Terha, District Unao The allegations upon which the plaintiff-respondent brought the present suit were to the effect that he was the owner of the said grove and the revenue Court had wrongfully decreed resumption thereof on the ground that it no more retained the character of a grove The plaintiff, therefore, alleged that his dispossession was wrongful and being a grove-holder he was entitled to bring the present suit and get the question decided by the civil Court that the plot still retained the character of a grove The defendants contested the suit mainly on two grounds, namely, that the plot in suit had lost the character of a grove and that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to go behind the decision of the revenue Court.

The learned Munsif, South Unao, who tried the suit was of opinion that the decision of the question that the plot in suit had lost the character of a grove, could not be re-opened by the civil Court and that the decision of the revenue Court on the point was final. In this view of the case he did not try the question as to whether the plot in suit still retained the character of a grove. He, therefore, dismissed the suit by his decree dated 23rd December 1926 The plaintiff carried the matter further in appeal and the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow who heard the appeal has taken a different view. He has held that the civil Court has got the jurisdiction to decide as to whether the plot still retains the character of a grove and whether under those circumstances the plaintiff could be held to be a grover-holder or not. Taking this view of the case he set aside the decree of the Munsif and remanded the case for decision on the merits. It is against this order that the present appeal has been brought.

The main question, therefore, for decision before us is whether in a case like the present one, the decision of the revenue Court can be considered final and whether it is open to the civil Court to go behind the said decision. We have heard the parties at considerable length and have come to the conclusion that the view of law taken by the learned Munsif is correct, and his decision must, therefore, be restored. We now proceed to give our reasons for having come to this conclusion

Proceedings for resumption in Oudh are governed by Ch. 7-A, Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886). S 107 (bis) of that chapter lays down that nothing in that chapter should apply to a grove so long as it retains its character as such. S 107-A lays down that a proprietor of a mahal or part of a mahal may sue to resume possession, or to have rent assessed on any land situate in such mahal or part of a mahal purporting to be held rent-free whether by grant in writing or otherwise It is admitted in this case, as is the rule in all such similar cases, that no rent was paid by the respondent in respect of the plot in dispute which was held rent-free. Under those circumstances the remedy resorted to by the defendants-appellants by taking proceedings for resumption under Ch. 7-A against the plaintiff-respondent were fully justified by the provision of S. 107-A. The only defence which could have been raised by the plaintiff of the present suit, who was the defendant in the revenue Court, in order to oust the jurisdiction of that Court was by alleging that the grove in dispute still retained its character as such. This defence was raised but was finally rejected by the Board of Revenue by its order dated 15th May 1925 The Board of Revenue held, as was held by the Court of first appeal, that the plot in dispute had ceased to retain the character of a grove.

It appears to us that reading the resumption Ch 7-A with S. 108, Cl. 5-A, it must be held that the revenue Courts have exclusive jurisdiction to take cognizance of suits brought for resumption of, or assessment or enhancement of, rent on land held rent-free. If the revenue Courts have, therefore, exclusive jurisdiction to entertain and decide such a suit it should be clear that they must also be considered to have exclusive jurisdiction to try an issue which would be necessary for them to do, in order to take cognizance of a suit of the description mentioned in Cl. (5-A) and that their decision so arrived at cannot be impugned by an unsuccessful litigant who brings a suit for the purpose in the civil Court We are, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the revenue Courts in the present case on the question whether the plot in suit still retains the character of a grove or not must be deemed as final and cannot be assailed by the plaintiff-respondent in the civil Court. We are supported in this view by a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Bhagwan Singh v. Jagmohan Singh (1). Mr. Lindsay (now Sir Benjamin Lindsay) held in that case that a revenue Court had exclusive jurisdiction to resume lands granted for the purpose of planting groves which had subsequently lost their character as such and to decide the question. We are in entire agreement with that opinion

We would in this connexion refer to two other cases, one decided by the Allahabad High Court and the other decided by a Single Judge of this Court. The decision of the Allahabad High Court to which we would like to refer is the decision reported in Baljit v. Mahipat (2). It has been held by the Allahabad High Court in that case that where a matter, exclusively within the jurisdiction of a Court of revenue, has been tried and decided by that Court as between the parties, no such subsequent suit will lie in the civil Court having for its sole object the annulment of the decree passed by the Court of revenue. The Single Judge case of this Court will be found reported in Dilawar Khan v. Kulsum (3). This was a case in which it was held that where in a suit between the parties, a revenue Court decided that the plaintiff of that suit was a tenant-in-chief and not a sub-tenant, no civil suit could subsequently be maintained by a defendant of that suit for a declaration to the effect that it was he who was the tenant-in-chief and that the plaintiff was his sub-tenant.

(1) [1916] 3 O. L. J. 717=38 I. C. 488.
(2) [1919] 41 All. 203 = 49 I. C. 118 = 17 A. L. J. 60.
(3) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 205.

The same rule of law is laid down in Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. 2, 12th Edn. at p. 755. The rule enunciated is in the following words :

" that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon a particular point is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court for a different purpose. "

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that where a grove-holder was illegally dispossessed by the landlord whether out of Court or through the rent Court, a suit for recovery of the grove-land could be successfully brought in the civil Court. The learned advocate for the respondent relied upon the decision of one of us reported in Jagdish Bahadur Singh v. Ragho Ram (4). In that case it was no doubt held that where a grove-holder was ejected illegally by the landlord whether through the revenue Court or out of Court, a suit for possession by him would clearly lie in the civil Court and he would not be barred from pleading that he was a grove-holder and has been wrongfully ejected by the revenue Court. In our opinion this decision does not in any way help the plaintiff-respondent. If a landlord dispossesses a grove-holder, the latter's remedy is obviously to bring a suit against the landlord for recovery of possession of his grove-land in the civil Court for the purpose. Such a suit cannot obviously be brought in the revenue Court because a grove-holder has been held not to be a tenant.

We might in this connexion refer to a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Durga Prasad v. Ram Charan (5), where it was clearly held that the mere fact that the land is liable to resumption or assessment of rent on the ground that a grove had ceased to exist would not make the grove-holder a tenant liable to ejectment by notice. Similarly if a landlord issues a notice of ejectment against a grove-holder and treats him as his tenant, as he must be presumed to do when he issues a notice of ejectment against him, such a notice must be considered to be invalid and the ejectment of the grove-holder in pursuance of such a notice must be deemed to be an illegal ejectment and it would be open to grove-holder to bring a suit for possession against the landlord in the civil Court. This is all that was decided in Jagdish Bahadur Singh v Ragho Ram (4), the decision not having gone further. It was also contended on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that it had been held in some cases by the Board of Revenue that it was open to the landlord to issue a notice of ejectment if the land on which the grove previously stood had lost its character as such. Consequently if a suit to contest that notice was brought in a revenue Court, such Court must be considered to possess jurisdiction to decide the question whether the plot had lost the character of a grove or not.

The argument advanced was to the effect that if the revenue Court decided this question and if the civil Court was to be bound by it, a grove-holder had no remedy in case a notice of ejectment was issued against him through the revenue Courts. Our reply to that contention is that in our opinion the proper remedy for a landlord to adopt in such a case is not to issue a notice of ejectment against the grove-holder but to take resumption proceedings against him under Chap 7-A since a notice of ejectment could only be issued against a person who is a tenant or who could be treated as such. It appears to us to be clear that a grove-holder is neither a tenant nor can he be treated as such since he does not pay rent nor can he be considered to be liable to pay rent until rent has actually been assessed upon the said land. We are therefore of opinion that the order of remand passed by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. We, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of remand passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs in all the three Courts.

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C J.—I agree that the appeal should be allowed and the decree of the trial Court restored. It is quite clear to my mind that the Courts of revenue for the purpose of deciding cases of resumption of land under the provisions of Chap. 7-A, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, have exclusive jurisdiction in that behalf. The jurisdiction is, however, expressly withdrawn by the legislature in case where resumption is sought of a piece of land which retains the character of a grove. This is clear from S. 107. It follows therefore that with a view to acquire or to divest themselves of such a jurisdiction the Courts of revenue must in the very nature of things decide the question if it is raised as to whether the subject-matter of resumption retains the character of a grove or not. It further follows that the Courts of revenue must be deemed to be possessed of jurisdiction to decide the issue just now mentioned. Therefore the finding of the Court of revenue in the present case that the land in question no longer retains the character of a grove is a finding of a Court possessed of exclusive jurisdiction in the subject-matter of this litigation and is conclusive.

(4) A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 458=29 O.C. 271.
(5) [1918] 5 O.L.J. 639=48 I.C. 417.

Judgment.—The facts from which this second appeal has arisen are as follows: One Ghisa possessed certain property and died leaving two sons Kali Charan and Durga. Kali Charan died in 1897 and Durga in 1898. The former left a widow Gulaba who died in the year 1915 after gifting her property to her daughter's son and we are not concerned with this share of the property. Durga left a widow named Menda and a son Badri Prasad. The son died in the year 1899 and his widow Mt. Phulla died in the year 1910 and the property devolved on Mt. Menda. For the purposes of this appeal it is admitted that Menda was the mother of Badri Prasad and that the rights she obtained in the property were those of a Hindu female. The reversioners to the property were Narain and Biru and, on 13th December 1916, during the lifetime of Menda they sold their reversionary rights in that portion of the property to two persons Durga and Badal. When Menda died in 1918 there was a dispute between Narain and Biru on the one hand and Durga and Badal on the other in the mutation Court. It appears that Narain and Biru declined to be bound by their own sale of reversionary rights and obtained mutation in the revenue Court. In January 1919 Durga and Badal sued in the civil Court on the basis of their sale-deed. On 13th February 1919 the parties entered into a compromise and a decree was passed on 7th March 1919 by virtue of which Durga and Badal obtained possession of the property. Before, however, the passing of the decree in terms of the compromise, Biru had sold his rights to a certain Parag and Parag brought a suit against Durga and Badal in which he obtained a decree to the effect that the compromise was inoperative and he accordingly obtained possession of Biru's share in the property.

Narain took no further action until 7th April 1927, when he filed the present suit. His main contention was that the compromise and decree of 1919 had been held, in the suit brought by Parag, to be invalid and null and void, and on this ground he pleaded that he was entitled to possession of that portion of the property which he had himself sold, without bringing any suit for the cancellation of the compromise and the decree. The Courts below have accepted the view that the compromise and decree are void, and on this finding they have decreed the suit brought by Narain. In the first place it is necessary to meet the general objection which has been raised before us that a compromise decree cannot act as res judicata under S. 11, Civil P. C., or even as an estoppel. On this point we need only refer to two rulings of the Courts in England, which show very clearly that the contrary view is taken by the highest authority. In the case of South American and Mexican Co. (1), Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams has made the following observations :

" Under these circumstances I have only to consider Mr. Moulton's suggestion, that a judgment by consent, upon which the Court has not exercised its mind, does not and cannot raise an estoppel inter partes. I can only say that this is the first time I have ever heard such a proposition suggested. It has always been the law that a judgment by consent or by default raises an estoppel just in the same way as a judgment after the Court has exercised a judicial discretion in the matter."

Again in the case of Pranal Anne v Lakshmi Annee (2), it was laid down that razinama in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially by the learned Judge was in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration and any order prouounced in terms of it constituted res judicata binding upon both the parties to this appeal who gave their consent to it. It is clear, therefore, that the consent decree of 1919 was binding upon the parties and would operate as res judicata in the present suit unless there were some special reason for holding that the compromise and the decree were void. It is the finding of the Courts below that the decree is void and it is in our opinion an erroneous finding. Both the Courts appear to have found that the sale of expectant rights being contrary to public policy the decree passed as a result of a compromise in reference to that sale must, therefore, have been void.

The lower Courts believed that they were following the view taken by the Madras High Court in two cases. The first is reported in Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (3) and the second is reported in Ramasami Naik v Ramasami Chetti (4). In the first case the compromise was effected by two parties who wished to effect an illegal sale of an office attached to a temple which sale was against public policy and could not be recognized or enforced by the Courts, and in the second case, which is more closely akin to the one before us, it was held that a transfer of a bare expectancy being a nullity under S 6 (a), T. P Act, which is itself based on principles of public policy, the Court could not allow such transaction to be effected by a consent decree. But in the case before us there is a point which seems to have escaped the observation of both the Courts below. Although the sale was actually effected in the year 1916 during the lifetime of Menda, and so was a transfer of expectant rights, in 1919 Menda was dead and Narain and Biru were able in law to transfer the property to their vendees, as their reversionary rights had now become rights of ownership, and such a sale was in no way contrary to public policy and could very well become the subject of a compromise and a decree which would be binding upon both the parties.

The fact that the compromise and the decree were held to be a nullity in the suit brought by Parag is irrelevant Parag was not a party to that compromise or to the decree He was a transferee from Biru before the compromise was entered into, and his rights were in no way affected by any compromise entered into subsequently by his vendor. Thus although the compromise and the decree may very well have been a nullity as far as Parag was concerned they have never been declared to be nullity in the case of Narain and in our opinion they are binding upon him and have in the present case the effect of res judicata. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and direct that the plaintiff's suit stand dismissed with costs in all Courts

Judgment —This is a second civil appeal against the decree passed by the District Judge of Fyzabad, reversing the decree of the Court of Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. The appeal arises out of a suit instituted by Wazir Khan and ten others, Muslim residents of Qasba Raunahi, on behalf of and representing the Muhammadan population of the town, for a declaration to the effect that the property in suit was a public waqf created for the mosque known as Juma mosque Qila Raunahi, Pargana Mangalsi, District Fyzabad, and that the defendant held the property merely as trustee. The plaintiffs' allegation was that the waqf had been created in the Shahi times and that Muhammad Roshan Khan was the first mutawalli, who was succeeded by Mirza Rajab Beg. Qudratullah Beg succeeded Mirza Beg and after Qudratullah Beg his son, Mirza Muhammad Hussain, defendant held the property as the present mutawalli. The defendant denied the alleged waqf and claimed to be the absolute owner of the property in suit under the decree passed at the First Regular Settlement in 1870. He raised certain other pleas with which we are not concerned in the appeal and, therefore, they do not call for any mention The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, who tried the suit, held the property to be waqf and decreed the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the learned District Judge disagreed with the view of the trial Court and reversed the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge.

The sole question arising for determination in this appeal is regarding the nature of the property in suit, whether it should be regarded as waqf property or as the private property of the defendant. The determination of this question rests mainly on the construction to be placed upon the settlement proceeding resulting in the decree (Ex. 2) dated 17th May 1870 These proceedings were initiated by an application for settlement in respect of the property in suit made by Qudratullah Beg, father of the defendant, on 22nd June 1868 This application is Ex. 1 in the case. The relevant portions of the application are as follows :

"Mawazi 50 bighas arozi kham . . . . . ba ahad badshah Ghayazuddin Haider ba sudur farman waste sarf masjid wa kharch ayando rawand banam Roshan Khan mutawalli masjid wale qasba Raunahi, Pargana mazkur muaf hui . . . . . Roshan Khan ne . . . . bad uske chah mazkur wa arazi wa our ashra jo kuchh ki unke qabze men tha banam mujh sael ke hiba wa tamlik kia . . . . . Ummedwar hun ki bad tahqiqat adalat bandobast arazi mazkur ka banam mere farmay jawe"

The terms of this application make it clear that a grant had been made of the land in suit in the Shahi time, that the grant was for the upkeep of the mosque and for the feeding of travellers and that the grant had been made in favour of Roshan Khan as mutawalli of the mosque. There is not a word in this document to show that the grant was made to Roshan Khan in his personal capacity and as his private property. On the contrary the fact of the grant being made in favour of the mutawalli of the mosque and for religious and charitable objects like those mentioned above would in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, clearly make it out to be a public waqf. The learned counsel for the defendant-respondent has laid great stress on the fact that Roshan Khan had made a hiba and tamlik of the property. It should be noticed that the property referred to consisted not only of the property in suit but also of certain other moveables. The word "hiba" may well refer to the transfer of moveables. It was also argued that the word "tamlik" would indicate transfer of the proprietary rights of the property in suit and would be consistent only with Roshan Khan having been the proprietor thereof. We are unable to accept this argument. The word "tamlik" is very often "popularly" used in the sense of a settlement in the case of trust properties Roshan Khan was a Pathan whereas Qudratullah Beg and his father, Mirsa Rajab Beg, were Moghals. The only relationship between them was that Mirza Rajab Beg was a disciple of Roshan Khan So, if Roshan Khan appointed Mirza Rajab Beg his successor to the mutwallship and made over the trust property to him the transaction could well be described by the use of the word "tamlik."

The next argument of importance is the judgment of the Settlement Court (Ex. 2) dated 17th May 1870. It is stated in this judgment that :

"Muddai qabiz arazi muafi area pachas baras se hai aur muddai ne jo sanad muafi nawishta Nazim waqt muwarrikha 27 Rajab san 1234 Hijri guzrani usmen mundarijh hai ki hasb sanad Badshah waqt ke Nazim ne yeh muafi uske bap ke pir ko waste sarf masjid ke ata kiu ki ab janashin muddai hai . . . . . digri milkiat arazi 50 bighas kham hanaq muddi di jawae.."

The above extract from the judgment shows that a sanad had been produced before the Settlement Court which showed that the land had been granted for the upkeep of the mosque. Presumably the sanad should be in the possession of the defendant. He has not produced it. It is true that he produced a certain document purporting to be a sanad but both the lower Courts have rejected it and refused to presume its genuineness. We must, thesefore, take it that the production of the original sanad which had been produced before the Settlement Court has been withheld by the defendant. This raises a presumption against him. The terms of the sanad as reproduced in the judgment of the Settlement Court are also consistent only with the view that the grant was a public waqf and not private property. The defendant-respondent placed great reliance on the fact that the Settlement Court passed a decree for proprietary rights in favour of the plaintiff and not in favour of the mosque. The argument overlooks the fact that proceedings in the early days of the First Regular Settlement, as frequently remarked, were free from technicalities and niceties of law with which we are so familiar now. The word 'milkiat' it seems to us, has been used only in contradistinction to subordinate rights to indicate the nature of interest granted in the land. On a careful consideration of the entire judgment in the light of the application (Ex 1) we have no hesitation in holding that the proper construction to be placed upon these proceedings is that the decree was passed in favour of Qudratullah Beg as mutawalli of the mosque and not in his private rights. We are further supported in this opinion by the application (Ex 3) dated 2nd February 1871, made by Qudratullah Beg for reduction of the rent, which had been assessed on a portion of the land. In this application also he said:

"Yeh arazi bila lagan qadim se waste sarf masjid ke muaf chali ati hai aur yeh kam wa sarf waste ibadat wa sarfa fuqra men kia jata hai."

It is significant that the application is signed by him as Mirza Qudratullah Beg mutawalli masjid. If he had laid claim to the property and obtained a decree therefor in his private capacity where was the need and occasion for him to subscribe to the application as mutawalli masjid ? We should be content to base our decision on the proceedings in the Settlement Court referred to above and after giving our careful consideration to the contents of the documents discussed above we have come to the conclusion that the finding arrived at by the trial Court was correct.

The learned counsel for the appellants also relied on certain proceedings taken by the defendant in the revenue Courts in the year 1926. He made an application (Ex. 5) for correction of the khewat in which he said that the mauafi in question was not his private property but was held by him as a mutawalli for the upkeep of the mosque He made similar statements in another application (Ex. 8). But we are not prepared to base our conclusions on these admissions as they were subsequently retracted and it is not possible for us in the second appeal to enter into an inquiry regarding the circumstances in which these admissions were made or withdrawn.

There is just one more fact to which we wish to make reference. It is this. The defendant in the witness-box as D. W. 1 admitted that he had two uncles and four sisters but that the property in suit was held by his father alone and after him by the defendant. He was unable to give any satisfactory explanation of the exclusion of the uncles or the sisters These facts also support the view that the property was not considered as the private property either of the defendant or of his father.

Lastly, the learned counsel for the appellants also tried to make out a case of waqf by user. The learned District Judge has discussed the evidence relating to it and has refused to believe it The matter is, therefore, concluded by the finding of the lower appellate Court and it cannot be opened in second appeal.

The learned counsel for the respondent relied on Mahomed Raza v. Yadgar Hussain (1) and Jagatjit Singh v. Birj Mohan Das (2) These cases are distinguishable. On the particular facts of the case before them their Lordships of the Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that it was a case of a grant sub-condition and not a case of waqf. It is important to note that in this case also their Lordships reiterate the proposition that according to Mahomedan Law it is not necessary in order to constitute a waqf that the term waqf be used if from the general nature of the grant itself that tenure can be inferred. The case in Jagatjit Singh v Birj Mohan Das (2) is similar to the case in Mahomed Raza v. Yadgar Hussain (1) and follows it. No help can be derived from these cases in construing the documents which form the subject of consideration in the present case.

The learned District Judge has also laid stress on the fact that by the Proclamation of Land Canning of 1858 all proprietary rights in the soil were wiped out and fresh proprietary rights were conferred by the British Government either by means of sanads or by Settlement Court decrees. He argues that as no sanad was granted and no decree was passed in favour of the mosque it must be taken that the waqf, if any, of the pre-annexation period no longer existed. This argument is sufficiently answered by the opinion expressed by us above, namely, that the decree of the Settlement Court must be construed as a decree in favour of the mosque, our finding being that the defendant or his predecessors had no beneficial interest in the property in suit either under the original grant or under the decree of the Settlement Court and that the decree obtained by Qudratullah Beg was only as a mutawalli representing the mosque. The argument has no force We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Second Appeal No. 318 of 1928, Decided on 15th November 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Gonda, D/- 21st May 1928.

(a) Contract Act, S. 16—Pleader appearing in one or two cases of his client—Pleader's father purchasing property from the client—Pleader and father constituting joint Hindu family—Pleader cannot be said to be parmanent pleader and does not stand in a position of active confidence so as to justify the throwing on the pleader burden of proving good faith of the transaction—Father is not bound to prove bona fides of the transaction.

If a pleader appears in one or two cases as counsel on behalf of his. client, it cannot be said that he is his permanent pleader and as such stands, in regard to him, in a position of active confidence so as to justify the throwing of the burden of proving the good faith of the sale transaction in favour of pleader's father by his client on the pleader, the pleader and his father constituting a Hindu joint family. The case would be quite different if that pleader happens to be the permanent counsel of the other side. Father is not, therefore, bound to prove the bona fides of his sale deed. [P 69 C 1, 2]

(b) United Provinces Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), S. 111—Partition—Date fixed in proclamation for filing objections—Proclamation duly served upon parties—If case is taken up on the fixed date but no objection is filed, no party can raise any objection in future—If, however, the parties are not served or the case is not taken up and proceeded with but adjourned to a next date, objections can be entertained on such a date—What is proper time must be determined according to facts of each case.

Where a statute confers jurisdiction upon a tribunal of limited authority the conditions and qualifications under which that jurisdiction is to be exercised must be directly complied with. Hence if a date is fixed in the proclamation for filing objections and proclamation is duly served upon a party to the partition proceedings and the case is taken up on the date fixed in the proclamation, and no objection is filed on that date and the case proceeds, it would not be open to any party to file objections raising a question of proprietary title at any future time. If, however, the proclamation has not been served upon a party to the partition proceedings or the case is not taken upon the date fixed in the proclamation and the proceedings are adjourned to another date, on which date the objections are filed, it cannot be held that they have not been filed at the proper time and should not be entertained by the revenue Court. A revenue Court is not, therefore, entitled to entertain an objection raising a question of proprietary title if not filed at the proper time. What is proper time must, however, be determined according to the facts and circumstances of each case; 17 O. C. 224, Rel on, 18 All. 210 and A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 309, Ref. [P 70 C 1]

Judgment —This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff in pursuance of an order of the revenue Court passed in the partition proceedings.

The facts of the case are that one Sita Ram was the owner of 5-pies 2 kirants 50 decimal share in village Dobai, District Gonda. He sold the share to one Babu Sarju Prasad, resident of Gonda City, who is respondent 1 in the present appeal, on 17th October 1924. The sale-deed was for a consideration of Rs 2,000 and was registered on 22nd October 1924. Sita Ram did not contest the validity of this sale during his lifetime, nor did his widow who succeeded him after his death. The appellants Ram Sumran and Raghubar Dayal are the nephews of Sita Ram and his next heirs. Babu Ram Shankar Tandon and Babu Gour Prasad Tandon who are respondents 2 and 3 in the present case are the sons of Babu Sarju Prasad, respondent 1. They have been joined in the case since all the three constitute a a joint Hindu family. In 1927 Babu Sarju Prasad applied to the revenue Court for partition of the aforesaid 5-pies odd share purchased by him from Sita Ram The proclamation was thereupon issued by the revenue Court under S. 110, Land Revenue Act, fixing the 13th July 1927 as the date for filing the objections. The case was not taken up on that date, since the notice had not been received back and it was adjourned to 30th July 1927. It could not be taken up on that date also and it was again adjourned to 10th August 1927, and on that date the objector Raghubar Dayal filed an objection to the effect that the sale-deed dated 17th October 1924, under which Babu Sarju Prasad had purchased the share, which he wanted to get partitioned from the revenue Court, was invalid, being without consideration and having been obtained by undue influence The case was not heard on that date and was adjourned to 24th August 1927 On that date the revenue Court passed an order to the effect that the objectors, who are now the plaintiffs of the present suit, should file a suit in the civil Court in order to get this question relating to the sale-deed settled and gave them three months' time for the purpose The plaintiffs filed the present suit on 22nd November 1927 within the time fixed. They have impleaded Babu Sarju Prasad as defendant 1 and his two sons, Babu Ram Shankar and Babu Gur Prasad as defendants 2 and 3 The plaintiffs also claim possession of the share in dispute alleging themselves to be the heirs of Sita Ram

The defence raised by the respondents consists of three pleas, firstly that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, since the order passed by the revenue Court under which it had referred the plaintiffs-appellants to the civil Court had no jurisdiction to do so, the objections having been filed by the appellants in the revenue Court beyond time; secondly that the sale-deed dated 17th October 1924 was a good and valid deed having been executed by Sita Ram for consideration and of his free will; and thirdly that the suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif of Tarabganj, District Gonda, who tried the suit, held that the deed was for consideration and the allegation of the plaintiffs to the effect that the consideration received under the deed had been returned to the purchaser Babu Sarju Prasad was not established.

On the question of undue influence he decided the point against the plaintiffs On the question of limitation his finding was in plaintiff's favour, but he did not decide the question of jurisdiction. In view of the findings stated above he, however, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit by his decree dated 25th February 1928 On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs-appellants had failed to establish the invalidity of the sale-deed on the ground of want of consideration and of undue influence On the question of jurisdiction he was of opinion that the suit was not cognizable by the civil Court. On the question of limitation he agreed with the learned Munsif that the suit was not time barred but in view of his findings on the 1st two points he dismissed the appeal by his decree dated 21st May 1928 The plaintiffs-appellants have now come up to this Court in second appeal, and the same three points have now been urged by their learned advocate in second appeal I now proceed to deal with each of these three points

Undue Influence and want of consideration.—On the question of undue influence I am fully satisfied that the findings of the two Courts below cannot be disturbed It is clear from the evidence on the record that the relations between Sita Ram, the vendor, and the plaintiffs-appellants, who were his next heirs, were not good, and that he was anxious during his lifetime, to sell the property. He approached several persons and ultimately sold it to respondent 1. Under these circumstances it is clear that the sale-deed was executed with his free will and consent and that the charge of undue influence laid by the appellants at the door of respondent 1, cannot be considered to have been established It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that respondents 2 and 3 (sons of respondent 1), who are pleaders practising at Gonda, have in several cases appeared on behalf of Sita Ram, and it was argued that under those circumstances, respondent 1 who took the sale-deed should be considered to be in the position of active confidence. I am unable to take this view In my opinion if a pleader appears in one or two cases as counsel on behalf of his client, it cannot be said that he is his permanent pleader and as such stands, in regard to him, in a position of active confidence so as to justify the throwing of the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction on the particular pleader The case would be quite different if that pleader happens to be the permanent counsel of the other side The argument, therefore, that under S 111, Evidence Act, 1872, Babu Sarju Prasad was bound to prove the bona fides of his sale-deed, cannot be accepted

On the question of consideration both the Courts below have disbelieved the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs, and have come to the conclusion that the plea of the plaintiff-appellants as to return of consideration is not established This is a pure finding of fact and nothing has been urged before me to hold that it is vitiated by any error of law or of procedure It was argued that in the judgment the learned Subordinate Judge himself has given expression to his idea that probably no consideration for the deed had been paid I may point out that the learned Subordinate Judge in the very next sentence states that though he suspected it there is no good evidence on the record to prove it. I therefore, hold that the sale-deed in dispute is a valid deed for consideration. My finding, therefore, is that the sale-deed dated 17th October 1924 is a deed for consideration and one executed by Sita Ram with his free will and consent, and therefore valid and operative in law.

Jurisdiction —On this point the learned Subordinate Judge has held that because the plaintiffs-appellants filed their objections on 10th August 1927, and not on 13th July 1927, the date fixed in the proclamation for filing objections, they were beyond time and the revenue Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the objections and to refer the plaintiffs-appellants on the grounds of those objections to get the question of title decided by the civil Court. I have heard the arguments at length on this point and have come to the conclusion that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point cannot be maintained.

The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Mukhtar Ahmad v. Barati Lal (1) for the proposition that where a statute confers jurisdiction upon a tribunal of limited authority the conditions and qualifications under which that jurisdiction has to be exercised must be directly complied with. There is no doubt that the principle laid down in that case is true, and on the basis of this authority I would be prepared to hold that a revenue Court is not entitled to entertain an objection raising a question of proprietary title if not filed at the proper time. What is proper time must, however, be determined according to the facts and circumstances of each case. The general rule which had been laid down by the Allahabad High Court as well as by this Court in regard to objections filed under S 111, United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, is to the effect that if a date is fixed in the proclamation for filing objections and proclamation is duly served upon a party to the partition proceedings and the case is taken up on the date fixed in the proclamation and no objection is filed on that date and the case proceeds, it would not be open to any party to file objections raising a question of proprietary title at any future time If, however, the proclamation has not been served upon a party to the partition proceedings and the case is not taken up on the date fixed in the proclamation and the proceedings are adjourned to another date, on which date the objections are filed, it cannot be held that they have not been filed at the proper time and should not be entertained by the revenue Court.

In Tulsi Prasad v. Matru Mal (2) objections were filed not on the day specified in the proclamation for filing of such objections, but on the next day before the revenue Court took any action in the case and it was held that the law as laid down did not cover a case in which objections were filed after the date fixed in the proclamation for filing objections but before the Court took any proceedings in the partition case.

In Rudan Singh v. Kala Singh (3) my brother Raza, J. has taken the same view. In that case he has held that where an objection is raised after the appointed time but before the revenue Court has taken any steps under S. 111, United Provinces Land Revenue Act, the revenue Court is not precluded from dealing with such an objection and if it does deal with it, its decision will be considered to be one under S. 111, Land Revenue Act. From the facts of this case it appears that the case could not be taken up on 13th July 1927, but had been adjourned once to 30th July 1927, and then to 10th August 1927, when the objections were actually filed It is also admitted before me that the revenue Court had not taken any action in the case. Under these circumstances I do not agree with the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the revenue Court had no jurisdiction in the present case to entertain the objections filed by the plaintiffs-appellants and that the order of the revenue Court referring them to the civil Court was an order passed without jurisdiction.

Limitation. — On the question of limitation also I regret I cannot agree with the view of the Courts below. It is admitted that the article laying down limitation for a suit like the present is that laid down in Art. 91, Limitation Act That article provides that for getting a deed cancelled or set aside on the ground of undue influence or fraud the limitation should be three years running from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that although Sita Ram must be considered to possess the knowledge of the facts entitling him to get the deed cancelled from the date of the execution of the sale-deed and although the limitation would run against him from that very date, yet it would be a different case so far as the plaintiffs-appellants were concerned, since they had no knowlege of the facts under which the deed was executed. I regret I cannot agree with this view. The word "plaintiff" has been defined in S 2, Cl. (8), Limitation Act, 1908, as including any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue. It is clear that the plaintiffs-appellants are the next heirs of Sita Ram and if Sita Ram possessed knowledge of particular facts which would entitle him to bring the suit, that knowledge must be considered as one attributable to the plaintiffs of the present case as well. It is admitted that so far as Sita Ram was concerned limitation against him ran from the date of the execution of the sale deed, since he must be presumed to possess knowledge of all the facts and circumstances, which would enable him to bring the present suit. It is provided in S. 9, Limitation Act, 1908, that where once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it. It, therefore, appears to me that if Sita Ram had remained alive and if he had brought the present suit on 22nd November 1927, his suit would have been time barred, since the sale-deed in dispute had been executed on 17th October 1924. If Sita Ram's suit would have been barred I fail to see that the suit of the plaintiffs who claim this property as heirs of Sita Ram should not be held also to be barred.

(2) [1896] 18 All. 210=(1896) A. W. N. 90.
(3) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 309.

In Janki Kunwar v. Ajit Singh (4) a case which went up to their Lordships of the Privy Council from the province of Oudh, their Lordships held that where a suit had been brought to get a deed cancelled on the ground of fraud and undue influence, the fact must be considered to have been known to the executant from the date of the deed and if brought more than three years from that the suit could not be considered to be maintainable. Their Lordships observed that if all the facts were known to a particular plaintiff and if he was a man not incapable of having that knowledge and of allowing it to operate on his mind, the case would clearly come within the provisions of Art. 91 and if brought after more than three years that would be sufficient to decide the suit. I would, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs-appellants' suit was rightly dismissed by the Courts below.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The holder of a rent-decree is always a secured creditor. The mere fact that the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent prior to the passing of decree does not save limitation and the application for execution made after 3 years is time barred. [P 72 C 1]

P. N. Chaudhri—for Appellant.

Gopal Chandra Sinha — for Respondent 2.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise out of the two orders of the District Judge of Fyzabad both dated 30th April 1928, holding that the applications for execution of decree filed by the appellant are time barred. The facts of the case are that the appellant Thakurain Sri Ram Kuar holds two decrees against the respondent Gur Prasad and Lachhmi Nath for arrears of rent. One of these decrees was passed on 23rd May 1921 and the other was passed on 4th August 1921. The respondents Gur Prasad and Lachhmi Nath were adjudged insolvents in 1917 prior to the date when the two aforesaid decrees were obtained by the appellant against them. The first application for execution was filed by the appellant on 21st March 1927, but it was dismissed for want of prosecution on 7th September 1927. Subsequently on 1st October 1927 the appellant filed the present applications for execution from which the present appeals arise. Both Courts below have held that the two execution applications filed by the appellant are time barred since they were made more than three years after the date of the passing of the decree.

In appeal it is contended on behalf of the appellant that the decision of the Courts below is wrong and the execution applications now filed by the appellant are within limitation inasmuch as the execution of these decrees must be considered to have been stopped, since the respondents were insolvent. We regret we cannot accept this contention It is admitted on behalf of the appellant that she is a secured creditor. Under S. 28 sub-S (6) the insolvency proceedings are not to affect the power of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if no order of adjudication had been made. It is, therefore, clear that the fact the respondents were adjudged insolvents could not have prevented the appellant from obtaining the decree or putting it into execution and under these circumstances no question of exclusion of any period of limitation at all arises The learned advocate for the appellant admits that the applications for execution which have given rise to the present appeals were made more than three years from the date of the passing of those decrees

We are, therefore, of opinion that the execution of the decrees is time-barred and the Courts below were correct in dismissing those applications on the ground of limitation The appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs

Gokaran Nath Misra, J.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants to tain property which had been redeemed by one of their co-mortgagors and the dispute in appeal relates merely to the amount of the share which they are entitled to recover. The facts of the case are that on 5th June 1915 a mortgage was executed by three persons, namely, Padarath, father of plaintiff 1, Mt. Bariari plaintiff 2 and one Ram Sukh, in favour of one Rampath for a consideration of Rs 225 The mortgage was one with possession. Ram Sukh died and his heir-at-law Sita Ram who was defendant 1 in the present case redeemed the entire mortgage Although Sita Ram was the heir-at-law of Ram Sukh yet it appears that the mutation of names in respect of the property left by Ram Sukh was not exclusively made in favour of Sita Ram but a portion of the property went to the plaintiffs as well in whose favour mutation was granted to that extent. The plaintiffs now claim redemption of the share to the extent that is to be found entered in their name in the khewat. We may also state that the share entered in the khewat was subsequently maintained in an imperfect partition of mahal Lalai, village Purai, Brahmachari, hamlet of Wazirganj, District Gonda, effected in the revenue Courts in the year 1923-1924 The main defence put forward by the defendants-respondents who are the heirs of Sita Ram is to the effect that the entry in the khewat was erroneous since Sita Ram being the nearest heir of Ram Sukh was entitled to his entire property and that the plaintiffs-appellants were not entitled to any share therein The reply urged by the plaintiffs-appellants to this contention raised on behalf of the defendants-respondents was to the effect that this defence was not open to the defendants-respondents inasmuch as the share entered in the khewat had been confirmed by the aforesaid partition which must be deemed to have settled finally the title of the parties in respect of the share so entered.

The learned Munsif of Tarabganj who tried the case held that after the partition of 1923-1924, by virtue of which the plaintiffs had been allotted the share of which they claimed redemption in the present suit, it was not open to the defendants-respondents who were parties to those partition proceedings through their predecessor-in-title Sita Ram to deny perty. In that view of the case he gave a decree for the entire share claimed by the plaintiffs as will appear from his decree dated 20th November 1927.

On appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda has taken a different view and has given the plaintiff a decree only in respect of that share which was their personal property and has dismissed their suit in respect of the additional share which has been allotted to their name after the death of Ram Sukh and in respect of which their claim had been confirmed at the time of partition The result was that he decreed redemption to the plaintiffs of only a portion of the property claimed subject to the payment of a proportionate sum of money This was the order embodied in his decree dated 25th February 1928 The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court and originally the case came on for hearing before a single Judge of this Court who has referred it for decision to a Bench of two Judges. The case has now been laid before us The case has been argued at great length and we have come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed and the decree passed by the learned Munsif must be restored We now proceed to give our reasons for our decision.

It appears that on 20th March 1923 the plaintiffs-appellants filed an application in the revenue Court for an imperfect partition of mahal Lalai named above and prayed that a 7-annas odd share which was entered opposite their name in the khewat should be separated from the rest of the mahal (vide Ex 15) On receipt of this application for partition the revenue Court issued a proclamation calling upon all the recorded cosharers including Sita Ram, who was one of them, to appear and to file any objections which they might deem necessary to make. The date fixed in the proclamation for making objections was the 21st May 1923 (vide Ex. 20). On the date fixed, namely, the 21st May 1923 Sita Ram filed an objection but never raised any question of title which he seems to have subsequently raised. In the objections then filed he admitted the title of the plaintiffs to the extent of the share entered in the khewat but prayed that pattis should be formed on partition in a particular way (vide Ex. 16). On 22nd May 1923 an order was passed by the revenue Court that the pattis should be prepared in accordance with the khewat as desired by the applicant (vide Ex. 17). It appears that subsequently on the 27th and 28th June 1923 Sita Ram filed another objection in which one cosharer also joined with him. In that objection he challenged the accuracy of the entry in the khewat (vide Ex. 19) The revenue Court rejected the second objection on 3rd August 1923 on the ground that it had been filed too late The partition then proceeded and three pattis were formed two of which are owned by the plaintiffs and a third was owned by Sita Ram. On 23rd June 1924 Thakur Sardar Singh, Deputy Commissioner confirmed the partition which awarded to the plaintiffs the share equivalent in extent to what was entered opposite their names in the mutation proceedings

It is urged in appeal before us on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the defendants-respondents cannot now be allowed to urge an objection which would reduce the share allotted to them at the time of partition and S. 233 (k), U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, was relied upon for the purpose. Several decisions of this Court as well as of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and also of the Allahabad High Court have been relied upon by the plaintiffs-appellants in support of the proposition that once a particular share is allotted to a party during the course of partition proceedings it is not open to any person who was a party to those partition proceedings to challenge the accuracy of such an award since such objections would alter the distribution effected at the time of partition On behalf of the respondents it is contended that since the partition was only an imperfect one and since one single mahal had been partitioned into several pattis the provisions of S 233 (k) could not apply. We regret we cannot accept either of the contentions of the respondents and must hold that the objection raised on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants must prevail.

As to the first objection we must point out that the contention embodied therein receives no support whatever when we refer to S 106, U. P. Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901). When we refer to that section we find that partition has been defined to mean a division of a mahal or of a part of mahal into two or more portions each consisting of one or more shares It is laid down in the case of "imperfect partition," the several portions remain jointly responsible for the revenue assessed on the whole mahal whereas in the case of a "perfect partition" the whole mahal is divided and the several portions became separate mahals each severally responsible for the revenue distributed thereon It is laid down in the same section that the procedure prescribed in Ch 7 in which the section finds its place shall be followed in all partitions whether imperfect or perfect unless it is otherwise expressly declared Referring to S. 111 which is a section of the same chapter laying down the procedure which is to be followed by the revenue Court when any objection is raised before it by a recorded cosharer which involves a question of proprietary title which has not been already determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, we find that the procedure prescribed is that the revenue Court may either decline to grant the application for partition until the question raised has been determined by a competent Court or may require any party to the case to institute within three months of the date of its order a suit in the civil Court for the determination of such question or may itself proceed to inquire into the merits of this objection. S. 112 further provides that all decrees passed by the revenue Court when it chooses to decide itself the question of proprietary title raised in the objection shall be held to be equivalent to a decree of a civil Court and shall be final between the parties unless appealed to the higher authorities.

It would, therefore, clearly appear that all the orders which relate to the question of title and are passed by a revenue Court if it chooses to pass such an order must be considered to be binding upon the parties whether in the course of the said partition proceedings the partition effected is imperfect or perfect It was urged on behalf of the respondents that no such decision has been arrived at in this case by the revenue Court. This argument cannot be accepted inasmuch as a party to a partition proceeding if he does not choose to file any objection raising the question of proprietary title at the proper time and his objection is consequently dismissed must be deemed to have raised the question and got an adjudication thereof adversely to himself.

It, therefore, appears to us to be clear that under the provisions of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901) there is no difference so far as the point before us is concerned, between the case of a perfect and imperfect partition. We are supported in this view by a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Raghubir v Tulshi Ram (1). It was held by Chamier, J., in that case that the provisions of Ss. 110, 111 and 112, United Provinces Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), applied to imperfect partitions as well and the rule laid down by the various authorities that where a decision relating to a question of title has been either expressly or impliedly arrived at during the course of partition proceedings, it is no more open to any party thereto to challenge that decision subsequently, applies to cases both of perfect partition as well as imperfect partition. The law relating to the effect of partition proceedings has been very clearly laid down in a recent decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Baijnath Singh v. Rajju Singh (2) to which one of us was a party, where the whole law is discussed and it is sufficient for us to state that we are in full agreement with the view expressed in that case.

As to the second objection we are of opinion that it is equally untenable and that the question is concluded by a recent authority In this connexion we may refer to a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Shiam Kunwar v Fateh Singh (3), to which one of us was also a party. The question now urged before us on behalf of the defendants-respondents that the restriction laid down in S 233 (k), United Provinces Land Revenue Act, applies only where several mahals are partitioned and not where one single mahal is partitioned, was raised in that very case and we need only quote a portion of the judgment which deals with this point:

'We must therefore proceed to examine that language. The prohibition is in the following words: "No person shall institute any suit or other proceedings in the civil Court with respect to partition or union of mahal.' The difficulty in interpretation is stated to be the absence of the words "part of a mahal" in the above clause. In our opinion the difficulty is only apparent and not real. It will be noticed that in Cl. (k), S. 233, the heading of Chap. 7, Land Revenue Act is quoted with the change of "or" for "and." A reference to Chap. 7, will show that the words "of mahals" govern only the word "union" and not the word "partition."

(1) [1915] 13 A. L. J. 548=29 I. C. 222.
(2) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 101.
(3) A. I. R. 1921 Oudh 144=24 O. C. 268.

"Partition is given a special meaning and standing by itself means the division of a mahal or of a part of mahal into two or more portions (S. 106) The heading therefore if written in an explanatory manner would convey the meaning that Ch. 7 deals with the division of a mahal or of a part of a mahal and with union of mahals. It will be noticed if we read through Ch. 7 that the word partition has been given throughout the chapter this special meaning and that nowhere the words "partition of mahal" are used. The word "union" has no special meaning assigned to it in the Act. Similarly in Cl. (k) S. 233, the words "of mahals" qualify the word "union" only and not the word "partition" which has the special meaning of S. 106 of a division as mahal or of part of a mahal into two or more portions."

"If the jurisdiction of the civil Court is not barred in the case of the partition of a portion of a mahal, parties may get a whole mahal partitioned by a civil Court in two suits covering two portions thereof. The exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil Court is necessary for the partition of a mahal to enforce the important provision of S. 103, Land Revenue Act, that Collector can stop a partition independently of the wishes of the cosharers of a mahal to the contrary. The power of a Collector, which it is desirable to maintain to facilitate the collection of revenue will disappear if partition of a portion of a mahal by the civil Court is permitted."

We are in full agreement with the remarks quoted above, and are of opinion that all questions of title whether expressly or impliedly decided during the course of partition proceedings are binding upon all cosharers who are parties to the partition proceedings whether the partition relates to several mahals or one single mahal or the portion of one mahal

The learned counsel for the defendants-respondents relied very much upon a case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council which will be found reported in Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh (4). We have examined that case carefully and it appears to us that it does not in any way help the respondents. In that case it is true that their Lordships observed on p 292 that the effect of the partition was that the village had been divided into two thoks, one of which was divided between the parties to that suit in almost equal proportions and that the shares of no other persons were affected by the partition order. But this does not in any way warrant the inference that where the effect of a suit was to deal only with the entity of an entire mahal the restriction laid down in S. 233 (k) could not be applied. It appears to us to be quite clear that the defence raised by the respondents clearly purports to affect the share which has been allotted to the plaintiffs-appellants. It is no doubt true that the shares of the plaintiffs as well as of the defendants are situate within one entire mahal but that would be no ground for saying that the shares allotted to each of them are not to be disturbed if the objection of the defendants-appellants is held to prevail.

We may further point out that in the case quoted above their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed the civil suit to prevail because it had been agreed upon between the parties during the course of partition proceedings that the partition was to be effected for the present according to possession and that it was to remain open to the parties to get the question of title decided by means of a separate suit filed in a competent Court. It is obvious that no such agreement was arrived at in the present case and consequently the ruling quoted above cannot apply to the facts of the present case. We are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda cannot be maintained. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif with costs in all the three Courts.

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C J.—I agree that the appeal should be allowed and the decree of the trial Court restored. My views on the question of finality of partition proceedings arising under Ch. 7. U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, have been expressed twice before, once in the case of Shiam Kunwar v. Fateh Singh (3) and on the second occasion in the case of Baij Nath Singh v Rajju Singh (2)

Judgment —These two sets of appeals arise out of execution proceedings in one and the same case The first four appeals, namely, appeals Nos. 40, 41, 44 and 45 arise out of four applications filed by the objectors respondents under S 47, Civil P C , and disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda by his order, dated 2nd March 1928. The second four appeals, namely appeals Nos. 39, 42, 43 and 46 arise out of a similar set of four objections filed by the objectors respondents under Ss 47 and 144, Civil P. C,, and disposed of by the same learned Judge by his order dated 2nd May 1928 It is admitted by the parties that our decision in the first four appeals will govern the decision of the second set of four appeals. The facts are that one Bismillah Khan owned certain properties some of which were situate in the district of Gonda in Oudh and others in the district of Basti in the province of Agra He died leaving one son Mohammad Khan and four daughters After the death of Bismillah Khan his son Mohammad Khan entered into possession of the entire property to the exclusion of the other heirs On 16th February 1915 he mortgaged some of the properties to the respondents or their ancestors This was a mortgage with possession. The objectors respondents are the mortgagees in possession under the said mortgage On the 13th July 1915 the three daughters of Bismillah Khan and the heirs of the fourth daughter who had died in the meanwhile brought four separate suits in the Court of of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Basti against Mohammad Khan for recovery of their share in the property left by Bismillah Khan and the respondents to whom some of the property had been mortgaged under the deed of 16th February 1925 Mohammad Khan confessed judgment in that case and a compromise was arrived at between the plaintiffs in that case and one of the transferees. The suits were, however, dismissed against the other transferees on the ground that the plaintiffs were excluded from inheritance On 11th July 1925 possession was obtained in execution proceedings in respect of the properties decreed to plaintiffs of the four suits against Mohammad Khan So far there is no dispute

The plaintiff's also, however, obtained in execution proceedings possession over the properties which had been transferred by Mohammad Khan and in respect of which the suit of the four plaintiffs had been dismissed against the transferees The transferees then instituted four different suits in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula, District Gonda, for recovery of possession of the properties of which the appellant had taken possession unlawfully. The suits were dismissed by the learned Munsif on 12th August 1926 on the ground that they were not maintainable in view of the provisions of S 47, Civil P. C., 1908. This decision was affirmed in appeal by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda on 28th March 1927. The matter was carried further in appeal to this Court and the decision of this Court will be found to be reported in Taluqdar

Khan v. Mt. Khairunnissa (1) This Court agreed with the decision of the Courts below that separate suits filed by the respondents in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula were not maintainable but it held that the suits should not have been dismissed but treated as objections under S. 47, Civil P C, and directed that the plaints in those suits should be treated as proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C, and as such they directed that the objections should be filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda to whose Court the decrees had been transferred for execution by the Court at Basti

The four suits have now been treated by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda as application under S 47. Civil P C, and have been disposed of as such. Two objections were taken by the appellant in the Court below regarding the said objections, they being to the effect that the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda had no jurisdiction to entertain objections under S 47, Civil P C, and that the objections were barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge of Gonda overruled both the contentions of the appellants and has allowed the objections of the respondents and the present appeals are against the said order We might also state that besides the four objections which have been decided by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda by his order dated 2nd March 1928 and which related to the property situate in village Baondihar, perganna Utraula, district Gonda, four other objections were filed under Ss 47 and 144, Civil P C, relating to the property situate in village Sikhoia Kalan, perganna Utraula, district Gonda These objections have also been allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda by his order dated 2nd May 1928 which has given rise to the four appeals Nos 39, 42, 43 and 46. In both sets of appeals the same contentions have again now been urged on behalf of the appellants We now proceed to deal with each of those contentions.

The first contention as stated above relates to the question of jurisdiction The contention put forward on behalf of the appellants is to the effect that the Gonda Court had no jurisdiction to deal with these objections since the said Court had sent back the execution file to the Court at Basti after certifying under S. 41, Civil P C., that the decree had been completely executed. The argument was that the Gonda Court must be deemed to have been left with no jurisdiction in the execution matter after it had sent back the decree to the Court at Basti. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Shiam Lal v Koerpal (2) In our opinion this contention has no force. Although the Court at Gonda had ceased to have jurisdiction to further execute the decree it had not ceased to have jurisdiction to decide an objection relating to the execution proceedings taken in that Court In the Allahabad case quoted above the point decided was that the proper Court to which an application for execution should be made is the Court to which a decree is transferred for execution under S 39, Civil P C, until the Court to which the decree is transferred issues a certificate under S. 41 of the Code and returns the copy of the decree to the original Court, and that after the issue of a certificate the Court to which the decree was transferred ceases to have jurisdiction We are in entire agreement with the proposition enunciated in the said ruling. In our opinion, however, the case cannot be considered to be an authority for the proposition which is now for decision before us. The Court at Gonda may have ceased to have jurisdiction for the purpose of issuing a fresh process for execution but that cannot mean that the said Court has also ceased to have jurisdiction to decide an objection lodged before it in respect of anything done in the course of the execution proceedings taken by it. Indeed we have no hesitation in holding that that would be the only proper Court to decide the objection in regard to such a matter. We therefore hold that the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda has got jurisdiction to decide the two sets of objections lodged by the respondents in that Court.

The second contention is to the effect that these two sets of objections are barred by time It is admitted that possession was wrongly delivered to the appellants on 11th July 1925 and one set of objections was filed on 7th November

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 98.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 All. 179.

1927 and the other set of objections was filed on 3rd December 1927. The contention raised on behalf of the appellants is to the effect that Art. 165, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, 1908, applies to both these sets of objections and they are time barred, having been filed after one month of the date of the delivery of possession The reply on behalf of the respondents is to the effect that Art 165 does not apply to the present sets of objections and that the article applicable is Art. 181 under which three years' period is allowed. The sole point, therefore, for decision is whether Art 165 is applicable or Art. 181. On behalf of the appellants reliance is placed on two rulings of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, one reported in Jagan Nath v. Datta (3) and the other in Raja Ram v. Itraj Kunwar (4). On behalf of the respondents reliance is placed upon the decisions reported in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa (5); Vachali Rohini v. Kandi Kombi Aliassan (6); Rasul v. Amina (7) and Sharfu v. Mir Khan (8). We have heard the counsel of the parties at great length on this question and have come to the conclusion that in view of the recent decisions of the various High Courts in India, the view of law taken by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the two cases quoted above must be deemed as incorrect. Art. 165 runs as follows:

|---|---|---|
| Under the Code of Civil Procdure, 1908, by a person dispossessed of immovable property, and disputing the right of the decree-holder or purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree to be put into possession. | Thirty days. | The date of the dispossession. |

From the wordings of the said article it is clear that it is only applicable to the case of an application which is filed under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, by a person dispossessed of immovable property and disputing the right of the decree-holder to be put into possession thereof

(8) [1919] 1 L. L. J. 220.

Turning back to the Code of Civil Procedure we find that provision is only made in the Code for such an application under O. 21, R 100. It is admitted that an application under that rule is to be made by a person other than the judgment-debtor as is clear from the wordings of the rule itself If therefore the application contemplated by Art 165 is the one mentioned in O. 21, R 100, it is clear that the applicant must be one other than the judgment-debtor If the judgment-debtor wishes to file an objection his remedy is clearly to apply under S. 47, Civil P C., and the limitation applicable in such a case would be one provided for by Art. 181 Lim. Act This is the view taken by their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa (5), and we are in full agreement with the following observation of their Lordships in the said case to be found at pp. 344 and 345 :

"Now that is a precise and compendious description of the right given and the application allowed to person other than the judgment-debtor by O. 21, Rr. 100 and 101. It certainly applies to such an application and there is no other provision in the Code which in the terms it employs at all corresponds to it. We think it quite certain that when the legislature enacted Art. 165, it had the provisions now contained O. 21, R. 100 in mind. That is to say, it intended Art. 165 to apply to such an application. The argument for the view adopted in the reported cases, and followed by the District Judge in the case is that the words are wide enough to include a judgment-debtor. Separated from their context this is true. A judgment-debtor is a 'person' in such a case as this. Moreover, the judgment-debtor in his application under S. 47 is complaining of the same sort of act as an applicant under O. 21, R. 100 would have to complain of. But the moment it is realized that what the schedule to the Limitation Act consists of is an enumeration of suits, appeals and applications of various kinds, and that the language of Art. 165 is merely a definition or description, all difficulty as to the use of the word 'person' disappears. In our opinion the word 'person' in that context, although wide enough to include a debtor, was never used in any other sense than that of a person who is authorized by O. 21, R. 100 to make an application of that description. To hold otherwise would result in this, that if a judgment-debtor applied to the Court under O. 21, R. 100 and adopted the language of Art. 165, his application would have to be dismissed because he is precluded from making an application of that description, and yet if he postpones applying under S. 47 for more than thirty days the language of the article is to be applied to him. If anything were required outside the context in which the article is used, to assist us to an interpretation of it, we should be entitled, indeed in our opinion we should be bound, to recognize, that to hold as has been held by the District Judge in this case involves depriving the judgment-debtors for ever of all title to a considerable portion of immovable property because they did not make a summary application with regard to its seizure within thirty days. Such a result in the case of a person already in straitened circumstances appears to us to be something which it is safe to assume that the legislature never intended and which it certainly never enacted in direct terms."

The view taken in the Allahabad case has also been adopted by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the decision reported in Vachali Rohini v. Kandi Kombi Aliassan (6) and by their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Rasul v Amina (7) and by their Lordships of the Lahore High Court in Sharfu v Mir Khan (8) We are in entire agreement with the view of law taken in those cases It is not necessary for us to criticize in detail the view taken in the two decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh which we have quoted above The case reported in Raja Ram v Rani Itraj Kunwar (4) was considered in the case reported in Abdul Karim v Islam-un-nissa (5) The view followed in the former case was based upon two decisions one of the Madras High Court reported in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (9) and the other reported in Har Din Singh v. Lachman Singh (10). The former case has been overruled in Vechali Rohini v. Pathalathum Kandi Kombi Aliassan (6) quoted above and the latter case has been dissented from in Abdul Karim v Islam-unnissa (5). We are therefore of opinion that the limitation provided in Art. 165, Lim. Act, does not govern the cases of those applications which were filed by the parties to the suit as objections to the execution proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C It has already been decided by this Court that the appellants being parties to the suit were not competent to bring fresh suits and that the suits brought by them must be treated as objections filed under S. 47, Civil P. C. In these circumstances Art. 165 cannot be held to be applicable in their case and the only article which could be applied is Art. 181. That article prescribes a period of three years for an application from the date when the right to apply accrues. It is clear that the right to apply must be deemed to have accrued to the respondents in the present case on 11th July 1925 when possession was wrongly delivered to the appellants. The present objections were filed in 1927 and are therefore amply within limitation. We are therefore of opinion that the contentions raised by the appellants as to limitation must also be overruled. Having decided the two contentions against the appellants the order of the learned Subordinate Judge in both sets of objections must be affirmed. The appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

Second Rent Appeal No 22 of 1928, Decided on 7th November 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 9th February 1928

Oudh Rent Act, S. 127 (2)—Order of ejectment passed without rent decree is not separately appealable.

Where a decree for ejectment passed along with a rent decree under S. 127 (2) is against a person who is not a tenant but who is treated as such for the purposes of S. 127 (1) the decree is one under S. 108 (2) and is appealable to civil Courts. No separate appeal lies against the order of ejectment. [P 80 C 1]

Moti Lal Saksena—for Appellant.

S N. Roy—for Respondent

Judgment.—This appeal has been referred to a Bench by a Single Judge of this Court on the ground that it raises a point which has not yet been decided, namely, whether an appeal purporting to be under S 127, Oudh Rent Act, and raising the question of ejectment lies to a civil or to a revenue Court. S. 127, Oudh Rent Act deals with the case of a person who retains possession of land without a title and who may be treated by the landlord as a tenant and sued for rent. The second clause of the section shows that the decree for rent passed in such a case will be under S. 108, Cl. (2) of the Act and will be followed, on the application of the plaintiff, by a decree for ejectment It has been argued that a decree for ejectment is not appealable to a civil Court, but we are unable to find that an order of ejectment passed under S 127, Cl. (2) is in any way appealable. It is merely a consequential relief following upon a decree for arrears of rent passed in the case of a person who is not a tenant but has been treated as a tenant for the purposes of S 127, Cl (1) The decree in such a case is one under S 108 (2) which is appealable to the civil Courts, and there is no separate appeal against the order of ejectment.

The only other question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is the zamindar of the land in suit and entitled to sue the defendants for arrears of rent On this point there is a clear finding of fact by the Courts below that one Pirthi Singh, another cosharer, is the landlord of these defendants and that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the land in question came into his share by partition. As there has been a partition the fact that he is a lambardar does not help him In our opinion this suit has been rightly decided by the Courts below, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

(a) Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1861), S. 24—Allowance received out of income of certain lands with the acquiescence of successive holders for many years — Allowance is a charge on these lands.

The fact that allowance has been enjoyed for more than three-quarters of a century and had been received during all that time out of the income of certain lands with the acquiescence of successive holders is a fact which goes to justify the conclusion that there is valid grant of maintenance which is a charge on those lands : 30 Mad. 203 and *A. (b) Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1861), Schedule—Confiscation by Lord Canning's proclamation — Restoration of full proprietary rights involved restoration of under-proprietary rights also.

The effect of Lord Canning's proclamation is that the whole of the rights in the soil of Oudh, with the exception of the estates specially exempted, passed from the former owners and became the property of the Crown. The confiscation did not vest the rights in any one It vested the rights in the Crown. The Crown becoming the absolute owner, all subordinate rights ceased to exist. But when the Crown restored full proprietary rights, the restoration of full proprietary rights involved automatically the restoration of the rights of subordinate proprietors which had originally been held by them against the former proprietor. *A I. Judgment — This is a defendant's appeal against a decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Sitapur dated 21st March 1927, by which he awarded a sum of over seven thousand rupees with future interest and proportionate costs to the plaintiffs He further declared that the amount decreed should be a charge upon certain villages. The facts are as follows: Raja Ratan Singh was the holder of the Katesar estate in the Sitapur and Kheri districts He died in 1850 and was succeeded by his son Sheo Bakhsh Singh Sheo Bakhsh Singh was recognized in 1858 as the proprietor of the estate and his name was entered as taluqdar in respect of the estate in the lists prepared under Act 1 of 1869 His name appears as the 83rd name in List 1 and 31st name in List 2 Raja Sheo Bakhsh Singh died in 1882. He was succeeded by his widow Pirthipal Kaur, who is still in possession of the Katesar estate. The Court of Wards assumed management of the estate, it is said, about 1896. The allegation on behalf of the plaintiffs was that Raja Ratan Singh had in addition to his legitimate son Sheo Bakhsh Singh who succeeded him, an illegitimate son called Jang Bahadur. The mother of the latter is said to have been a Mohammadan and the descendants of Jang Bahadur are Mohammadans. According to the plaintiffs' allegation Raja Ratan Singh executed on a date corresponding to 20th August 1830, a sanad (Ex 27) by which he assigned to Jang Bahadur the village of Aguapur in the Sitapur District and a monthly stipend of Rs. 200 for his household expenses. (After discussing evidence the judgment proceeded) We therefore arrive at a preliminary finding that this sanad is proved to have been executed by Ratan Singh on a date corresponding to 20th August 1830. The next question to be determined is whether under this sanad these particular plaintiffs are entitled to the share allowed to them by Mahomedan law in the monthly allowance. The portion of the sanad affecting this question is translated by us in the following words We have varied the translation in the paper book as that translation is, in our opinion, misleading

"Ratan Singh grants "on account of the maintenance of my beloved" (barkhurdar equivalent to son) "Jang Bahadur the village of Aguapur and Rs. 200 a month for household expenses including those of his descendants and dependants. The grant to be from generation to generation. All the village expenses, land revenue and cesses of the aforesaid village shall be borne by the estate, and when the necessity arises the grantee shall continue to take other expenses from the estate."

We can only construe this as a grant of a monthly maintenance of Rs. 200 to be paid out of the profits of the Taluqa property, and to be paid to Jang Bahadur during his lifetime and to his heirs after his death We are asked to consider it as an undertaking on behalf of Ratan Singh, which could not affect any one except Ratan Singh personally; but according to our view, such a construction is impossible in view of the fact that the grant was to be from generation to generation Ratan Singh could not be in a position personally to continue the grant from generation to generation and, as it was his clear intention that the grant should be continued, the grant could only be paid out of the profits of the property. It is true that there is no direct condition that the Rs. 200 a month are to be paid out of the profits of the property. But it is noticeable that, whereas Rs 200 a month are to be paid for ordinary household expenses, the grantor continues that the grantee and descendants are also to be paid extraordinary expenses and it is stated explicitly that these extraordinary expenses are to be paid out of the profits of the estate. The condition permitting the grantee to recover extraordinary expenses from the profits of the estate leads us to the conclusion that the grantor intended that the ordinary expenses were also to be met from the profits of the estate to an extent of Rs. 200 a month over and above the profits of Aguapur. In construing this document, we are keeping in mind the fact that the sanad was executed during the Shahi period and that no high standard of draftsmanship can be expected reasonably. It appears to us that it would be wholly incorrect to take the view that, while Ratan Singh directed that the land revenue, cesses and the village expenses of Aguapur and the extraordinary expenses incurred by the grantee should be met out of the profits of the estate, the Rs. 200 a month, which were being paid to supplement the income from Aguapur for the support of his natural son and his natural son's descendants, should not be met out of the profits of the estate but should be a personal liability of himself and of his successors A direction to his heirs to continue the maintenance after his death could not bind them personally and could only bind them in respect of the property which they had received from him. This circumstance affords an additional reason for the view which we adopt We may mention here in passing that it was evidently the intention of Ratan Singh, as is shown by the later part of the sanad, that on his death his son Sheo Bakhsh Singh and Jang Bahadur should succeed jointly to the estate. This intention was never fulfilled as we have already stated. There is some evidence that Jang Bahadur did not wish to press any claim in the presence of Sheo Bakhsh Singh. But apart from that the matter of succession to the estate is concluded, as far as we are concerned, by the action of the British Government in awarding the estate to Sheo Bakhsh Singh. But the circumstance that the desire of Ratan Singh that his son born in wedlock and his natural son should succeed jointly to the estate was not satisfied, in no way affects the validity of the grant Taking this view we consider that the arrears of this monthly allowance are a money charge upon immovable property. In Mana Vikrama Zamorin of Calicut v. Karnavan Gopalan Nair (1), a Bench of the

(1) [1907] 30 Mad. 203.

Madras High Court arrived at the conclusion that the fact that allowance had been enjoyed for more than three-quarters of a century and had been received during all that time out of the income of certain lands with the acquiescence of successive holders was a fact which went to justify the conclusion that there was valid grant of maintenance which was a charge on those lands. Further their Lordships of the Judicial Committee found in Raja of Ramnad v Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (2), that a person, who, having relinquished claim to title to zamindari property, received in lieu of his relinquishment an undertaking from the other side that he should receive Rs 700 a month, had a right to charge the payment of that amount, to either the whole property or a portion of the property. We do not find that in the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sunder Lal v. Ramji Lal (3), which has been cited to us at the Bar, there is anything to support a view contrary to the view which we take.

There a certain person had obtained a specific village in lieu of maintenance and endeavoured to show that he was further entitled to a charge which their Lordships found did not exist. But the decision in Raja of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (2), is an authority in support of the view which we take that, even in absence of words directing that the payment of a certain maintenance should be a charge upon the property, the fact that it is a charge upon the property may be implied from the circumstances of the case and from other portions of the document. Having decided the above points in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents, we have now to consider a further argument. The learned counsel for the appellant has pressed before us an argument that as the whole of the property in Oudh was confiscated to the British Crown under the terms of Lord Canning's proclamation of 15th March 1858, any charge, which was obtained by Jang Bahadur upon the property in question, became extinguished on that date and has never been revived. Upon this point we have little to say, as a similar question was discussed at great length by a Bench of this Court in Sheo Bahadur Singh v. Bishunath Saran Singh (4). There this Court adopted the view, which, we follow here, that the effect of Lord Canning's proclamation was that the whole of the rights in the soil of Oudh, with the exception of the estates specially exempted, passed from the former owners and became the property of the Crown The confiscation did not vest the rights in no one It vested the rights in the Crown The Crown becoming the absolute owner, all subordinate rights ceased to exist. But when the Crown restored full proprietary rights, as it did on the present occasion in respect of the estate of Katesar, the restoration of full proprietary rights involved automatically the restoration of the rights of subordinate proprietors which had originally been held by them against the former proprietor In other words, where proprietary rights were restored the rights of the subordinate proprietors, which had been held against the proprietors before the confiscation, were revived This being the view of the effect of the proclamation taken previously by this Court, it is necessary to apply the principle to the present case. It is true that Jang Bahadur was not a subordinate proprietor; but we are unable to distinguish, on the principle laid down in the former decision, the case of a charge-holder from the case of a subordinate proprietor. It having been found by us that Jang Bahadur would have had a right to enforce the charge against Sheo Bakhsh Singh between the death of Ratan Singh and the date of the proclamation of 1858 and the estate of Katesar having been confiscated in 1858 from Sheo Bakhsh Singh and then restored to Sheo Bakhsh Singh with full proprietary rights, the right of Jang Bahadur to the charge against Sheo Bakhsh Singh revived as soon as the restoration took place. For the above reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Joint possession before dispute—After dispute property kept under attachment till production of partition chitthi—One party producing such chitthi while other giving no evidence as to possession—Former put in possession—Order should not be set aside.

In proceedings under S. 145 the first thing to be decided is whether there is a dispute likely to lead to a breach of peace, and secondly which party of the disputants is in actual possession.

Previously both parties were in joint possession. But after the dispute the property was kept under attachment by order of Court till the parties established their exclusive right to it. Afterwards one of the parties produced the partition chitthi which allotted the disputed property to him, while the other offered no evidence as to possession. The Magistrate put the former in possession.

Held: that the order should not be set aside.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Unless order putting person in possession is illegal or irregular it should not be interfered with.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli, requesting this Court to interfere with the order of a Magistrate passed under S. 145, Criminal P. C. I am inclined to think that the learned Judge who is in these proceedings described as District Judge, as Sessions Judge and District Registrar has slightly confused his respective functions. In order to interfere with the order under S 145 putting one party into possession of certain property I must find that the Magistrate has acted illegally or in an irregular manner. The Magistrate, as a matter of fact has written a long judgment which reads like the judgment of the civil Court. He went into facts which were irrelevant, and made equally irrelevant observations What he had to decide was first whether there was a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace and secondly which party of the disputants was in actual possession of the property. First of all as it was a matter of some urgency he passed an order under S. 145, Cl. 4, placing the property under attachment, and he stated in an order of 12th May which was allowed to go unchallenged that the property was to remain attached until the chitthi, by which he means the allotment of property by partition was registered, and the parties established their exclusive right of making collections. It must be presumed that he thought that the party who established the exclusive right of collection was ipso facto the party in possession. In due course the partition chitthi was registered and the parties came back to Court.

The applicant Balbhaddar Singh offered no evidence of possession and the opposite party Aditya Prasad also offered no evidence, considering no doubt that on the Magistrate's own order of 12th May the registration of chitthi would be held to be proof of possession. The Magistrate undoubtedly took this view and he put Aditya Prasad in possession on the basis of this registered Chitthi The learned Sessions Judge appears to be afraid that this order will affect the rights of the parties in the civil Court, and he also appears to think that it should be set aside because it is a wrong interpretation of his own order as District Registrar; but in reality the order has no such effect. It merely places one of the contesting parties in possession and the party who has been put in possession is the one who alone has any proof of possession. Previously both the parties were in joint possession and as no evidence was offered on behalf of the applicant Balbhaddar Singh to show that the possession rested with him, and there is at least the evidence of the registration of the partition chitthi to show that the possession rests with Aditya Prasad, I am unable to see that the order is one which, however badly expressed, should be set aside. The papers may be returned.

Where there has been no division of shares between tenants, they must be regarded as tenants-in-common and where one tenant-in-common sues another tenant-in-common for the recovery of money received by him in excess of his share, the suit is governed by Art. 120 and not by Art. 62 : *S. Ghulam Hasan and D. K. Seth—for Appellants.

Radha Krishna—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The suit to which this second appeal relates was brought by one B. Hanuman Prasad against his brother B. Manna Lal and the latter's son B. uraj Narain asking for an account to be taken and his share of profits awarded to him which had accrued from the theka of two villages obtained in the name of himself and B. Suraj Narain from the Court of Wards The suit was defended first on the ground that the leases were benami and were really executed in favour of B. Manna Lal, his son and brother being merely benamidars, and the second principal ground of defence was a plea of limitation as against some of the money collected in respect of these leases. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance for a sum of Rs. 1296-15-9 and the appeal was dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge. In second appeal although the question of limitation is put first, two arguments which have been addressed to us are, first that we should hold that the leases were benami ; secondly, that in any case the defendants had not even collected the share of defendant 1 and that there was nothing due from them to the plaintiff and thirdly, that no decree should be passed against Babu Manna Lal who was not one of the lessees. It will be observed that the third ground is in direct contradiction to the first. In our opinion no second appeal lies on the question of benami. The Courts below have found as a fact that these leases were executed in the names of the two persons, who are the lesses, and that they were not in favour of Babu Manna Lal. This is a pure finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The second question as to whether the defendants have or have not collected sufficient to pay the share of defendant 1 may be disposed of as briefly It was never raised in the Court below and it is not raised in the grounds of appeal. We find that the question of collection was gone into by the first Court and it held after consideration of all the evidence first that defendants 1 and 2 were running the business of the leases and secondly that they had collected a certain amount showing a balance to be divided between them and the plaintiff, and for this balance the decree has been passed. Such a finding cannot be challenged in this Court. As to the liability of B. Manna Lal, that also is covered by the finding that B. Manna Lal and his son have been doing the whole business of the leases including naturally the collection of rents. The plea also comes ill from the mouth of the appellant in view of his own defence that he is the real lessee and that the names of his brother and son were entered fictitiously in the leases.

There remains only the question of limitation. It is argued before us that the article of the Limitation Act, applicable to a case of this nature is No. 62. If this were so the period of limitation would be one of three years in respect of each collection and a certain portion of the amount claimed would be no longer recoverable. Art 62 deals with suits

" for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use "

Counsel has been unable to show us any ruling reported in a recognized publication which would make Art. 62 applicable to the present case He has referred us to Select Decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh Lala Bal Makund v. Lala Chandika Pershad (1), which is a case in which there had been a partition in a Hindu family and it was understood at the time of the partition that the member or members of the family to whom a particular village was allotted should be entitled to the arrears which might be due from the tenants at the time of partition. In spite of this agreement the lambardar took bonds from the tenants for the arrears and thereby obtained money which was not due to him but to the individual cosharers who under the terms of the partition were entitled to collect the rents of those tenants. We have also been referred to another Oudh case reported in Gajraj Singh v. Sadho Singh (2), which also refers to a joint Hindu family where there has been a partition and the individual members were managing their own shares separately. Neither of these cases is applicable to the case of tenants-in-common and where there has been no division of shares between tenants they must be regarded as tenants-in-common As pointed out by the Allahabad High Court in Pursotam Rao Tantia v Radha Bai 3), Art 62 does not apply where the property is managed by one member of a family. But the strongest rulings on the side of the respondents are those of the Madras High Court reported in J Subba Rao v J Rama Rao (4) and Yerukola v Yerukola (5) In the former case the parties were cosharers in a jagir and it was held that a suit brought by one of them was a suit for an account and governed by Art. 120 and not Art 62, Lim Act, and the ratio decidendi is given at p. 295

"The plaintiff cannot claim a share in each individual collection nor can he claim any particular sum at the time of collection from the defendant. All that he is entitled to is an account technically so called. Whether that account is to be rendered once a year or when demanded makes no difference . . . The plaintiff is not entitled to a particular sum from the defendant at the moment he has received it. The article of limitation governing the suit is not therefore Art. 62 "

The second of these rulings being the decision of a Full Bench is of even greater authority. On p 659 the learned Chief Justice points out :

"Article 62 relates to suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. There are technical terms of the law of England used to cover a great variety of cases in which it can be said that the defendant has received money which really belongs to the plaintiff. There is, however ,one case in which that form of action would not lie in England and that is by one tenant-in-common against another who has received more than his share.

And in the concluding portion of his judgment at p. 664 he follows the same line of argument as that which found favour in the earlier ruling of the same Court and applied Art. 120 to the case of tenants-in-common. In our opinion there is no distinction of principle between those cases decided by the Madras High Court and that before us and we consider that this question of limitation is conclusively decided by authority We find that the suit has been rightly decided by the Courts below and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal P C., S 139-A—Existence of evidence to support plea of private road—Magistrate dismissing application and referring complainant to civil Court—Magistrate's course is correct.

Where in proceedings under S. 133 there is evidence to support the plea that the road is a private road, the most that the Magistrate can do is to stay proceedings under the provisions of S. 139-A of the Code and, if the Magistrate dismisses the application and refers the complainant to civil Court, the course taken by the Magistrate would be correct : 42 Cal. 158, Rel. on. [P 86 C 1 ]

Judgment — The learned Sessions Judge, has laid great stress on a passage in the Magistrate's judgment to the effect that the Balrampur estate had admitted that the road in question was a public road. After examination of the record and hearing the arguments of the learned counsel in support of the reference I find that there was nothing approaching to an admission that the road was a public road. In fact the estate adhered from the commencement to the position that the road was not a public road. As there was evidence on both sides as to the road being public or private and there was certainly evidence to support the plea that the road was a private road the most that the Magistrate could have done would have been to stay proceedings under the provisions of S. 139A, Criminal P. C. The law on the subject was discussed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (1). The course which the Magistrate did take was to dismiss the application and refer the complainant to a civil Court. I consider that he took the correct course. Should the civil Court decide that the road is a public road and should the Balrampur estate then offer obstruction to its use proceedings will then be open under S. 133, Criminal P. C. I do not accept this reference and return the record.

Criminal P. C., S. 307—High Court will interfere only when verdict of jury is patently bad and perverse.

Judgment—This is a reference by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of Fyzabad under the provisions of S. 307, Criminal P. C, in a case in which he has disagreed with the verdict of the jury who have found Maharaj Bihari not guilty in a case in which he was tried for forging three money orders. The facts are these. Three money orders were issued as follows: One was issued on 3rd September 1920 from Purnea by a certain Ashutosh Mukerji remitting Rs. 25 to Dharnidhar Ganguly of Ajudhya in the Bankora District. One was issued on 20th October 1920 from Itarsi by Hari Ram directing payment of Rs. 50 to Nana Bapaji of Wai in the Satara District and one was issued on 22nd October 1920 from Pegu by Bhagwati Din remitting Rs. 40 to Ram Suchit Bhuji of Sultanpur. These three money orders were sent by error to the Ajodhya post office of the Fyzabad District, and it is perfectly clear that the lower half of each money order was cut off and that there was pasted to each money order an instruction making each one payable to a certain Nageshwar Tamboli of Raiganj Ajodhya, district Fyzabad. These instructions were admittedly in the handwriting of Maharaj Bihari. In each one the amount payable was correctly recorded. On different dates these money orders were paid to Nageshar Tamboli. He has already been convicted in respect of the receipt of them He has since died It is established beyond possibility of doubt that, on each occasion that the money was paid, Maharaj Bihari was present with Nageshwar Tamboli and witnessed the latter's thumb impression Maharaj Bihari was at the time a young man living in Ajodhya who was continually frequenting the local post office He was permitted, although he was not a member of the department, to work in the post office as an upaid hand, and the prosecution suggest that he took advantage of his position to cut the genuine halves of these money orders, to paste the false instructions on to each and thus to obtain payment to his accomplice Nageshwar Tamboli of the amounts in question. We have been through the evidence on the record and we find that the prosecution have established their case by overwhelming evidence The defence of Maharaj Bihari is that he filled up these instructions, because he was practising filling up instructions to fit himself for possible employment in the postal department, and that he happened accidentally to be with Nageshwar Tamboli when Nageshwar received the amounts, and saw nothing surprising in the fact that the payments were being made upon the dummy instructions which he had been filling in, to perfect himself in the art of making entries on a money order form, the entries being entries which are never made by the post office officials but are made by the remitter. The jury refused to convict upon the evidence.

It is the practice of this Court not to interfere in cases of acquittal by a jury unless the acquittal stands out as patently bad. We have no hesitation in deciding that in this particular case the verdict of the jury is patently bad and perverse. It is more than perverse. It is amazingly perverse. It is hard to understand the mentality of people who could have overlooked such evidence as there was for the prosecution and accepted such defence as was propounded on behalf of Maharaj Bihari There can be no doubt to our minds that on a proper view of the evidence, Mahraj Bihari is guilty. We find him guilty accordingly of the charge under S 467, I. P. C. The fraud was a very serious one. It should be made clear that attempts to tamper with the business of the post office in receiving and paying money orders in order to obtain illicit gain thereby should be dealt with strictly. We sentence Maharaj Bihari to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Ref. No. 42 of 1928, Decided on 30th November 1928, made by the Sess. Judge, Rae Bareli

Criminal P. C., S. 190 (c) — Magistrate making enquiry and reporting the case—Magistrate takes cognizance of the case—Proceedings by the same Magistrate are illegal.

A District Magistrate sent a matter to Sub-Divisional Magistrate for enquiry and report, and, after the report was made, ordered him to try the case himself. No opportunity was given to the accused to be tried by a different Magistrate and he was convicted.

Held : that it was the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case and the proceedings should be quashed as the case should have been tried in another Court. [P 87 C 2]

J. Jackson—for Applicants.

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli for setting aside the conviction in a case of petty theft. The learned Sessions Judge has expressed at length his opinion that the proceedings were illegal. The matter was brought to the notice of the District Magistrate by the Settlement Officer who, as such, was not using magisterial powers. The District Magistrate then sent the matter to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for an inquiry and report. The latter made an inquiry and report that a certain tree had been cut by one Jadunath and that a case should be instituted. Thereupon the District Magistrate ordered the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to try the case himself. The view taken by the Sessions Judge is that, as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took cognizance of the case uhder S. 190 (c), Criminal P. C, he should have given the accused an opportunity to be tried by a different Magistrate. Not only the Sub-Divisional Magistrate not do this, but he refused the application of the accused to have the matter transferred to another Court and the District Magistrate confirmed this view on the erroneous finding that he himself had taken cognizance of the case and not the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. I cannot understand what case it was of which the District Magistrate took cognizance. It cannot have been any case set up by the letter of the Settlement Officer because, if it be held that that letter was a complaint at all, it was a complaint against another person, not Judunath whose trial was ordered

It appears to me that when the matter was given over to the Sub-Divisional Officer for inquiry and he after inquiry decided that the case should proceed, it was he, and nobody else who took cognizance of the case That being so I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the case should have been tried in another Court and I cannot hold, as I have been requested to hold by the Crown, that the accused were not prejudiced by the fact that the case was tried by the Magistrate who had made an inquiry into it. Apart from this there were several other irregularities, in particular the failure of the Magistrate to summon the Settlement Officer as a witness for the defence If, as he said, the complainant told him that the tree was cut by one Lachmi Narain it would be a strong point in the defence of Jadunath who has now been accused of this offence The reasons given by the Magistrate for not calling the Settlement Officer are quite inadequate and his suggestion that the Settlement Officer did not understand Hindi is gratuitous In any case it was a matter which the Settlement Officer should have been able to depose to himself The learned Sessions Judge has suggested a retrial, but considering that the subject of the dispute is a single babul tree I am of opinion that the matter has gone far enough, and that no good object would be served by having this petty case tried again by another Magistrate. I therefore accept the reference and order that the conviction be quashed and the sentence set aside.

Judgment—This is an appeal from the order of 3rd Additional District Judge of Lucknow dated 22nd August 1927 in proceedings relating to the execution of a decree. By the order under appeal the order of the Court of first instance was affirmed.

The facts are as follows:

The village of Aqilpur, pargana Lucknow, was owned by one Lala Behari Lal. On 3rd January 1913 Lala Behari Lal transferred the village just now mentioned by way of a usufructuary mortgage to Lala Jagmohan Das, respondent for a consideration of Rs. 20,000. In pursuance of the morrtgage, it is agreed, the mortgagee entered into the possession of the village of Aqilpur On 12th October 1914 Lala Behari Lal borrowed a sum of Rs 2,000 from Bansidhar appellant and hypothecated the village of Aqilpur by way of security for payment of the loan. On 17th April 1915 Lala Behari Lal sold the village of Aqilpur to one Lala Inder Prasad. The bulk of the purchase money was directed to be paid by the vendee to Lala Jagmohan Das in satisfaction of the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 but was not so paid Lala Jagmohan Das and Lala Indar Prasad are brothers On a partition of the family property in the year 1916 the interest which Lala Indar Prasad had acquired in the village of Aqilpur under the sale of 17th April 1915, was allotted to the share of Lala Jagmohan Das and from that period of time the mortgagee's interest under the mortgage of 3rd January 1913, and the equity of redemption came to be vested in Lala Jagmohan Das.

In the year 1922 Lala Bansidhar brought a suit for the recovery of the mortgage money due to him under the bond of 12th October 1914, and the relief for which prayer was made in that suit was the sale of the village of Aqilpur Lala Jagmohan Das and Lala Behari Lal were impleaded as defendants. In the plaint Lala Bansidhar altogether omitted to make any reference to the mortgage of 3rd January 1913. Lala Jagmohan Das in his written statement disclosed the mortgage. In this state of pleading an issue was framed by the Court for the purpose of making an inquiry as to the existence of the mortgage of 3rd January 1913. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings the issue was struck off on the ground that Lala Jagmohan Das did not desire to press for an inquiry in respect of his mortgage just now mentioned. The result was that a decree for sale of the village of Aqilpur was passed in favour of Lala Bansidhar.

Naturally in the circumstances mentioned above the decree directed the sale of the property without mentioning either that the sale was to be free from incumbrance or that it was to be subject to an incumbrance. When in execution proceedings of this decree a sale proclamation came to be prepared as required by R. 66, O. 21, Civil P. C., Lala Jagmohan Das applied to the Court seised of those proceedings for an entry of the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 to be made in the sale proclamation. The decree-holder, Lala Bansidhar, resisted this application but the Courts below have passed an order in favour of Lala Jagmohan Das directing that the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 be entered in the sale proclamation. It is against this order that the present appeal has been preferred by Lala Bansidhar. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was raised by the learned counsel for the respondent to the effect that no appeal lay and in support of the objection reliance was placed upon a Full Bench decision of the High Court at Madras in the case of Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1). But having regard to the fact that we have heard the appeal on its merits and come to the conclusion that it fails we refrain to express any opinion on the question raised in the preliminary objection.

In support of the appeal two points were urged. (1) That the inquiry into the claim of Lala Jagmohan Das to have the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 entered in the sale proclamation as a prior incumbrance was barred by the rule of res judicata having regard to what had transpired before the passing of the decree, and (2) that the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 was extinguished by reason of the allotment of the village of Aqilpur to the share of Lala Jagmohan Das at the partition of the family property in the year 1916. We are of opinion that there is no substance in either of the two grounds. It appears to us that the conduct of Lala Jagmohan Das in withdrawing the issue which was raised in the suit amounted to no more than an abandonment of a plea which was wholly foreign to the substance of the suit. We cannot construe that act of Lala Jagmohan Das as an abandonment of his rights if he had any under the mortgage of 3rd January 1913. That the plea bearing on that mortgage was wholly unnecessary for the proper decision of that suit is clear from the fact that the suit was brought by the subsequent mortgagee. According to the rules of procedure the prior mortgagee was not a necessary party to the suit and an issue directed towards the inquiry into the existence or validity of a claim on a prior mortgage cannot in the circumstances be treated as an issue directly and substantially arising in the suit. The latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on the point of view which we have just now expressed is to be found in Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hosein (2).

In support of the second ground three circumstances are relied upon for the purpose of showing that Lala Jagmohan Das did not intend to keep alive the incumbrance of 3rd January 1913. Those circumstances are: (1) The act of Lala Jagmohan Das in withdrawing the issue, to which reference has been made in the preceding portion of this judgment; (2) The entry of his name as a proprietor and not as mortgagee also in the khewat of the village for the year 1923-1924, and (3) his statement contained in a security bond which he executed in 1923 to the effect that he was the proprietor of the village of Aqilpur. As to the precise proposition of law bearing on the subject of merger, it is not necessary for us to enter into any elaborate discussion. We have had to state it on previous occasions. It will suffice to refer to two cases, Darshan Singh v Arjun Singh (3) and Hanwant Ram v. Ram Harakh (4). The last mentioned case was decided by this Bench. According to the view of law expressed in the above cases the question must be decided in favour of Lala Jagmohan Das unless the appellant succeeds in showing that it was not for the benefit of Lala Jagmohan Das to keep the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 alive. Now the three circumstances referred to above do not lead to any such conclusion. As to the first, it is enough to say that in no manner it indicates Lala Jagmohan Das's intention to abandon his rights under the mortgage of 3rd January 1913. The abandonment of the issue which had arisen in the suit does not in our opinion as we have already said, amount to an abandonment of rights. As to the second circumstance, the entry in the khewat does not show any intention of Lala Jagmohan Das in respect of the mortgage of 3rd January 1913. The entry is correct so far as it goes but the absence of an entry in the same register to the effect

(1) [1904] 27 Mad. 250=14 M. L. J. 57 (F.B).

(2) A. I. R. 1920 P.C. 81=47 Cal. 662=47 I. A. 11 (P. C.).

(3) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 603.

(4) A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 341.

that Lala Jagmohan Das was also a mortgagee in possession cannot by any stretch of imagination lead to an inference of Jagmohan Das's intention to extinguish his rights under the mortgage in question. The third circumstance is equally of no consequence whatsoever. The security bond merely describes the proprietary interest of Lala Jagmohan Das in the village of Aqilpur. It does not disclose one way or the other as to what his intentions were in respect of his mortgagee's interest in the same village.

Before we take leave of this case we may mention that the question which has at present arisen relates merely to the preparation of the sale proclamation and is as to whether in that proclamation the mortgage of 3rd January 1913 should or should not be shown as a prior incumbrance. We think that it has rightly been held by the Court below that there is no bar to its being so shown and that it should be shown. This is the only effect of the order under appeal and of our order.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Application 32 of 1928, Decided on 8th November 1928, for revision of order of Munsif, Gonda, D/- 17th August 1928.

Provncial Sm. C. C. Act, Art. 35 (2)—Plaintiff depositing money with defendant as bailee—Defendant refusing to return—No allegation in the plaint charging defendant with dishonest conversion etc.—Suit only for damages—Art. 35 (2) does not apply.

Where the only allegation of the plaintiff is that he deposited certain money with the defendant as the bailee but the defendant refused to return the same and there is nothing in the plaint charging the defendant with dishonest misappropriation, dishonest conversion, dishonest use or dishonest disposal, and the suit is only for damages for breach of contract Art. 35 (2) has no application. [P 90 C 2]

S. N. Roy—for Applicant.

Rameshari Dayal—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The facts are simple. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he deposited certain money and certain papers with the defendant as a bailee and that the defendant refused to return them. He would have no relief for specific performance, but he was entitled to relief for damages for breach of contract on his plaint. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has given him a decree partly for money compensation and partly for the return of papers. In so far as the decree is a decree for the return of the papers I doubt whether he had jurisdiction to pass it but as the defendant has refused to return the papers the only portion of the decree which is now affected in respect of the non-return of the papers is a portion which has awarded Rs. 160 damages for failure to return them. The case as it stood was a case for damages for breach of contract and the effective portion of the decree is a decree for damages for breach of contract. Such a suit could be brought in a Small Cause Court. The learned counsel for applicant argues, however, that the allegations imply that the defendant had committed criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation and that in these circumstances the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court is barred either under the provisions of Art. 35 (ii), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act 9 of 1887) or under the provisions of Art 43 (A). Art. 43 (A) has of course no application as this suit was a suit for damages I do not consider that Art. 35 (ii) has any application either, for there is nothing in the plaint charging the defendant with dishonest misappropriation, dishonest conversion, dishonest use or dishonest disposal.

There is no suggestion anywhere in the plaint that the defendant has been dishonest. The only suggestion was that he has broken his contract as bailee The application fails on this point also. At the learned counsel's request I have gone into the matter on the merits I cannot disturb the finding which appears to me to be a very sensible finding of fact. I therefore dismiss this application.

 (a) Civil P. C., S 115—Return of plaint for want of jurisdiction affirmed in appeal—Order could be revised.

The Court of first instance returned the plaint on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. This order was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

Held : that the order could be revised . A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 71, Foll. , 16 A. L. J. 535, Dist. [P 92 C 1]

 (b) Civil P. C., S. 20 (c)—Primary transaction of sale and purchase at one place—Execution of promissory notes in respect of unpaid price at another place—Cause of action to recover price accrues at place of primary transaction.

Prima facie the question of jurisdiction must be decided on the averments contained in the plaint. [P 92 C 1]

Where the plaint alleges that the primary transaction of the sale and purchase of articles took place at one place, the liability of the purchaser for the price of the articles naturally arises out of that transaction. The cause of action, therefore, for a suit to recover the price accrues at that place, and is not extinguished by the execution of promissory notes in respect of the same debt at a subsequent date and at another place. [P 92 C 2]

A P. Sen and S C Das—for Appellant

H. D. Chandra—for Respondent 4.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision under S 115, Civil P. C., by a plaintiff whose plaint has been returned by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for presentation to another Court on the ground that the former Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. The order of the Subordinate Judge has been affirmed on appeal by the District Judge of Sitapur. At the hearing of the application a preliminary objection was taken by the opposite party that no revision lay in a case of this nature. In support of this objection reliance was placed upon a decision of a Bench of the High Court of Allahabad in the case of Jawala Prasad v. E. I. Ry. Co. (1) In that case it was admitted that the District Judge, who had affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance on appeal had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal before him. This being so, the learned Judges proceeded to say :

"If in the exercise of his jurisdiction he committed an error (we do not hold that he did so) that does not give the applicants a right to apply in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C."

It will be seen from what we have quoted just now that the ratio decidendi of the decision was that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. It does not appear that the learned Judges were invited to entertain the application in revision as against the order of the Court of first instance. What would have been their decision had they been so invited we need not pause to conjecture. The fact that the law allows a first and only appeal in a case of this nature to a Court which is not a High Court and that appeal has been preferred and decided is clearly not a ground for ousting the High Court from jurisdiction with which it is invested under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P C., of calling for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to the High Court. An appeal is a bar only in a case in which it lies to the High Court, the words being "and in which no appeal lies thereto" (that is the High Court). Every Court must be deemed to be possessed of jurisdiction to decide the question whether it has jurisdiction to entertain a certain suit or appeal or not and to that extent it may be conceded that the District Judge had jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction is primarily a question of law but if a Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity then it becomes a question of law in which the question of jurisdiction is involved and falls within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. "The section is", to use the words of Lord Atkinson in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2),

"not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

In the preceding sentence his Lordship said :

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it."

(1) [1918] 16 A. L. J. 535=40 I. C. 90.

(2) A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 71=40 Mad. 793=44 I. A. 261 (P. C.).

In the present case the learned District Judge has affirmed the order of the Court of first instance which Court had arrived at a conclusion of law which involves the question of jurisdiction. We are therefore of opinion that the application before us is maintainable and we overrule the preliminary objection.

The circumstances bearing on the merits of the case are as follows : There were four defendants to the suit out of which only one appeared in the Court of first instance and raised a plea of absence of jurisdiction in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur. The plea has been upheld by both the lower Courts, as we have already stated Prima facie the question of jurisdiction must be decided on the averments contained in the plaint and in the present case nothing has appeared in the evidence so far as it was admitted on this question to displace that view. In para 1 of the plaint the plaintiffs stated that they were the owners of a firm in Biswan in the District of Sitapur carrying on a business of brokerage in grain and molasses In para. 2 it was said that the defendants were the owners of a firm in the cantonments of Nimach within the territory of Gwalior. In para. 3 it was alleged that the defendants' firm purchased molasses from the plaintiffs' firm of the value of Rs 11,578 odd between 13th December 1923 and 27th January 1924 ; that the price of other purchases made by the defendants amounted to Rs 93 and that the defendants' firm paid in from time to time the sum of Rs. 7,699 to the plaintiffs' firm In para. 4 it was stated that accounts were adjusted between the parties on 24th March 1924 and a sum of Rs 4,000 was found due to the plaintiffs from the defendants which the defendants' firm promised to pay in four equal instalments viz , 16th October 1924, 14th April 1925, 11th October 1925 and 9th May 1926 In para. 8 the cause of action for the present suit laid for the recovery of the above-mentioned instalments together with interest was stated to have accrued on 24th March 1924, the date on which the accounts were adjusted, and also on the four dates on which the instalments became due. It further appears that the defendants executed four promissory-notes every one of the value of Rs. 1,000 corresponding to the instalments mentioned above in favour of the plaintiffs. These notes were produced by the plaintiffs They also produced two letters written by the defendants of dates subsequent to the dates of the instalments whereby they promised to send the money due to the plaintiffs to their firm at Biswan. These letters have been duly proved and accepted in evidence. In the above stated circumstances and on those facts we are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge by returning the plaint has failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. It was agreed in the Court of first instance that the accounts which were adjusted on 24th March 1924 were adjusted at Nimach. It was not argued before us that that fact alone divested the Sitapur Court of the jurisdiction which it has otherwise possessed. The plaintiffs had further pleaded that there was an oral agreement subsequent to the execution of the prommissory-notes under which the defendants had undertaken to repay the money at Biswan. This plea has failed on evidence and was not re-opened before us

The primary transaction of the sale and purchase of molasses must be assumed on the allegations made in the plaint to have taken place at Biswan and the defendants' liability for the price of the articles purchased by them naturally arose out of that transaction This being so it is clear that the cause of action for the present suit arose at Biswan. The execution of the promissory notes at a subsequent date and at Nimach cannot in our opinion extinguish the cause of action just now mentioned. There was no fresh contract between the parties, the evidence for which might have been intended to be created by the execution of the promissory-notes The old liability for the price of the articles was the real and indeed the sole consideration supporting the promissory notes. In this view of the case it is not necessary to enter into the discussion as to whether the English rule that it is the duty of a debtor to find and pay his creditor would be applicable or not, had this suit been founded on the promissory notes alone and not on any antecedent, independent and completed transaction We accordingly allow this application, set aside the orders passed by the lower Courts and remand this case to the Court of first instance with directions that the suit be reinstated in its original number in the register of suits in that Court and tried according to law. Having regard to the fact that the plaint was not carefully worded we make no order as to costs in favour of the plaintiffs. The parties will bear their own costs in all the three Courts up to this stage.

Judgment.—Thakurain Jairaj Kuar was the widow of a talukdar and as such in possession of the Deotaha estate in the Gonda District. The plaintiffs' case was that on 2nd December 1925, 30th January 1926, and 27th February 1926, she executed three documents granting the plaintiff 1 permission to cut and remove within a period of four years trees of a specified class from the jungle in certain villages forming part of her estate in consideration of sums of money paid to her by the plaintiff 1. Thakurain Jairaj Kuar died on 8th October 1926, leaving the defendant as the nearest reversioner of her husband. The plaintiffs further alleged that the defendant, shortly after his succeeding to the possession of the estate on 11th November 1926, took unlawful possession of the jungle, and dispossessed them. They, therefore, sued for damages and in the alternative for possession of the jungle in question. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 were joined in the suit as persons who, subsequent to the transaction mentioned above, had become partners with plaintiff 1. The defendant denied the transactions set up by the plaintiffs and pleaded that Thakurain Jairaj Kuar was an illiterate pardanashin lady and even if it were proved that the plaintiffs had deceitfully obtained her signatures on any papers the defendant could not be bound by them. The defendant also denied the receipt of consideration and pleaded that in any case the transactions were not within her competence as a Hindu widow and could not be binding upon him after her death.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda rejected the contentions raised in defence and gave plaintiff 1 a decree for possession of the jungle lands in suit and dismissed the claim for damages. The defendant has come here in appeal and his learned counsel has impugned practically all the findings of the trial Court.

The first question requiring determination is regarding the due execution of the three permits which are Exs 2, 4, and 6 and of receipt of consideration by the lady. Simultaneously with the execution of these permits three receipts were also executed in respect of the consideration paid by plaintiff 1 to the deceased Jairaj Kuar. These receipts are Exs 1, 3 and 5. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied on the evidence of P. W. 1, who is plaintiff 1, Haji Mulhu Khan P. W. 4 (Ram Sewak) and P. W. 5 (Kazim Husain). We have carefully read the statements of all these witnesses and can see no reason for disagreeing with the estimate made by the trial Court of the value of their evidence. P. W's. 4 and 5 were admittedly in the service of Jairaj Kuar and would in the ordinary course of things be expected to be present when the transactions took place. The fact that the defendant when he succeeded to the estate on Jairaj Kuar's death dispensed with the services of these old servants is no reason for discrediting them. It is contended that the lady did not use to appear before these witnesses. The evidence shows that the lady was sitting behind a screen which was raised a little bit at the time of her making the signatures in the presence of the witnesses referred to As regards the consideration, the witnesses deposed that the money was counted in their presence and handed over to the Thakurain behind the screen The evidence further shows that the lady was an intelligent woman possessed of considerable experience. She used to manage the estate for herself and to pass necessary orders Agreeing with the trial Court we have no hesitation in holding the due and intelligent execution of the documents and payment of the consideration fully proved.

The next point urged in support of the appeal was that the documents (Exs 2, 4 and 6) created an interest in immovable property and as such could not be admissible in evidence for want of registration The definition of immovable property in S. 2, sub-Cl. (6), Registration Act (16 of 1908) expressly excludes standing timber from the category of immovable property. The appellant has relied upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Seeni Chettiar v. Santhanathan Chettiar (1). We think that that case is distinguishable from the present case. In that case in the words of Shephard, J. :

"The interest acquired by the defendant under the instrument consisted in the right to enjoy the produce of all the trees in the tank bed as also the grass and the reeds, and further to cut and remove the trees for a period exceeding four years."

The terms of Exs 2, 4 and 6 are substantially different from the terms of the instrument which formed the subject of consideration in the Madras case It is perfectly clear in the present case that the trees were sold merely with the object of their being cut and removed There was no intention that the purchaser should have any right of enjoyment of the produce either of the trees or of the land As regards the period of four years, it was allowed simply to enable the plaintiffs to cut and remove the trees. The fact that the period appears to be fairly extensive would not render the transaction a transfer of an interest in immovable property In the case of Sukry Kurdeppa v. Goondakull Nagireddi (2), Holloway, Acting C J , remarked as follows :

"Moveability may be defined to be a capacity in a thing of suffering alteration of the relation of place. Immovability incapacity for such alteration. If, however, a thing cannot change its place without injury to the quality by virtue of which it is, what it is, it is immovable. Certain things, such as a piece of land, are in all circumstances immovable. Others, such as trees attached to the ground, are, so long as they are so attached, immovable : when the severance has been effected they become moveable. A document, therefore, evidencing an interest in land, must always require registration One with respect to trees may or may not require it, according to the character of the transaction. If the parties contemplate the interest passing after the conversion of the immovable to a moveable, it will not ; if the interest passed contemplates the continuance of the quality of immovability, it will."

We entirely agree with the observations quoted above The question has to be determined upon the circumstances of each case We are satisfied that in the present case the parties to the transactions did not contemplate that the trees should continue to stand and be enjoyed as such but that the object of the sale was to convert them into moveable by getting them cut and removed Accordingly we hold that the documents in question do not create any interest in immovable property and are, therefore, admissible in evidence even though unregistered.

The next contention urged by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the transactions were not within the competence of Thakurain Jairaj Kuar, who held only a widow's estate. It was contended that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the transactions were either for the benefit of the estate or for legal necessity and, therefore, they could not bind the reversioners The argument has left us unimpressed It seems to be based on a misconception of the true nature of the transactions. They are all couched almost in identical terms and it would, therefore, be sufficient to reproduce the relevant portion from one of them. Ex. 2 runs as follows :

"Permit for the sale of tim jamun, with the exception of pipal, barged, mangom mahuabel, tandu hasna, sal and nib trees, that is the remaining jungle in villages Lachmanpur, Lalnagar and Bareti, taluqa Deotaha ..... for four years from 2nd December 1925, to 1st December 1929, on payment of Rs. 4,100 to Mulhu Khan Haji, resident of Balrampur, so that he may get tim jamun cut and sell it, he having paid the entire amount in a lump sum and having obtained a formal receipt will have a right to get the timber cut and remove it. The condition is that the said tim jamun will have to be cut from one side; he will not have a right to cut tender shoots of those trees for a second time the trunk of which was once cut and from which profit has been enjoyed once, within the period the wood will be cut and sold; after the lapse of the period, the timber which will remain uncut and unremoved, will be the property of the estate, he will see that no loss is done to the small shoots, if within the period there will be a breach of conditions the plots will be taken under direct management and the money deposited will not be refunded "

It will appear from the above that the transactions relate to a class of trees of spontaneous growth which are subject to periodical cutting It is in the interest of the estate and the proper growth of the jungle that such trees should be periodically cut We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that these transactions must be regarded as acts done in the ordinary course of management of the estate. Mr. Mayne in his Treatise on Hindu law, 9th Edition, p 907, discussing the extent of a Hindu widow's estate remarks as follows :

"It is not a life-estate, because under certain circumstances she can give an absolute and complete title. Nor is it in any sense an estate held in trust for reversioners. Within the limits imposed upon her, the female holder has the most absolute power of enjoyment."

These remarks were quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Thakur Vasonji Morarji v. Chanda Bibi (3). Again at p 909 Mr. Mayne remarks :

"A woman is in no sense a trustee for those who may come after her. She is not bound to save the income She is not bound to invest the principal. If she chooses to invest it, she is not bound to prefer one form of investment to another as being more likely to protect the interests of the reversioners. She is forbidden to commit waste, or to endanger the property in her possession, but, short of that, she may spend the income and manage the principal as she thinks proper."

We are of opinion that the widow, Thakurain Jairaj Kuar, was lawfully entitled to enter into transactions of this nature and that they cannot be questioned by the reversioner unless he could show that they amounted to a spoliation or destruction of the estate. Far from it we are satisfied that the acts were for the benefit of the estate. In this view of the matter the transactions would also satisfy the test laid down in the case of transfers by Hindu widows. In this connexion it was also contended that the period of four years was excessive and unreasonable and that evidence showed that the trees were not sufficiently mature for being cut. We are of opinion that in matters like this the widow must be allowed reasonable latitude for the exercise of her discretion The conditions imposed by her upon the plaintiffs as reproduced above show that she acted with care. The plaintiffs are not allowed to cut a tree more than once and any timber remaining uncut or unremoved within the time allowed is to be treated as the property of the estate without refund of any part of the consideration We have no evidence regarding the extent of the jungle which forms the subject of these transactions. The evidence as regards the age of the trees is also of the vaguest description The defendant relies on the statements of two witnesses, D. W. No 1 and D. W. No. 3. Their evidence is worthless. It has not been accepted by the Court below. We are not prepared to rely on it We, therefore, hold that the transactions in question are valid and binding upon the reversioner

It was also contended that the right given to the plaintiffs of going into the jungle and cutting and removing the trees during the period of four years, constitutes a license and it must be deemed to have terminated with the death of the licensor. It should be noted that the alleged license is coupled with a transfer of property. Such a license is not revokable under S 60, Easements Act and, in our opinion, must subsist while the transfer is in force. In any case the defendant has by his high-handed interference with the plaintiffs' right succeeded in keeping them out of the jungle since November 1926, for a period of about one year and nine months. The balance of the period which is now left to the plaintiffs is by no means unreasonable and, if necessary, we should be prepared to allow them that period independent of the terms of the permits for the purpose of enabling them to have the full benefit of the purchase of the timber made by them. We, therefore, reject this contention.

Lastly, an objection has been taken to the form of the decree passed by the lower Court. The lower Court has granted the plaintiff No. 1 a decree for possession of the jungle lands in suit. As we have said before, in our opinion, the rights acquired by the plaintiffs are limited to the cutting and removal of trees of certain specified classes. They have no right to other trees growing in the jungle or to the grass or any other produce thereof; nor have they any right to the land except in so far as it is necessary to give them access to the trees purchased by them for the purpose of their cutting and removal. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the lower Court should be modified accordingly.

We allow the appeal only to this extent that we direct that instead of the plaintiff 1 being given a decree for possession of the jungle lands he should be given a decree for possession of the trees purchased by him. He and his workmen and staff will have the full right of access to the trees during the unexpired period of the permits for the purpose of getting them cut and removed. As regards costs we direct that in the circumstances the defendant should bear his own costs and pay half the costs of the plaintiff 1 in both the Courts.

Second Rent Appeal No 54 of 1928, Decided on 26th September 1928, from an order of 2nd Addl Dist. Judge, Lucknow, at Unao, D/- 21st May 1928.

Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), Ss. 119, 108 Cl. (4) and 61—Appeals from orders under S. 108, Cl. (4) lie to Commissioner or Board of Revenue.

If a suit is one under S. 108, Cl. (4) based on the provisions of S. 61, appeals from orders in such suits lie to the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue and not to the District Judge or the Chief Court. [P 96 C 2]

Hukimuddin—for Appellant.

Ghulam Hussain—for Respondents.

Judgment. — The plaintiff-appellant instituted a suit in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Purwa, District Unao, under S. 108, Cl. (4), read with S. 61, Oudh Rent Act. The plaintiff's case was that the defendants had failed to pay the rent for the years 1331 to kharif 1334 fasli and that they are, therefore, liable to ejectment under S. 61, Oudh Rent Act. The Assistant Collector held that the plaintiff was not competent to maintain the suit and on this ground dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Second Additional District Judge of Lucknow at Unao The Additional District Judge has agreed with the opinion of the Assistant Collector and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal. A preliminary objection has been raised by the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents that the appeal before the Additional District Judge was incompetent and no second appeal lies to this Court.

I think the objection must succeed It is clear from a reference to the plaint that the suit was one under S 108, Cl. (4), Oudh Rent Act, based on the provisions of S. 61 of the Act. Appeals from such suits lie to the Commissioner and the Board of revenue and not to the District Judge or the Chief Court The provisions of S. 119, Oudh Rent Act, are perfectly clear It specifies the class of suits in which appeals lie to the District Judge and the Chief Court Suits under S 108, Cl (4), are not included within the class of suits in which appeals lie to the District Judge and the Chief Court. I, therefore, hold that the appeal against the order of the Assistant Collector did not lie to the District Judge and no second appeal lies to this Court. If the attention of the Additional District Judge had been drawn to this the proper course for him would have been to return the memorandum of appeal filed in his Court for presentation to the proper Court. I can see no reason why I should not adopt the same course now

For the reasons given above, I set aside the decision of the learned Additional District Judge, which was wholly without jurisdiction, and order that the memorandum of appeal filed by the plaintiff in his Court be returned to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court. The appellant will pay the costs of the respondents in this Court and in the Court of the Additional District Judge.

Judgment.—These appeals arise out of a suit for partition brought by certain heirs of the deceased Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, a nobleman of the Shia faith, against other heirs under the Imamia law. Nawab Baqar Ali Khan was a gentleman of wealth and position, who resided for the most part in Lucknow in a place known as the Shish Mahal. He was created a hereditary Nawab in 1877. This is the history of his family. A certain Khwaja Safi Sahib, a Mughal from Persia, who was originally a resident of Shiraz, arrived at the Court at Lucknow at some time during the reign of Nawab Asaf-ud-daula (1775—1797). He appears to have attained some position, but not an important position, in the Court. He had four children: Hadi Ali Khan, Khudaija Khanam, Farzana Khanam and Mehdi Ali Khan. Mehdi Ali Khan, his younger son, acquired great wealth and influence during the reigns of Nawab Saadat Ali Khan, King Ghazi-ud-din Haider and King Nasir-ud-din Haider (1799—1837). During the first part of his career he held the post of Nazim of Mohammadi and Khairabad. He subsequently left Oudh for a period, but was eventually recalled and became Prime Minister to King Nasir-ud-din Haider. He was honoured with the title of Muntazim-ud-daula (Manager of the State). He died on 25th December 1837, leaving no issue. His nephew Ahmad Ali Khan, the son of Hadi Ali Khan, secured a position as great as the position of his uncle. He became the Prime Minister of King Amjad Ali Khan in 1842 and received the title of Munawwar-ud-daula (Light of the State). After he became Prime Minister he acquired landed property in the Sitapur District and other districts in Oudh. After the annexation of 1856, the first Summary Settlement of the properties in these districts was made with him. In the events of 1857-1858 Ahmad Ali Khan was imprisoned by the insurgents. He obtained his liberty after the restoration of the British power. The second Summary Settlement of the above-mentioned properties was made with him in the name of a negro ex-slave of his, called Abdul Ali. The fact is clear from Ex 502. Ahmad Ali Khan died on 12th October 1858. The following were his descendants :

AHMAD ALI KHAN married IFTIKAR-UN-NISSA.

The landed property in Oudh belonging to Ahmad Ali Khan consisted in the main of two estates, the Kanwa Khera estate in the Sitapur District and the Behta estate in the Lucknow District. As far as can be gathered, the British authorities were ready to recognize Amjad Ali Khan, the only son of Ahmad Ali Khan, as proprietor of both estates ; but, apparently at Ahmad Ali Khan's desire, only Kanwa Khera was assigned to him, Behta being assigned to his younger son Jafar Ali Khan. Sanads were granted accordingly. A primogeniture sanad (Ex. B-1 and Ex B-2) was granted to Amjad Ali Khan in respect of the Kanwa Khera estate.

When lists were prepared under the provisions of Act 1 of 1869, the name of Amjad Ali Khan was recorded as No. 81 in list 1 and No. 29 in list 2 in respect of Kanwa Khera, and the name of his younger son Jafar Ali Khan was recorded as No 15 in list 1 and No 1 in list 4 in respect of Behta. Amjad Ali Khan died on 7th March 1875. He was succeeded in respect of the estate of Kanwa Khera by his elder son Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, who died on 17th January 1921 Nawab Baqar Ali Khan married first Nawab Sharaf Jahan Begam and subsequently Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam Both ladies have survived him. He left the following issues surviving him.

From Nawab Sharaf Jahan Begam · Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan, the eldest son, Nawab Ali Khan and Nawab Naqi Ali Khan, younger sons. From Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam : Nawab Abid Jahan Begam, daughter, and Nawab Taqi Ali Khan, youngest son In May 1921, Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam with her son Taqi Ali Khan and her daughter Nawab Abid Jahan Begam instituted a suit in the Sitapur district claiming their shares under the Imamia law applicable to Shias in the whole of the property alleged by them to have been left by Nawab Baqar Ali Khan. This included the taluqa of Kanwa Khera They impleaded Nawab Sharaf Jahan Begam, her sons and others This claim was met by a variety of pleas disclosing in places conflict of interests between various defendants. Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan took the position that the Imamia law had no application to the case, that he succeeded to the Kanwa Khera taluqa according to the provisions of S. 22, Act 1 of 1869, or, in event of those provisions having no application, under the terms of the primogeniture sanad as being the eldest son of his father He took the plea that he succeeded to the remainder of the property according to the provisions of a family custom under which all property devolved on a single heir. Nawab Sharaf

Jahan Begam and her other sons accepted the position that the whole of the property of the deceased Nawab was subject to the provisions of the Imamia law. All contesting defendants took the position that the plaintiffs had omitted to include in the suit property which, although it was entered fictitiously in their names, was actually the property of the deceased Nawab.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided the suit in an elaborate judgment, dated the 25th June 1925. His main conclusions were these :

(1) The succession to the estate of Kanwa Khera devolved under S. 22, Act 1 of 1869, on Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan. (2) Most of the remaining property, with the exception of a certain accretion to the Kanwa Khera estate, which went with the estate, was the non-taluqdari property of the deceased Nawab which when not transferred by valid transfers during his lifetime, was property divisible under the Imamia law amongst all heirs, there being no family custom under which it descended to a single heir (3) Certain properties standing in the names of individual parties had been duly transferred to them by valid transfers. These properties were excluded from the property divisible (4) Certain properties standing in the names of individual parties had not been duly transferred to them by valid transfers. These properties were included in the property divisible (5) Certain Government promissary notes from the income of which what was known as the radd-i-mazalim —(atonement for crimes of violence) fund was met, were the property of a valid waqf under the Imamia law and as such could not be included in the property divisible.

He passed a decree accordingly

This decree did not accept the pleas of any contesting party in their entirety. The following parties have appealed against it. Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam appeal in appeal No. 20 of 1926, asking in the main that the Kanwa Khera property should be divided amongst all the heirs, and that certain properties which the judgment declared part of the estate should be taken out of it, as being their private property, and that the radd-i-mazalim notes should be included in the divisible estate. Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan appeals in appeal No. 16 of 1926, asking that the whole of the property should be given to him. Nawab Taqi Ali Khan has filed cross-objections to this appeal. Nawab Sharaf Jahan and Nawab Kazim Ali Khan appeal in appeal No. 24 of 1926, asking in the main that the Kanwa Khera property should be divided amongst all heirs, and that the property awarded to other parties and the radd-i-mazalim notes should be included in the divisible estate

We here state our appreciation of the exceptional care which the learned Subordinate Judge has devoted to the trial of the suit and to the preparation of his judgment. The suit was far from easy. He has applied his mind very closely to the complicated facts and to the points of law which arose, some of which were of no ordinary difficulty. Where we have not found ourselves in complete agreement with his views, that fact in no way detracts from our recognition of the manner in which he has dealt with the case. We decide these appeals on the following points :

(1) Has the estate of Kanwa Khera been rightly held to be the sole property of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan ? (2) Has the learned trial Judge rightly held that there is no family custom under which intestate succession to all property devolves on a single heir and that succession to such property is according to the provision of the Imamia law ? (3) Has the learned trial Judge rightly decided that certain acquisitions of landed property made by Nawab Baqar Ali Khan in his lifetime were not made by him with the intention that they should form part of the taluqa of Kanwa Khera, and as such should be considered legally to go with the estate ? (4) Has the so-called Khairabad House been rightly declared an appurtenance of the Kanwa Khera taluqa ? (5) Has the property, which the learned trial Judge has excluded as the property of Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam, Nawab Taqi Ali Khan and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam, been rightly excluded from the divisible estate ? (6) Has the remaining property, standing in the names of Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam, Nawab Taqi Ali Khan and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam, been wrongly included in the divisible estate ? (7) Have the radd-imazalim promissory notes been rightly excluded from the estate ? (8) Has the decree been rightly drafted under the provisions of O. 20, R. 18 ?

(9) Has the decree wrongly omitted to include Kothi Asfi ?

We wish to express our appreciation of the manner in which these complicated cross-appeals have been argued at the bar by the learned counsel concerned They presented their cases with admirable lucidity and compressed their arguments as closely as was possible. While doing full justice to the cases of their clients they have not strayed in any instance into immaterial or irrelevant matter. We note that all pleas not decided in our judgment were abandoned in argument by the learned counsel for the parties concerned.

(1) Has the estate of Kanwa Khera been rightly held to be the sole property of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan ?

This plea has been raised against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan by all parties other than himself. Certain facts may be recapitulated here. The villages forming this taluqa were admittedly not acquired by Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan until a few years before the British annexation of Oudh. They were settled with Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan in the first Summary Settlement of 1856. The preliminary argument against the learned trial Judge's decision here is that these villages were transferred on the evidence by Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan to his grandson, the late Nawab Baqar Ali Khan by a deed of gift dated 1st June 1857, and that they should never have passed to Amjad Ali Khan, the father of Nawab Baqar Ali Khan. The learned trial Judge has found that on the evidence no such gift is established.

It is necessary here to state the circumstances of a litigation to which Amjad Ali Khan was a party. This litigation commenced about the year 1860 We have derived much of our information in respect of this litigation from the report in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mt. Mohammadee Begam (1). Mohammadee Begam and Nawab Begam were daughters of Ahmad Ali Khan, and sisters of Amjad Ali Khan. Amjad Ali Khan had obtained administration to the whole of his father's estate. These two ladies instituted in 1860 a suit against him to obtain their shares under the Imamia law in what they asserted to be their father's estate. We here give some facts as to what happened in this litigation, although we shall have to return at a later stage to aspects of the litigation other than the aspects with which we are dealing here. The suit was filed before Mr. Fraser, the Civil Judge of Lucknow. We have before us a copy of a part of the judgment which he passed on 31st October 1861. It is Ex. 530. The copy, however, does not give the judgment in full. This judgment shows that Amjad Ali Khan pleaded that the Kanwa Khera estate, which his sisters had claimed as part of the divisible property of their father, had been transferred under a deed which is called in the judgment Ex. B to his son by Ahmad Ali Khan, but he also claimed this property under what Mr. Fraser called two firmans. By firmans he is clearly referring here to primogeniture sanads, for he notes that one firman was granted by Mr. Wingfield, Chief Commissioner on 12th March 1861, and the primogeniture sanad of Kanwa Khera to which we have already referred is of that date. Mr. Fraser in his judgment arrived at the conclusion that the two ladies had made out no case in respect of the Kanwa Khera property as well as other property. He says referring to the Kanwa Khera property which he calls the villages ;

> " Those held by the son Amjad Ali Khan under the deed 'B' situated in Khairabad, Zila Sitapur, are confirmed by the grant on Amjad Ali Khan himself. The titles conferred by the previous deeds were in fact wholly set aside, and new ones conferred."

Mr. Fraser thus cut out of the divisible estate the Kanwa Khera taluqa, and he cut this out for the main reason that that property was conferred on Amjad Ali Khan by the sanad. He found that a valuable garden called Wazir Bagh, Gulab Bari Bagh and a large amount of money was divisible property, and he gave Amjad Ali Khan's sister their share in that property according to the Imamia law. This decree awarded to the ladies considerably less than the property claimed, and they appealed to Mr. Campbell, the Judicial Commissioner, against the dismissal of the remainder of their claim. Before Mr. Fraser, great stress had been laid on a will alleged to have been made by Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan, while he was in captivity in the hands of the insurgents. This will is alleged to have been made on 2nd September 1857. It will be remembered that on that date the British Garrison was closely invested in the Residency, and that the first relief did not reach Lucknow till the end of September 1857. This will has been proved in two portions by witnesses in the suit out of which the present appeal arises. The first portion of the will is printed at p. 74, Book C, and the second at p. 71, Book C. We shall refer to the will in future as "Ahmad Ali Khan's will."

Mr. Campbell considered this will invalid in law and for this and other reasons, which will be found in his judgment, dated 19th April 1862 (Ex. 2), he increased the amount of divisible property by Rs. 7,35,300. He did not vary the decree otherwise. Nawab Amjad Ali Khan appealed against Mr. Campbell's decision to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. Their decision, which is dated 29th and 30th November 1867, is reported in Amjad Ali Khan v. Mohammadee Begam (1), the report to which we have previously referred. No one else appealed in respect of this administration suit, although Nawab Iftikhar-un-nissa, Ahmad Ali Khan's wife, appealed against Mr. Campbell's dismissal in appeal of her claim for dower, which was contained in the same judgment. We shall refer to that claim for dower in another appeal the arguments in which were heard at the close of the arguments in the present appeals.

We have to look to the exact matters determined by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in appeal. These matters will be found set out at p. 543 of the report We quote this portion of the decision:

"The matters to be determined on this appeal are three in number, and are.—First, the validity of the gift to the appellant of the Company's Paper, amounting to Rs. 7,35,300; secondly, the appointment of a stranger to be and act as co-trustee with the appellant in the trust as to the family, religious, or charitable fund called radd-i-mazalim, and the direction to settle a scheme for the administration of that fund; and thirdly, the reservation of his judgment, indefinitely, by the Judicial Commissioner, on the right of the appellant, as declared by Mr. Fraser in his decree, in respect of the landed property adjusted to the appellant by that last-mentioned decision."

Their Lordships decided at p. 548 that the transfer of Rs. 7,35,300 to Amjad Ali Khan was a good and valid transfer, that the appointment of the Mujtahid-ul-asar with Nawab Amjad Ali Khan as a co-trustee to the radd-i-mazalim fund (we shall have to refer to this portion of the judgment again) was a good appointment, and that the reservation of the decision as to the taluqdari property was justified inter alia by the following facts:

"Mr. Fraser forbore to question the appellant's title under the firman, because that firman, could not be questioned in that Court. That Court itself existed under an exercise of powers of a similar character, and it did not think itself invested with a jurisdiction to question an act of State, under which the firman had its origin. The Proclamation was necessarily impeached by impeaching the firman, and it was undoubtedly an act of State. Even if this act could be directly or indirectly questioned in a Municipal Court (on which we express no opinion), the contention must be raised on a suit duly constituted to which the Government must be made a party. The forfeited estates were not assets at the time of the Nawab's death, and could only be treated as such when the Government title was displaced. To remand the case for hearing to the Judicial Commissioner would be simply to involve the parties in unnecessary expense, and subject them to unnecessary delay, since it must be accompanied with a declaration that in the suit between those parties, and on those pleadings, the legality of the title grantors of the firman could not be questioned."

Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam's advisers have obtained from the office of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee a copy, which is printed as part of Ex. 530 of something which is on the record of the case in England. This something is clearly what is called Ex. B in Mr. Fraser's judgment the so-called deed of gift in favour of Baqar Ali Khan. It is a translation of what is called the sulehnama As we shall point out later, the document is not what would ordinarily be called a sulehnama or compromise, but is a hiba-bil-ewaz. It is dated the 8th Shawwal Hijri, 1273, which is equivalent to 1st June 1857. It is as follows :

Sulehnama.

" This is to certify, that being in a sound state of health, and in the enjoyment of all my senses, uninfluenced by any one and with cheerfulness, I agree to a sulah or negotiation with Mirza Mohammad Baqar Ali Khan, Bahadur the son of Nawab Amjad Ali Khan, Bahadur, my son under the Muhammadan law, by the transfer of my estates in zila Khairabad, which have been purchased by me and stand in my own name and of the money advanced by me for the villages which are mortgaged to me and the kabuliat of which is (ismfarsee) in the name of Abdul Ali Chela, a detailed list of which is with Aga Meer, tahsildar of the above-mentioned estates. The treaty has been intentionally made by me with full understanding of all the circumstances in consideration of a ring set with a diamond. The terms of this treaty have been accepted and settled between me and Amjad Ali Khan, guardian of the party negotiated with, in Arabic, Persian and Hindi, before witnesses, as follows :

" That the profits of the above-mentioned estates shall be enjoyed by me during my lifetime, and after my death their revenues shall revert to the party negotiated with, without any one participating in them. Dated 8th Shawwal A. H. 1273."

There is a reference to this Ex B in the editor's note at p 520 of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee :

"Two other similar deeds, and also called soolehnamas, were executed by him on 1st June 1857, in favour of Mahomed Baker Ally Khan and Mahomed Jafer Ally Khan, two of the sons of the appellant, and by which the Nawab granted to them respectively other real or immovable estates in Zillah Khyrabad and Zillah Lucknow, and reserving to himself the usufruct thereof during his lifetime."

It is argued that the transfer by Ahmad Ali Khan to Baqar Ali Khan is sufficiently proved by this editor's note and by production of the translation filed. The first question that arises then is whether the transfer has been proved by sufficient legal proof. Beyond admissions so-called, which according to the argument in favour of the plea are contained in the reply of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan in para. 8 of his written statement to para. 8 of the plaint, there is no other evidence except what we have already stated. We shall first deal with the question of the so-called admissions of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan. Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam and her son and daughter undoubtedly alleged that this transfer had taken place, and they went on to argue that this estate was divisible. In para. 8 of their plaint they said :

"That on 1st June 1857, Nawab Munaw-war-ud-daula Bahadur gifted his taluqa in Sitapur district to his elder grandson, Nawab Mirza Muhammad Baqar Ali Khan, and the taluqas of other districts to his younger grandson, Nawab Mirza Mohammad Jafer Ali Khan, defendant 5."

The reply of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan is in para 8 of his written statement It is as follows :

"Paragraph 8 is admitted in this way that on 1st June 1857, Nawab Munawwar-ud-daula executed two deeds, called compromise, in favour of Nawab Baqar Ali Khan and Nawab Jafar Ali Khan and the contents thereof shall transpire from a perusal of the deeds themselves. The said deeds were never acted upon."

We do not consider that Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan in this reply in any way admitted that Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan had transferred validly this property to Baqar Ali Khan The editor's note is not evidence in any sense of the word. The production of what purports to be a translation of the deed certainly inclines to the conclusion that such a deed was executed. The learned counsel for Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan has put his case on this point very fairly He admits that Amjad Ali Khan filed in this litigation a document which professed to show that the property in Sitapur had been transferred by his father to Amjad Ali Khan's son, Baqar Ali Khan, so that it could not be a portion of the divisible estate, but Nawab Amjad Ali Khan further claimed that the property was his under the sanad While admitting that this translation before us is probably a faithful reproduction of the document that was actually filed by Nawab Amjad Ali Khan he maintains that he has a perfect right to ask the Court to find that its production does not constitute legal proof

We consider that the view taken by the learned trial Judge which he supports is a correct view. There is no legal proof of the contents of this document There are no admissions of an effective nature that such a document as is set up against the decision was executed Those who propounded the document might deserve sympathy for having been deprived of an opportunity of proving what is probably a genuine document, had it not been for the fact that the deed, even if proved, would not, in our opinion, establish that any such transfer was made We examine the terms of the document as it stands It purports to transfer the Kanwa Khara estate by a hiba-bil-ewaz It was executed on 1st June 1857 As we read the deed as a deed of hiba-bil-ewaz it was not necessary for Baqar Ali Khan to take possession of the property in order to make the deed effective, but it was certainly necessary that the transfer should be accepted by him. As he was a boy of about eight years old at the time, he could not legally accept on his own behalf. His guardian was Nawab Amjad Ali Khan. There is no evidence that Nawab Amjad Ali Khan accepted the transfer on his behalf. In fact as soon as Nawab Amjad Ali Khan according to the evidence, expressed an opinion on the matter we find that he repudiated the title of his son and claimed the property for himself. There is further a very important statement in Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan's will which was executed on 2nd September 1857:

"The two wills, recorded by the Hakim's Diwan and several deeds of gift in favour of various persons, bearing my seal are with the Hakim, which should be considered as not reliable and false."

This we read as a direct repudiation by Ahmad Ali Khan himself of the validity of any such deed of hiba-bil-ewaz. In the decision in the subsequent litigation, nothing turned upon the validity of this deed As we have already noted Mr. Fraser excluded the Kanwa Khera estate on the ground, that full title to it had passed to Nawab Amjad Ali Khan under the primogeniture sanad. Mr. Campbell refused to discuss the question and their Lordships of the Judical Committee considered that he was right. We have devoted more attention to this alleged deed of hiba-bil-ewaz than perhaps it deserves in consideration of the fact that the learned counsel against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan requested us to give our full attention to the point.

It is to be noted that the learned counsel against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan agreed that in any circumstances a transfer by Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan to Baqar Ali Khan of 1st June 1857, would have been of no avail, as the property was confiscated under Lord Canning's Proclamation of 15th March 1858, and vested in the British Crown. He admits that the British Crown settled this property with Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan himself in the name of Abdul Ali in the Second Summary Settlement and that the sanad in respect of this property was given to Nawab Amjad Ali Khan He has, however, put forward this alleged transfer by gift to justify the contention that the taluqa of Kanwa Khera passed from the British Government to Nawab Amjad Ali Khan, not in his own right, but as a trustee for his son Nawab Baqar Ali Khan. He did not put forward this contention on the ground that Nawab Baqar Ali Khan was in the end wronged by the transfer of Kanwa Khera to his father, for admittedly Nawab Baqar Ali Khan succeeded to that estate on his father's death. He put it forward in support of a contention that succession to the estate was never governed by the provisions of S. 22, Act 1 of 1869. His argument under this head appears to us to confuse the question of succession with the question of equities due to a third party by a taluqdar in possession of an estate.

The principle that where the Crown has granted, either in Oudh or elsewhere, property to an individual under an equity to administer it on behalf of another whether under a constructive trust or otherwise, the fact of the grant cannot defeat the equity, is a well-known principle, and is clearly laid down in a long series of decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. We do not think that any useful purpose will be served by referring to these decisions as the principle is too well established to require citation of authority.

But nowhere has it been laid down that the provisions of S. 22, Act 1 of 1869 would not apply to such an estate, should they be ordinarily applicable, because such equities exist The Kanwa Khera estate was a taluqa held by Nawab Amjad Khan, taluqdar, whose name was recorded in lists 1 and 2 A talukdari sanad had been granted to him It was thus an estate within the meaning of Ss. 1 and 3, Act 1 of 1869, and thus succession to it would be governed by S. 22, Act 1 of 1869, if Amjad Ali Khan died intestate The holder of an equity giving him right to interests in the estate against the taluqdar could proceed against the taluqdar in possession, in order to establish his rights, but the succession was under S. 22 of the Act if the taluqdar died intestate.

It is admitted by the learned counsel against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan that Nawab Amjad Ali Khan died intestate. It is true that he executed what purported to be a will (Ex. Z-1) on 16th March 1874, but the learned counsel agreed that this will was invalid for want of registration in so far as it affected the taluqdari property, and that under the Imamia law it was also invalid in respect of the non-taluqdari property. Thus Amjad Ali Khan died intestate. As soon as he died the Kanwa Khera estate vested in Nawab Baqar Ali Khan as his eldest son under the provisions of S. 22 (1), Act 1 of 1869

It is, however, urged that succession to the estate ceased to be affected by the provisions of that section, because after the death of Nawab Amjad Ali Khan, his sons Baqar Ali Khan, Jafar Ali Khan and the ladies of the family arrived at an amicable agreement evidenced by Exs. 14, 15 and 16, under which Nawab Baqar Ali Khan took the whole of the Kanwa Khera estate, and the remainder of Nawab Amjad Ali Khan's property was divided in the manner indicated in those deeds. It is urged that this arrangement operated as a family settlement, under which the succession to the estate was taken outside the provisions of the Act by agreement amongst the whole of the heirs, and the estate was subsequently divided by various alienations and transfers. We consider it unnecessary to pursue what would have been the consequences of such alienations had the property been subsequently acquired by the person entitled to it under the Act in view of the amendment of S. 14, Act 1 of 1869 as we find at the beginning, that there was no such family settlement, that there were no alienations, and no transfers. On the death of Nawab Amjad Ali Khan intestate, the Kanwa Khera estate devolved on Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, and he obtained possession. His relatives attempted to dispute his title on the basis of a will which is now admitted to be invalid. They withdraw their opposition on receipt of certain consideration. Thus according to our view, the succession to the Kanwa Khera Taluqa remained under S. 22 of the Act when Nawab Baqar Ali Khan died intestate, and the Kanwa Khera estate has passed under the provisions of S. 22 (1), Act 1 of 1869, to his eldest son Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan.

We should have rejected this portion of the appeal even had we held otherwise. If it had been found that the provisions of S. 22, Act 1 of 1869 had no application, the appeal would fail equally on the facts We have it in evidence that a primogeniture sanad was granted to Nawab Amjad Ali Khan in respect of the Kanwa Khera estate. Under the terms of this primogeniture sanad he should have been succeeded (as he was succeeded) by his eldest son Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, and on Nawab Baqar Ali Khan's death intestate he would be succeeded by Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan. If the case against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan was put as its highest it would be held that the estate was conferred really upon Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, although in the name of his father. Nevertheless the primogeniture sanad would have effect; only it would have to be considered that the primogeniture sanad was granted in reality to Nawab Baqar Ali Khan. Nawab Baqar Ali Khan would then be considered to be holding the estate under the terms of the primogeniture sanad, and as he has died intestate the property would descend to his eldest son Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan. For the above reasons we uphold the decision of the learned trial Judge on the first question.

The second question is whether the learned trial Judge has rightly held that there is no family custom under which intestate succession to all property devolves on a single heir and that the succession to such property is governed by the Imamia law. Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan disputes the decision of the Court below. All others oppose him.

Sir Sultan Ahmad on behalf of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan lays great stress on what he urges is the principle laid down in the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (2). He argues that according to the principles of that decision the non-taluqdari property of a taluqdar whose name is entered in list 2 dying intestate must descend to a single heir, unless it is proved affirmatively that intestate succession to such property is governed by the personal law of the deceased, or unless it is proved affirmatively that there is a custom applicable to such property under which it descends otherwise than to a single heir. We are of opinion that the decision in question lays down no such rule. It undoubtedly lays down that where a taluqdar whose property is entered in list 2 dies intestate there arises a rebuttable presumption that the succession to his property not forming part of the taluqdari estate devolves under a family custom of descent to a single heir. In such a case the Court commences with the presumption that the non-taluqdari property will descend to a single heir: but in our opinion if the other side disproves the existence of such a custom it is not necessary for it to prove affirmatively either that succession in the past has been regulated by strict adherence to the personal law, or that a custom inconsistent exists. With this preface we come to the facts. (Here the judgment discussing evidence proceeds) Considering the facts as a whole, we are of opinion that the evidence rightly considered rebuts absolutely the presumption that non-taluqdari property in this family descends to a single heir. This evidence disproves the existence of such a custom. We accordingly find that the learned trial Judge arrived at a correct decision upon this part of the case.

(3) Has the learned trial Judge rightly decided that certain acquisitions of landed property made by Nawab Baqar Ali Khan were made by him with the intention that they should form part of the taluqa Kanwa Khera, and, as such, be considered to go with the taluqa ?

This plea is taken by Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan, and is opposed by all the other parties. Mr. A. P. Sen on behalf of Nawab Fakhr Jehan Begam has argued, that no evidence to the effect that Nawab Baqar Ali Khan declared his intention to incorporate subsequent acquisitions into the taluqa of Kanwa Khera can cause such portion to become part of the "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869, unless a registered declaration had been made by him according to the provisions of S. 32-A of his intention so to incorporate. S 32-A was added to Act 1 of 1869 by amending legislation in 1910 It is admitted by Sir Sultan Ahmad on behalf of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan that no such declaration has been made We cannot find that this plea was taken explicitly before the learned trial Judge or discussed by him, but we consider that Mr. A. P. Sen has a right in appeal to show a fundamental flaw in the case for the other side, provided that the other side does not suffer by the raising of the plea at this stage The other side has not suffered by the raising of this plea as the learned counsel for Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan has considered it carefully and after due preparation has replied to it at some length.

Mr. Sen based his preliminary objection in the main on the authority of the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, which will be found in what are known as the Mehawa cases, The first decision is reported in Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (3) and the second in Rajendra Bahadur Singh v Raghubans Kunwar (4). In these appeals it was contended that villages purchased by the holder of the Mahewa taluqa should be held to be incorporated in that taluqa as it had been proved that the owner intended to incorporate them. Their Lordships decided in the latter decision that they could not be so incorporated whatever was the intention of the owner of the taluqa who had purchased the villages The words are :

"What was suggested was that Balbhaddar Singh had acquired property by purchase and had added it to the estate which had been granted by the sanad of 1861 to Girwar Singh. The facts were not before their Lordships in 1905 which would have enabled them to decide whether any lands had accreted to taluqa Mahewa as it was constituted at the date of that sanad. The Crown has in British India power to grant or to transfer lands, and by its grant, or on the transfer, to limit in any way it pleases the descent of such lands. But a subject has no right to impose upon lands or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent of property applicable in his case. Sir Edward Chamier, then Mr. Chamier, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in his judgment on some objections taken to the second report of the Court of the Subordinate Judge correctly stated the law in this respect as to the power of a subject, thus . 'I take it that it is settled law that a subject cannot make his property descendible in a manner not recognized by the ordinary law, and that he cannot subject it to a rule of descent such as is contained in the primogeniture sanad granted to Girwar Singh. If this is so, it appears to me to follow that Balbhaddar Singh could not by express declaration, still less by mere volition, whether actual or presumed, subject property acquired by him to the rule of succession entered in the primogeniture sanad granted to Girwar Singh.' With that statement as to the law, their Lordships agree."

Sir Sultan Ahmad on behalf of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan argued that that decision was in respect of a case in which the provisions of S 22, Act 1 of 1869 did not govern the succession. That statement is perfectly correct. Mr. A. P. Sen's reply was that the principle had application, as the property in that case was the Mahewa taluqa which had been granted under a sanad of 1861 and which was entered as a taluqa in the lists prepared under Act 1 of 1869, the name of Thakur Gajraj Singh being entered at No. 118 in list 1 and No. 49 in list 2. He argued that the estate was thus an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of

(3) [1905] 27 All. 634=32 I. A. 203=8 O. C. 317 (P.C.).

1869. We find that the property in dispute in that case, that is the Mahewa estate was certainly an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869. Our view to the effect that it was an estate within the meaning of S. 2 and S. 3, Act 1 of 1869 is supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (3)

The finding in the two appeals was to the effect that the Mahewa taluqa was an "estate" as defined in Act 1 of 1869, but that on the facts the descent was not governed on the death of Balbhaddar Singh in 1898 by the provisions of S 22, Act 1 of 1869, but by the provisions of the primogeniture sanad of 1861 The fact that the descent was not governed by S. 22 in no way disturbs the conclusion that the Mahewa taluqa was an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869, and on the authority of these decisions, unless they are distinguished or explained away, we should be unable to hold that it is open to the holder of an estate as defined in Act 1 of 1869 to subject property acquired by him subsequent to the passing of the Act to the rule of descent contained in the Act otherwise than by compliance with the provisions of S 32-A of Act 1 of 1869. Sir Sultan Ahmad argued that there is authority in certain pronouncements of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee to the contrary. We proceed to consider the authorities which he has cited. In Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagdish Chunder Dhabal (5), it was held that property purchased on behalf of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law out of the savings of the zamindari was his self-acquired property, there being no evidence that he intended to incorporate it in his ancestral zamindari property. This decision is no authority for the proposition that the holder of an estate to which succession is governed by a rule superseding the personal law governing his other property can, at his own will, incorporate that rule of succession to govern property other than that estate.

In Janki Pershad Singh v Dwarka Pershad Singh (6), their Lordships of Judicial Committee decided the question of succession to an estate within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869. They decided that the estate consisted of certain properties acquired before Act 1 of 1869 was passed The question then arose whether properties acquired after that date became part of that estate. They say at p. 181 :

"The only other point that remains to be considered is whether the lands subsequently acquired were, as a matter of fact, incorporated with the taluqa. As has been pointed out by this Board in the case of Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagdish Chunder Dhabal (5), the question whether properties acquired by an owner become part of "the ancestral estate for the purpose of succession" depends on his intention to incorporate the acquisitions with the original estate. The Courts in India have concurrently found against the defendant on this point, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from their conclusion. Both Courts appear, however, to have fallen into an error in respect of one property, Kamrauli, for a half-share of which they have made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. It is admitted on his behalf that Kamrauli is one of the villages for which Autar Singh obtained a decree in the regular settlement proceedings The decree of the lower Court must, therefore, be varied by the elimination of Kamrauli."

Their Lordships decided in that case that before those who contested that such property formed part of the taluqa could succeed it was necessary for them to establish as a preliminary that there was an intention to incorporate. Their Lordships' finding that there was no intention to incorporate, the plea failed in limine, and it was not decided whether, if there had been such an intention, the effect would have been to apply a special rule of descent.

Sir Sultan Ahmad relied on the decision in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Khan (2) We are unable to find anything in that decision to support his contention. Their Lordships in that decision were dealing with the question of succession to the non-taluqdari property of a Mahomedan This is the decision to which we have already referred in another connexion As the original taluqdar's name was entered in list 2, it was held that the presumption was that the non-taluqdari property would descend to a single heir, but this decision laid down nothing as to the power of a holder of an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869 to apply the special rules of succession contained in the Act or sanad to property subsequently acquired by him whether he had or had not expressed his intention so to incorporate the property.

(5) [1901] 29 Cal. 433=29 I. A. 82=8 Sar. 205 (P.C.).

(6) [1918] 35 All. 391=40 I. A. 170=20 I. C. 73=16 O. C. 216 (P.C.).

Their Lordships' decision here was that succession to this non-taluqdari property would descend to a single heir unless the presumption was displaced, and the presumed custom by which property of that nature was inherited by a single heir in intestate succession was disproved. They decided that the plaintiff who denied the custom was met affirmatively by the presumption that the custom existed. The plaintiff had argued that the defendant was under the obligation to establish the custom affirmatively and relied in support of that view on the decision in Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (6), to which we have already referred Their Lordships in repelling this contention observed, that while the question of onus may arise in disputes between persons whose personal law was the Mitakshara law, owing to the distinction between the rule of succession to obstructed inheritance and the rule of succession to unobstructed inheritance known to that law, and owing to the fact that considerations may arise in such disputes in respect of evidence as to incorporation of self-acquired property in the ancestral estates, such considerations could not affect the question of onus in the case before them which related to the intestate succession to a person governed by the Muhammadan law

All these pronouncements are of a date prior to the date of the decision in Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (4) So far as we can ascertain, their Lordships did not decide the question in dispute before us until they decided that last appeal We find the effect of their decision to be that no person can by his own declaration (otherwise than by a declaration under S. 32A of Act 1 of 1869) or by his own volition apply a rule of succession, varying the rule provided by his personal law, to properties not part of the estate granted to him under special conditions which vary the rule of succession under the personal law in respect of that estate when such properties have been acquired by him at a date subsequent to the passing of the Act.

This conclusion is sufficient to repel the plea raised on behalf of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan. We consider it, however, necessary to state briefly our findings of fact. We might, had we so desired, have decided this plea on the findings of fact alone, but the question raised by Mr. Sen being one of considerable importance and one which we consider deserves decision, we have ventured to state our findings upon it.

Even if it had been permissible to Nawab Baqar Ali Khan to incorporate subsequent acquisitions in the Kanwa Khera estate, we find that on a proper view of the evidence, no intention to incorporate such properties is established. The findings of the learned trial Judge upon this point are based on an exhaustive analysis of evidence. We have been through the evidence. We are in complete accord with those findings of fact, and we do not consider it necessary to state our reasons in detail as they are similar to the reasons which guided the learned trial Judge We, therefore, find against Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan on this ground

(4) Has the so-called Khairabad house been rightly declared an appurtenance to the Kanwa Khera taluqa?

This finding in favour of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan is attacked by all other parties The house in question is not situated on land forming part of the taluqdari property, and although it is called the Khairabad house it is not actually within the town of Khairabad but is situated on land situated in the village of Arjanpur which adjoins Khairabad Its description as the "Khairabad house" is not really incorrect as it is within the municipal limits of Khairabad town It is not known how long this house has been in the possession of the holder of the Kanwa Khera estate It has probably been in his possession for a long time. Under the Nawabi rule Khairabad was the head-quarters of a Nizamat, and Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan, as we have already stated, was at one time Nazim of Khairabad. This house is used as a residence and office for the members of the staff of the Kanwa Khera taluqa. The taluqdar visits it periodically, usually at the time of collection of rents and there can be no doubt as to the fact that in the past it has been used for estate purposes. The learned trial Judge in support of his decision awarding this house to Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan relied upon a principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (4). Their Lordships there awarded a house which had been consistently considered a taluqa house to the holder of the taluqa, though that house was not actually part of the taluqa property. The case here is stronger, for this Khariabad house is used as an office for the taluqa We note in connexion with this plea, that in a subsequent portion of our judgment we shall uphold a gift made by Nawab Baqar Ali Khan of a portion of the premises to Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam, but this fact in no way affects our decision Nor does it affect the usefulness of the house for the work of the taluqa for there is still sufficient accommodation in the portion left to Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan, both for residential and office purposes. We accepted the view of the learned trial Judge upon this point.

(5) Has the property which the learned trial Judge has excluded as the property of Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam, Nawab Taqi Ali Khan and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam, been rightly excluded from the divisible estate ?

(6) Has the remaining property standing in the name of Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam, Nawab Taqi Ali Khan and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam been wrongly included in the divisible estate ? (After giving some facts for deciding the questions their Lordships proceeded.) We have selected from the large number of decisions cited at the Bar those which appear to us to have laid down the law applicable to these questions most fully. These decisions are decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. They are as follows : Syyud Ushur Ali v. Mt. Bebee Ultaf Fatima (7), Uman Prasad v Gandhar Singh (8), Ram Narain v. Muhammad Hadi (9), Bilas Kunwar v Desraj Ranjit Singh (10) and Sura Lakhshmiah Chetty v Kothandarama Pillai (11). There are further two important decisions of their Lordships which have not been so far reported in the Indian Appeals, both are of 1926 : Maung Po Kin v Maung Po Shein (12) and Mami v. Kallandar Ammal (13).

These decisions according to our view lay down the following principles :

When property is discovered to be standing in the name and in the possession, actual or constructive of any person, the burden of proof is on the party who contests that person's title to establish that the ownership is benami or ism farzi. The circumstance that the consideration of the transaction has been paid by a person other than the ostensible owner may afford, and frequently affords, sufficient reason for a decision in favour of the plea that the transaction is benami or ism farzi. The ostensible owner, if a wife or child, cannot assert against this a presumption of advancement A presumption of advancement can arise in England in the case of a resulting trust in which there is a disposition of the legal and not of the equitable interest The presumption would only arise where upon a conveyance, devise or bequest it appears that the grantee, devisee or legatee was intended to take the legal estate only, the equitable interest being with the settlor.

In such cases in England, if the conveyance is to a wife or child it will be presumed an advancement There is no such presumption in India. The question is not concluded by the proof that the consideration has has been paid by a person other than the ostensible owner. The fact that the consideration has been paid by a person other than the ostensible owner, is not necessarily in itself sufficient to establish that such a transaction is benami or ism farzi. The party attacking the ostensible owner's title can invoke in his assistance in India the general principle that the practice of taking transfers in the name of a third party, when such transfer is not intended to benefit the third party, is exceedingly common, both amongst Hindus and Muhammadans in this country. Where property is taken in the name of a member of a Hindu joint family and the consideration has been paid out of funds belonging to that joint family and the property is held for the benefit of the family, the conclusion that the property belongs to the family and not to the individual member in whose name it has been taken is almost irresistible. Where a person other than the ostensible owner has supplied the consideration, and it is established that that person had reason to conceal the fact that he was the real owner, either because he desired to save the property from the claims of actual or potential creditors, or because the knowledge that he was the owner of the property would impair his reputation or position, the conclusion that the person who provided the consideration is the real owner, is appreciably strengthened. The fact that the person who supplied the consideration in a particular transaction has supplied the consideration in prior transfers, which were clearly benami would strengthen the conclusion that that particular transaction was benami

But with these facts must be considered such circumstances as, whether the ostensible owner has been in enjoyment of the income, whether it is established that the person who supplied the consideration had no conceivable motive for carrying out the transaction otherwise than in his own name, or whether he had a particular reason for wishing to benefit the ostensible owner Although there is no presumption of advancement in favour of a wife or child, there can be proof of special love and affection. The decision must be arrived at after placing the burden of proof carefully. We have endeavoured to do this and to consider the evidence as a whole We find it established to our satisfaction that Nawab Baqar Ali Khan lavished money on Fakhr Jahan Begam, and treated both her and her children with the utmost affection. We have no reason to distrust Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam's statement to the effect that during her twenty-six years of married life she received a very handsome allowance from her husband in addition to having all her personal expense met by him. She may have overstated the amount of his generosity, but after making full deductions for overstatement we consider that she could have well accumulated, even had she not (as she did) invested the proceeds as they came in a capital of between two to three lakhs. (The judgment then discussed evidence relating to specific items of properties, and proceeded to decide the 7th question). Have the promissory notes the income of which is devoted to the expenditure on the radd-i-mazalim fund been rightly excluded from the divisible estate?

We have mentioned the radd-i-mazalim fund previously. Although its origin is obscure, there is no question as to its nature The property of the fund consists of Government promissory notes. The income is devoted to charitable and religious purposes. The income is large. Very many Shias in reduced circumstances benefit from its charity Very many religious observances are met from its income It is not denied that ever since the re-occupation of Lucknow by the British power the radd-i-mazalim fund has been administered for charitable and religious purposes We have no evidence how the fund obtained its unusual name—a fund for the atonement of deeds or crimes of violence. It may be that in the history of Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan and Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan there were incidents which did not leave pleasant memories, and that both were desirous that there should be left in perpetuity a fund from the income of which should be derived benefits to religion and humanity. The first piece of evidence which we have as to the origin of the fund is contained in the will of Ahmad Ali Khan, which we have already referred. The translation of the Persian in which the will is written, that is on the printed book, is not accurate After consultation with the learned counsel, we have arrived at the following translation The following is the translation of the relevant portions which is accepted as accurate :

"I should not be rendered liable to pay the penalty for any non-observance of my own prayers or fasts. Nor should I be rendered liable to pay the penalty for any non-observance of the duties enjoined in the will of the late Nawab Muntazim-ud-daula Bahadur for atonement of sins of omission, nor for having failed to visit Khorasan, nor for not having had regard to the rights of the people. My executors should endeavour to purify and atone for my defects by inquiry and their own efforts."

He assigns out of promissory notes to the total value of Rs. 16,31,000 one third which he estimates at Rs 5,43,303-10-6, so that the income should be devoted to the maintenance of the fund of radd-i-mazalim created under the will of Nawab Muntazim-ud-daula Bahadur, in the objects of which he includes a pilgrimage to Khorasan. We read this document to mean that the radd-i-mazalim fund was not a fund which came into existence as the act of Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan. This document shows to us that the fund came into existence as the act of Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan, and that Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan had continued to administer it In what we have called his will, he deplores his unworthiness and his neglect of his observances in religious matters, and he asks his executors to repair those defects and to save him from the penalties in the next world caused by his sins and his omissions by faithfully carrying out their duties as administrators of this fund and devoting its income to charitable and religious purposes amongst which he enumerates, the expenses of pilgrims going to Khorasan and the succouring of kinsmen, companions and good Saiyeds. This is the first piece of evidence Much can be deduced as to the nature of the fund from the evidence which we have as to the litigation which commenced in 1860 The copy of Mr Fraser's judgment (Ex. 530) throws very little light on the question It would almost appear that his findings in this respect have been omitted from this copy Mr. Campbell's judgment (Ex 2) gives valuable information as to what the attitude of the members of the family was with regard to this fund at the time of that litigation. While refusing to recognize the validity of Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan's will, he makes the following remarks in respect to it :

"In fact the document itself does not as between them profess to be a will at all. It merely recites certain distribution said to have been already made, and assigns a third of the remainder to the religious and charitable fund called the radd-i-mazalim. The plaintiffs admit that there was an assignment to this of at least as large amount and of older date. They would only fix the assignment in another part of the property which is claimed by Amjad Ali, but that the fund is to come out of the estate is admitted on all hands, and that need not be put in issue. I, therefore, declare that so much as has been admitted by the administrator not exceeding one-third of the whole net estate 'as eventually settled' belongs to the radd-i-mazalim fund, and I strike out of the case the issue respecting the case because nothing really turns upon that alone. I will only allow the papers to stand as found to be more probably true than false so far as it may to some extent come in as incidental evidence on the other issue. With respect to the radd-i-mazalim fund I think it must be understood that Amjad Ali Khan cannot take any beneficial interest in it to the exclusion of the other heirs But it must be managed by an individual or individuals strictly as trustees. The eldest male descendant of the founder is clearly a proper person to hold the office of the trustee. I therefore, declare that Amjad Ali, and after him the eldest of line of the descendants in the main line from Munawar-ud-daula if sane, fit and of age, shall be a trustee and that confirmed with him in that office shall be Syed Mahomad Majtahid-ul-asar and after him some other fit person of religious character to be nominated by the Court and that if the trustees accept the office they shall within a month submit for the approval of the Court a scheme for the governance of the fund."

It will thus be seen that Mr Campbell decided that the radd-i-mazalim fund was in effect a waqf While throwing two-thirds of the promissory notes of Rs. 16,31,000 into the divisible estate he retained one-third as the property of the fund, and appointed Nawab Amjad Ali Khan as a trustee joining with him as a co-trustee the Mujtahid-ul-asar Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on appeal in the decision in Amjad Ali Khan v. Mohammadee Begam (1) considered the question of the radd-i-mazalim fund. We have already stated that one of the points which they had to decide was whether Mr Campbell had rightly appointed a stranger to be and act as co-trustee with Nawab Amjad Ali Khan in the trust as to the family, religious or charitable fund called radd-i-mazalim, and the direction to settle a scheme for the administration of that fund Nawab Amjad Ali Khan had objected to this portion of the order of Mr. Campbell, but it is noticeable that he has nowhere suggested that the five lakhs odd of promissory notes reserved as the property of the fund by the Courts below were his private property. His only objection was to the effect that he should be sole mutwalli Their Lordships upheld Mr Campbell's order upon this point They say at page 548 :

"The second matter of complaint is the appointment of a co-trustee. The ground taken on the argument of the incompatibility of such an association with the status and dignity of the appellant, and with family usage, seems to their Lordships to be displaced by one of the documents which the appellant propounded and used before the Court, which does associate a co-trustee with him. As against the appellant, the appointment of a co-trustee will justly give effect to what he alleges to have been the intention of the founder of the trust. The discretion of the Judicial Commissioner as to the person appointed is a matter with which their Lordships are indisposed to interfere, and no sufficient reasons are advanced to control it in this instance. His direction as to the scheme for the administration of this trust seems to their Lordships reasonable."

We find from B-28 the judgment of Mr. Currie, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, passed on the 3rd September 1877, that the existence of the radd-i-mazalim as a charitable fund was recognized. It is certainly open to any party to this suit, who wishes to introduce the question of the radd-i-mazalim fund. We have had some difficulty in understanding the exact objection taken by those of the appellants who have raised the point to the decision of the learned trial Judge to the effect that the radd-i-mazalim fund formed no portion of Nawab Baqar Ali Khan's estate He has excluded the promissory notes, which he finds to be the property of the fund, from the estate He has also added a remark that Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan should be considered entitled to manage the fund We shall refer to that remark later At present we are concerned with that portion of his decision which declares that these promissory notes are no portion of the estate, and here we are asked to consider alternative pleas The first plea is that as these notes are not only something which does not exist, but as they further have the disadvantage of involving the person taking the income from them in the sin of receiving interest, they cannot possibly be the property of a waqf. The objectors suggest that in these circumstances they should be transferred back to the divisible estate That is the first plea The second plea is that if the radd-i-mazalim is a good wapf, Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan's brothers should be joined as trustees. We decide the second plea first If the waqf is a good waqf, no question can arise in this suit as to who should be the trustees The property is not part of the estate, and in the present proceedings the only order should be that it should be excluded from the estate, and nothing should be said as to who are or who are not to be the trustees. We consider that the learned trial Judge should not have expressed an opinion to the effect that Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan should be the manager We do not say that he should not be the manager. We do not say who should be the manager. Our view is that we are not concerned with the question

We now proceed to decide the major plea. Although it seems at first sight somewhat surprising that the validity of a trust, which was recognized by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee more than sixty years ago, which has been recognized ever since, and which has been in operation for the benefit of religion and humanity for over sixty years should be questioned now, we do not say that the objectors have no right to ask for a decision on the subject They base this plea in the main on three arguments. The first is that on the proper construction of the will of Ahmad Ali Khan there was no waqf, and that the promissory notes in question were handed over to the heirs as their personal property subject to the obligation of carrying out certain religious and charitable duties. They argued, therfore, that the income from these notes should be enjoyed by the heirs as a whole subject to the obligation of carrying out the duties.

We very briefly decide here that on our construction of Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan's will the radd-i-mazalim is a waqf, and the promissory notes in question were assigned expressly to it by Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan We find that he did not create the waqf in the year 1857, and that it had been in existence long before that date He, however, assigned specific property to it The second argument is based upon the evidence of Nawab Jafar Ali Khan Nawab Jafar Ali Khan was one of the trustees of the waqf, and has expressed an opinion that, although the income of these notes had to be devoted to religious and charitable purposes, and although the income invariably had been devoted to religious and charitable purposes, the notes in question were, in his opinion, the property of the family We have already in a previous portion of the judgment noted that the opinion of Nawab Jafar Ali Khan is of no value whatever upon points connected with the law, and it is certainly of no value in connexion with the decision as to whether this is or is not a waqf The final plea taken is the plea that the assignment of property such as this is, under the Imamia law, invalid and that no such property can belong to a legally constituted waqf. Although decision of the question is governed by the Imamia law, it will be of advantage to examine first the provisions of the Hanafi law upon the subject There has been a considerable difference of opinion in High Courts in India as to whether under the Hanafi law the waqf of shares in companies is or is not valid. There is, as far as we know, no authority as to whether Government promissory notes can be legally assigned under the Hanafi law as the property of a waqf; but the principles to be applied in respect of shares in companies will assist in decision of the question before us The view in favour of the appellants upon this point was stated in the decision of the Honourable Madras High Court of 1909 in Kadir Ibrahim Rowther v. Mahomed Rahumadulla Rowther (14). That decision states the authorities both for and against the view. We need not refer further to those authorities. We wish to refer explicitly to the discussion of the principle in respect to the Hanafi law, which is contained in Ameer Ali's "Muhammadan Law," Edn 4, at pps. 257—264 We are convinced that on a proper consideration of the principles, the waqf of shares in companies is valid under the Hanafi law; but in any circumstances the Imamia law would appear to permit the assignment of shares in companies as the property of a waqf. We refer here again to Ameer Ali's "Muhammadan Law," Edn. 4 at pp. 503—505 We are here dealing with a waqf under the Imamia Law

It is argued, however, that even if the principle be accepted, that shares in the companies can be assigned validly as the property of a waqf under Imamia law, Government promissory notes cannot be so assigned inasmuch as the income from them is in the shape of interest on a debt and is such an income which cannot be received legally by orthodox Shias We consider this argument too subtle for acceptance Investment of money in Government promissory notes cannot, in our opinion, be distinguished from the investment of money in the shares in companies. Under the original conditions of Islam neither form of investment existed. Although investment in Government securities may be considered as a loan to the State on which interest was paid, it can also be considered not unreasonably as an investment in State property and the income arising therefrom can be considered as a portion of the income of the State, which is enjoyed by the investors. In support of the plea that Government promissory notes can be assigned legally as the property of a waqf, we refer to a passage in Amir Ali's "Muhammadan Law," Edn. 4, at p. 264 .

"The validity of the waqf of moveables including money is accepted without question among the Sharfes, Malikis, the Hanbails, and the Shiaha. "And Shafei has held," says the Hedaya, "that the waqf of everything from which benefit can be derived consistently with the retention of the corpus is valid, and whatever can be lawfully sold (this gives an indication to the sense in which the word ta'amul is used in this connexion) may be lawfully dedicated, for what is capable for yielding profit (from changes of form) resembles lands, horses and arms.' The waqf of money is now common everywhere among Muhammadans from Algeria to India and Burmah. The Shrine at Mecca and at Kerbala, the endowments at Ajmere, Hossainabad (Lucknow) and many of the mosques and religious institutions all over the country, are largely supported by the income of moneys invested in Government securities, which people have come to regard as safer and more permanent than even land. In Egypt, the income of many important endowments created in modern times, is, for the most part, derived from shares in commercial companies.

Money invested in Government or municipal stock is employed by the State or local authorities, as the case may be, generally in productive work, and a share of the profits derived therefrom is received by the investors under the name of dividends or interest. The income derived from money invested in commercial companies stands in the same category. And the waqf of money invested in trade or commerce baza'at has been recognized as lawful for centuries."

We, therefore, decide against the appellants and confirm the decision of the learned trial Judge upon this question.

(8) Has the decree been rightly drafted under the provisions of O. 20, R. 18?

(9) Has the kothi asfi been wrongly excluded from the divisible estate?

On the first question we find in favour of the objection All parties agree that their rights in the divisible property should be declared in the decree, and the decree should have been prepared in this manner under the provisions of O 20, R 18 The alteration is simple In the divisible property, Nawab Sharaf Jahan Begam is entitled to 1/16th; Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam is entitled to 1/16th; Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan is entitled to to 7/36th; Nawab Kazim Ali Khan is entitled to 7/36th; the heir or heirs of Nawab Naqi Ali Khan are entitled to 7/36ths; Nawab Taqi Ali Khan is entitled to 7/36ths and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam is entitled to 7/72nd

On the second point the learned trial Judge found at o p. 647 that kothi asfi was a portion of the divisible estate. By what was apparently a clerical error that kothi was excluded from the divisible estate in the decree. That error will now be corrected.

This concludes all questions raised in these appeals No other questions were raised. The result will be that Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan's appeal No 16 of 1926, will stand dismissed completely. The cross-objections of Nawab Taqi Ali Khan in that appeal will also stand dismissed completely. Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam and Nawab Abid Jahan Began's appeal No 20 of 1926, will succeed partially. The Jiamau property will be excluded from the divisible estate and a portion of the so-called Khairabad house will be excluded from the taluqdari estate and will remain in the name of Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam Nawab Abid Jahan Begam's appeal succeeds partially. The sher darwaza property will be excluded from the divisible estate and remain in her name The appeal of Nawab Sharuf Jahan Begam and the appeal of Nawab Mirza Muhammad Kazim Ali Khan fail and are dismissed There will in addition be a correction of the decree in which the shares of all parties in the divisible estate will be detailed and the kothi asfi will be included in the divisible property

We now come to the question of costs and have to consider here the grouping of the parties Nawab Sadiq Ali stands alone Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam and Nawab Abid Jahan Begam stand together Nawab Sharf Jahan Began and Nawab Kazim Ali Khan stand together Nawab Taqi Ali Khan stands alone Mt Jaddo, widow of Nawab Naqi Ali Khan, and her assignee Dilawar Ali stand together The remaining respondents were absent and unrepresented In appeal No 16 of 1926 Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan will pay his own costs and the costs of the other side, which will include one set of costs to each party or group In appeal No. 20 of 1926, as the appeal has partially succeeded and partially failed, the parties will all pay their own costs. In appeal No. 24 of 1926, Nawab Sharaf Jahan Begam and Nawab Kazim Ali Khan will pay their own costs and the costs of the other side; one set of costs being allowed to each party or group Nawab Taqi Ali Khan will pay his own costs of his cross-objections and also the costs of Nawab Sadiq Ali Khan, no other party being interested in the cross-objections.

Second Appeal No. 117 of 1928, Decided on 30th October 1928, from decree of Addl Dist Judge, Gonda, D/- 25th January 1928

(a) Evidence Act, S 101—Allegation of minority at the time of executing a deed—Burden of proof lies on alleger.

The burden of proving that a particular deed is bad on the ground that its executant was a minor at the time of its execution, lies upon the person who makes this allegation. [P 114 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act. S. 32—Statements of living persons not examined as witnesses being inadmissible under S. 32 cannot be made relevant under S. 11.

Before a fact can be considered to be relevant under S. 11, it must be shown that it is admissible. It would be absurd to hold that every fact, which even if it be inadmissible and irrelevant, would be admissible under S. 11. If a particular deposition could not be admitted under S. 32, it could not be admissible under S. 11 34 All. 341, Foll. [P 115 C 1]

Statements of living persons not examined as witnesses are inadmissible in evidence to prove the allegation that the executant was a major at the time when he executed the document [P 115 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 32 (5)—Entry as to date of birth in a school register based upon statement of deceased father is admissible to prove age—Evidence Act, S. 35.

Where the question is as to the age of a person, the entry of his date of birth in the school register based upon the statements of his deceased father is admissible under S. 32 (5) and also under S. 35, the entry being in a public register stating a fact in issue and made by a public servant in discharge of his official duty. Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for a declaration that the deed dated 23rd July 1925 executed by defendant 3, the father of the plaintiff respondent, in favour of Munna Lal, the defendant appellant is invalid and inoperative.

The two grounds on which the validity of the deed was impugned were· Firstly, that the deed had been executed by defendant 3 at the time when he was a minor ; and secondly, that the deed related to joint ancestral property and was not justified by legal necessity. The defendant appellant, Munna Lal, who is the mortgagee, in his defence contended that defendant 3 was a major at the time of the execution of the deed and that its execution was justified by legal necessity The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda who tried the case came to the conclusion that the defendant 3 was a major on the date of the execution of the deed As to the legal necessity he held that the necessity had only been proved to the extent of Rs. 1,181-12 and he therefore, declared the deed to be binding on the plaintiff-respondent to that extent. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda came to the conclusion that the deed was bad and inoperative because according to his finding defendant 3 was a minor at the time of the execution of the deed and also that the consideration of the deed had not been proved to have been one justified by legal necessity In second appeal before us those findings are assailed. As to the finding that the defendant-respondent was a minor at the time of the execution of the deed it is urged that the finding, though a finding of fact, should not be considered to be binding upon this Court since it was vitiated by several errors of law.

The first error of law which was relied upon in support of this contention was to the effect that the learned Additional District Judge had placed the burden of proof on the defendant mortgagee to prove that the deed was executed at a time when the defendant· 3 was a major. There is no doubt that it cannot be contested now in view of the several decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council that the burden of proving that a particular deed is bad on the ground that its executant was a minor at the time of its execution lies upon the person who makes this allegation. We are, however, of opinion that although the learned Additional District Judge has in the earlier portion of his judgment observed to the effect that the defendants have not produced any evidence to show that defendant 3, the father of the plaintiff-respondent was a major at the time when the mortgage-deed in suit was executed, yet in the end where he gives his finding on the point, he states clearly that on the evidence of the two doctors produced in the case on behalf of the plaintiff and of the entry in a school register also produced by the plaintiff, his finding was that defendant 3, the father of the plaintiff-respondent, was a minor on the date of the execution of the deed in suit We are, therefore, of opinion that the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant on this point cannot be sustained.

The next contention urged on behalf of the appellant was to the effect that certain evidence which was admissible had been rejected and that certain evidence which was not admissible had been admitted We now proceed to see how far this contention can be considered to be made out It was contended that two documents which are Exs. A-10 and A-11 are admissible in evidence and should not have been rejected by the learned Additional District Judge as irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence Ex A-10 is a certified copy of a statement made by defendant 3, the father of the plaintiff-respondent, in the revenue Court on 16th February 1925. Ex. A-11 is the statement of the mother of defendant 3 also made in the revenue Court on the same date, i. e , 16th February 1925. In both these statements the age of defendant 3 is stated to have been at the time of the statements 21 years. We do not see how any of these statements can be admitted in evidence since we are of opinion that they are statements of living persons who have not been examined as witnesses in the case If they had been examined as such the statements might have been admissible under the Evidence Act either in corroboration of the statement made by them in Court as witnesses or in contradiction of the statements so made. We, however, find that neither defendant 3 was put into the witness-box, nor was the mother of defendant 3 examined as a witness in the case. It was also admitted that both the persons being living persons their statements could not have been considered to have been admissible under S 32, Cl (5), Evidence Act. It was, however, contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that these statements were admissible under S. 11, Evidence Act. We are of opinion that before a fact can be considered to be relevant under S 11 of the Act it must be shown that it is admissible. It would be absurd to hold that every fact, which even if it be inadmissible and irrelevant, would be admissible under S. 11. We are supported in this view by the observations of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in Bala Ram v Mahabir Singh (1). An attempt was made in that case, as has been done in this case, to admit in evidence the deposition made by a person who though deceased, did not fall within the provisions of S. 32, Evidence Act, on the ground that the provisions of S 11 of the Act would make such evidence admissible It was observed by their Lordships that this argument could not be accepted because if a particular deposition could not be admitted under the provisions of S. 32, Evidence Act, it could not be held to be admissible under S. 11 of the said Act We are therefore of opinion that the learned Additional District Judge was correct in holding that Exs. A-10 and A-11 which are statements of living persons who have not been examined as witnesses in this case are inadmissible in evidence and cannot be relied upon in proof of the allegations of the defendants appellants that defendant 3 was a major at the time when he executed the deed

It was next contended that the entry in the school register upon which the learned Additional District Judge mainly relied for his finding was inadmissible in evidence. Two reasons were urged for holding that the said document was inadmissible in evidence One was to the effect that the entry upon which the learned Additional District Judge relied was suspicious and the second reason was that it was not definitely proved that the entry was based upon the statement of one Rajeshri Dat who is said to have been the father of defendant 3 We think that there is no substance in both these arguments As to the first argument it is enough for us to state that the learned Additional District Judge looked at the entry in dispute and with the help of the evidence of plaintiff's witness 8, Kali Charan, he held that the entry was really to the effect that the date of the birth of defendant 3 was shown therein as 1st January 1909. If the entry was doubtful and the learned Additional District Judge relied upon the oral evidence of the very person who was responsible for that entry and with the help of that evidence came to the conclusion that the entry really showed the date of birth of defendant 3 as 1st January 1909 we do not see what error of law there can be in such a finding We, therefore, reject this argument.

As to the next contention it appears to us that plaintiff's witness 8, Kali Charan, has distinctly stated in his evidence that the information on the basis of which the entry was made was given to him by Rajeshri Dat, father of defendant 3 It is true that the witness admitted that he did not know Rajeshri Dat from beforehand but he stated clearly that he was addressed by defendant 3 at that time as bappa (father) and that the said Rajeshri Dat used to come frequently to the school with the boy and so the witness could say that the information supplied to him was given by that very same Rajeshri Dat who happened to be the father of defendant 3. This witness therefore leaves no room for doubt that the information upon the basis of which the entry was made was supplied by Rajeshri Dat, the father of defendant 3 It is now admitted that Rajeshri Dat is dead and that his statement as to the age of defendant 3 would be admissible in evidence under S 32, Cl (5) of the said Act, since it would be a statement relating to the existence of relationship made by a person who must be presumed to have special means of knowledge and which was made before the question in dispute was raised. It therefore appears to us to be clear that the entry in the scholars' register is admissible in evidence under S 32, Cl. (5), Evidence Act Apart from that we are also of opinion that the entry would be admissible in evidence under S. 35 of the Act. It is clearly an entry in a public register stating a fact in issue and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and as such admissible in evidence We are therefore of opinion that the learned Additional District Judge was right in holding that the entry in the school register was admissible in evidence and his finding having been based on that evidence, cannot be considered to be in any way vitiated by any error of law or procedure

It was then contended that the oral evidence of the two doctors upon which the finding of the learned Additional District Judge was based was inconclusive and did not justify the finding We have read that evidence and we do not agree with the contention raised by the learned counsel on behalf of the appellant Mr H N Bose who was examined as P W 9 and who is the Assistant Civil Surgeon of Gonda clearly states that the age of defendant 3 was at the time of his evidence, which was 15th March 1927, between 18 and 19 and that there was no margin of two or three years in the age estimated by him though there may be one of some months. The learned Additional District Judge is in our opinion right when he states in his judgment that the medical evidence goes more in support of the story told on behalf of the plaintiff as to the age of defendant 3 than that of the defendants appellants We are therefore of opinion that the finding of fact relating to the minority of defendant 3 arrived at in this case by the Court below is not in any way vitiated by any error either of law or of procedure and is not one which can be impugned in second appeal It is clear from the said finding that defendant 3 was minor on the date of the execution of the mortgage deed in suit. The deed is therefore void and inoperative We do not see any necessity of deciding the second point The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

S N Roy—for Respondent

Judgment.—These two rent appeals Nos 3 and 4 of 1928 arise out of suits Nos. 46 and 44 of 1927, respectively The plaintiff, B Bipin Chandra Chatterji, had brought these suits to recover arrears of rent for the years 1331 to 1334 Fasli in respect of certain holding in village Mahulara in the District of Fyzabad Ram Ratan Singh and Ram Prasad Singh were defendants in suit No. 46 Sher Bahadur Singh and three others were defendants in suit No. 44 Both the suits were dismissed by the learned Assistant Collector. The plaintiff appealed and his appeals were allowed by the learned District Judge of Fyzabad The plaintiff was given a decree for Rs 239-9-9 in suit No 44 and a decree for Rs 51-13-6 in suit No 46. The defendants then came to this Court in second appeal. Both the suits were remanded by this Court under O 41, R 25, Sch 1, Civil P C The learned District Judge has submitted his findings on the additional issues framed by this Court. No objection has been filed against these findings I have gone through the findings In my opinion they are not open to any objection and must be accepted by this Court

So far as I see there is no substance in these appeals The plaintiff is the thekadar of village Mahulara from Thakurain Sri Ram Kuer of the Sihipur estate The defendants are occupancy tenants of the lands in suits They had claimed under-proprietary rights in the holdings in suits, but it has been found that they have no such right and that they are simply occupancy tenants of the lands in suits

The learned Assistant Collector had dismissed both the suits principally on the ground that the plaintiff had not ime pleaded certain persons who held the lands as mortgagees from the defendants. The learned District Judge held that the mortgagees were not necessary parties to the suits and that the plaintiff's suits could not be dismissed merely on the ground that he had not impleaded the mortgagees. The learned District Judge fixed the rent which the defendants were liable to pay to the plaintiff and decreed the plaintiff's claim accordingly

In my opinion, the learned District Judge was perfectly right in holding that the plaintiff's suits could not be dismissed merely on the ground that he had not impleaded the mortgagees It is true that the defendant's mortgagees are in possession of the holding but the mere fact that the defendants or their ancestors have made the mortgages in question in respect of the lands in suit does not absolve them from the liability to pay rent to the landlord or his thekadar. The defendants or their ancestors being occupancy tenants had no transferable rights of occupancy in the lands in suits The mortgages in question are invalid as against the landlord or his thekadar. The plaintiff is not estopped from challenging the mortgages as alleged by the defendants. It is not shown that it was ever decided in any case between the parties that the mortgagees alone were liable to pay rent to the plaintiff and the defendants were not liable to pay the same. The defendants are occupancy tenants of the lands in suits and they are liable to pay rent to the plaintiff. I accept the finding of the learned District Judge on this point No other point was urged in these appeals before me The result is that both the appeals fail and must be dismissed. Hence I dismiss both the appeals with costs.

The plaintiff has filed cross-objections, but I find there is no substance in the cross-objections also The plaintiff refused to receive rent from the mortgagees of the defendants and returned their money orders It was, therefore, held by the learned District Judge that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest from the defendants from the time the arrears of rent became due In the circumstances of the case, I see no sufficient reason to disagree with the finding of the learned District Judge on this point also. Hence I dismiss the cross-objection also with costs.

S N Roy—for Respondent.

Judgment—This is an appeal arising out of proceedings taken by the respondent in the Court of the Munsif, Havali, Fyzabad, for making absolute a decree passed in his favour on 26th July 1911. The facts of the case are rather complicated and we proceed to give them below.

On 24th February 1911, the plaintiff-respondent, Satish Chandra Chatterjee, filed a suit for possession in respect of certain property situate in village Sahulara, District Fyzabad This property belonged to a math known by the name of math Moghispur, District Fyzabad. The mahant of the math at that time was one Shankar Gir The defendant-appellant, Bisheshar Gir, professing to be the mahant of that math transferred a half-share of 51 bighas 13 biswas land situate in village Sahulara mentioned above. The sale-deed was executed on 29th June 1910, in favour of the respondent and the suit above referred to was brought by him for possession of his half-share in the said land On 26th July 1911, a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff based on a compromise executed between him and Bisheshar Gir The plaintiff discharged Shankar Gir, whom he had originally impleaded in the case, from the array of the defendants The decree obtained by him was not, therefore, in any way binding upon Shankar Gir The plaintiff in that suit had claimed possession of the half share in those lands by partition but the decree had given him merely joint possession of those lands, and it would be proper for us to state that no preliminary decree for partition of the said lands, as is now contended on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, was passed in the case. After the decree had been passed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent he applied for delivery of possession of the property decreed to him under O 21, R 35 (vide Ex 1) on 20th December 1911. A warrant for delivery of possession was issued by the Court in favour of the plaintiff-respondent (vide Ex. A-16) On 10th January 1912, possession was delivered to the plaintiff-respondent under the terms of his decree by the said warrant (vide Ex A-17). On 16th January 1912, Shankar Gir filed an objection under O 21, R. 100 contending that the decree obtained by the plaintiff-respondent was not binding upon him and that the plaintiff could not, therefore, obtain possession of the property which was actually in his (Shankar Gir's) possession (vide Ex A-2). Shankar Gir's objection was allowed by the execution Court on 1st March 1912 (vide Ex A-3).

Subsequently Shankar Gir filed a declaratory suit in respect of the entire property appertaining to the math Moghispur including the property in suit on the allegation that the whole property was the property belonging to the math, that he was the properly constituted mahant of the math and that no other person had a right to call himself the mahant of the math or to transfer the property appertaining to it Both Bisheshar Gir, the appellant before us, and his transferee Satish Chandra Chatterji, the respondent before us, were impleaded as defendants in the case The respondent Satish Chandra Chatterji did not defend that suit and the proceedings were held ex parte against him Later on a compromise was arrived at between Bisheshar Gir and Shankar Gir, the result of which was that the entire suit of the plaintiff was decreed subject to certain reservations in favour of another person who was defendant 2 in that case The case was tried ex parte against the plaintiff-respondent and the Court passed a decree against him also. The result of this was that Shankar Gir obtained a decree in 1913 to the effect that the property situate in village Sahulara which had been transferred by Bisheshar Gir in favour of Satish Chandra Chatterji was held to be waqf property and as one which Bisheshar Gir had no right to transfer in favour of the respondent. The judgment of the case is Ex. 4 and the decree is Ex A-5

In 1918 the respondent, Satish Chandra Chatterji, applied to the Court under O 9, R 13, Civil P C., for setting aside the ex-parte decree mentioned above. On 13th May 1918, his application was dismissed (vide Ex A-7) It is stated in the order of the Court that the decree-holder agreed to give up his claim for costs and the applicant Satish Chandra Chatterji accepted the decree The effect of this, in our opinion, was to make the decree passed in 1913 against the respondent to be fully operative and binding against him. Its further effect was that the decree dated 26th July 1911, which had been previously obtained by the respondent against the appellant Bisheshar Gir had become inoperative and of no effect

In 1925 it appears that Shankar Gir was criminally prosecuted in connexion with a dacoity case and persons who belonged to the order of the math appointed in his place the appellant Bisheshar Gir as a mahant of the math This was on 30th September 1925 (vide Ex A-15). On 25th February 1926, the zemindars of the village Moghispur also agreed to his appointment as mahant On 20th April 1926, Bisheshar Gir brought a declaratory suit against Shankar Gir that he was now the properly appointed mahant of the math This suit was decreed on 2nd June 1926 (vide Ex A-8) which is the judgment, passed in that case On 3rd September 1926, this decree was confirmed in appeal (vide Ex. A-9) We might mention here that Mr Bipin Chandra Chatterji the brother of Mr. Satish Chandra Chatterji, who is a pleader practising at Fyzabad appeared in that appeal on behalf of Bisheshar Gir The result of this litigation was that Shankar Gir remained no more the mahant of the math and that Bisheshar Gir was declared to be the duly appointed mahant of the math and in charge of the properties appertaining to the said math

On 27th October 1926, a suit was brought by Mr. Bipin Chandra Chatterji against Shankar Gir and Bisheshar Gir for possession of those very lands probably on the ground that he was the thekedar of this village on behalf of the taluqdar of Sihipur to which estate the village Sahulara belonged, and as such was entitled to possession. This suit was not tried but a decree was obtained by means of a compromise (vide Ex. 4 and Ex. A-12). Subsequently in 1927 Bisheshar Gir filed a suit for setting aside the compromise. This suit was again compromised on 27th July 1927, under which the lands in suit which really appertained to the math of Moghispur were declared to belong to the taluqa Sihipur and the plaintiff Mr. Bipin Chandra Chatterji was said to be entitled to its possession. Bisheshar Gir was, however, given possession for his lifetime in respect of 29 bighas of land out of the entire 51 bighas 13 biswas of land which were in suit.

The respondent Satish Chandra Chatterji has now put in an application in the Court of the Munsif, Havali, Fyzabad, on 12th September 1927, asking the Court to appoint a commissioner to partition the property awarded to him under the decree dated 26th July 1911, and to pass a final decree for partition. In this application he treats the decree passed on 26th July 1911, as a preliminary decree for partition passed in his favour The appellant Bisheshar Gir lodged his objections against the making of the decree absolute on 12th November 1927. The objections were (1) That the decree passed on 26th July 1911, was not a preliminary decree for partition and no decree absolute could, therefore, be passed in favour of the plaintiff, and (2) that the application of the plaintiff-respondent was barred by limitation

The plaintiff-respondent contested the objections and in support of his application urged that he had a right to file the present petition by virtue of S. 43, T P Act (Act 4 of 1882) The help of this provision of law is invoked on the ground that the decree passed in favour of Bipin Chandra Chatterji on 27th July 1927, by virtue of which Bisheshar Gir had obtained possession over 29 bighas of land, entitled the plaintiff now to seek possession of the land transferred to him under the sale-deed, dated 29th June 1910 The plaintiff-respondent contended that as Bisheshar Gir had now become personally entitled to 29 bighas of the said land the decree passed in 1910 could be made absolute against him by partition, since he was entitled only to a half-share out of 51 bighas 13 biswas which share came to 25 bighas 16 biswas odd. The learned Munsif held that the application for making the decree absolute was not maintainable and on that ground he dismissed the plaintiff's application.

On appeal the learned District Judge of Fyzabad has taken a contrary view and has held that the application is maintainable and in that view of the case allowed the appeal and remanded the case with directions that a final decree should be prepared in the case It is against this order of the District Judge which is dated 5th April 1928, that the defendant Bisheshar Gir has come up to this Court in second appeal and the same objections which were urged on his behalf in the Court of the Munsif have now been urged before us We have heard the parties in this case at great length and have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed and that the plaintiff-respondent's application for making the decree absolute must be dismissed. We now proceed to give our reason for coming to this conclusion.

Ground 1 on which it appears to us that the present application filed by the plaintiff-respondent cannot be maintained is that the decree passed in his favour on 26th July 1911, cannot be treated as a preliminary decree for partition The plaintiff, it is true, claimed a decree for possession of half-share in the entire lands by partition, but the decree which was passed in his favour was only an ordinary decree for possession which we understand to be one for joint possession of a half-share in the entire lands We are unable to construe that decree as a preliminary decree for partition One has only to look at the decree and he is satisfied that this interpretation is the only interpretation which can be placed on the said decree. It also appears to us that the plaintiff-respondent himself treated it not as a preliminary decree for partition but as a final decree giving him joint possession over half the share in the entire lands in suit This seems to be the only conclusion which one can derive from the application for delivery of possession filed by the respondent in 1911 and under which the possession was actually delivered to him in 1912 (vide Ex. 1, Ex A-16 and Ex.A-17) It is admitted that a preliminary decree for partition cannot be executed until it has been made final The fact that the plaintiff applied for delivery of possession under the decree obtained by him on 26th July 1911, therefore, shows clearly that he himself did not treat the decree obtained by him in 1911 as a preliminary decree, but one which according to him was final decree for joint possession and, therefore, capable of being executed That being our view of the case it is clear that the present application for making the decree obtained on 26th July 1911, absolute cannot be maintained and must be rejected

The second ground on which we are of opinion that the application cannot be maintained is the ground of limitation In our opinion Art 181, Lim Act provides for limitation in such cases Art 181 provides that the limitation for applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in Sch 1 attached to the Limitation Act or by S 48, Civil P C, is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues If the plaintiff's contention be accepted that the decree obtained by him on 26th July 1911, was a preliminary decree for partition, the right to get it made absolute accrued to him on the date when such decree was obtained by him, and if he wanted to make that decree absolute he was bound in law to apply for getting it made absolute within three years from that date The present application has been filed more than 16 years after the date of the passing of the original decree which is now sought to be made absolute This clearly cannot be permitted. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that in view of the decree obtained by Shankar Gir in 1913 it was not possible for him to execute the present decree We do not understand how this contention can help the plaintiff-respondent. If the effect of the decree obtained by Shankar Gir in 1913 was to stop the plaintiff-respondent from taking further action that decree still stands so far as the plaintiff-respondent is concerned To meet this difficulty it was urged on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the effect of the decree passed in 1913 in favour of Shankar Gir was wiped out by the decree that was subsequently obtained by Mr Bipin Chandra Chatterji against the appellant We have not been able to follow this contention Mr Bipin Chandra Chatterji is no representative of the respondent and when he brought a suit against the appellant for possession alleging himself to be the thekedar on behalf of the Sihipur estate he cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to have brought that suit for the benefit of the respondent

We are, therefore, of opinion that any litigation which took place between Mr. Bipin Chandra Chatterji and Bisheshar Gir cannot affect the validity or otherwise of the decree obtained by Shankar Gir against the plaintiff-respondent in 1913 In 1918 the plaintiff-respondent tried to get that decree set aside, but when the decree-holder agreed to give up his claim for costs he in his own turn agreed to abide by the said decree. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the decree obtained by Shankar Gir against the plaintiff-respondent in 1913 is still binding upon him and in face of that decree the plaintiff-respondent cannot now take any further action in respect of the decree dated 25th July 1911 We might mention also that the contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent as based on S 43, T P Act (Act 4 of 1882) is wholly irrelevant and foreign to the scope of the application for making a certain preliminary decree absolute In seeing whether that decree can be made absolute or not the consideration of such an argument would not be permissible

The result is that the plaintiff-respondent's application for execution must be considered to be time barred and if his contention that, in view of the decree obtained by Shankar Gir it was not possible for him to get the decree obtained in 1911 made absolute is accepted then that bar still exists and is not removed. On these grounds we are of opinion that the present application of the plaintiff-respondent must be rejected and we accordingly allow this appeal and dismiss the said application with costs in all the three Courts.

Second Appeal No 363 of 1928, Decided on 5th December 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Barabanki, D/- 28th August 1928.

 Hindu Law—Marriage—Restitution of conjugal rights—Husband living in adultery—Covenant by him to give up but not giving up the illicit company—Wife obtaining decree for maintenance—Restitution was not granted—Husband and wife.

Under the Indian Law cruelty in the legal sense need not necessarily be physical violence A course of conduct which if persisted in, would undermine the health of the wife is a sufficient justification for refusing to the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. [P 123 C 1]

A woman was married when she was 10 years of age After consummation of marriage at the age of 15 years she came to her husband's place but found him living in adultery with her elder sister from whom he had two children She protested against this conduct of her husband, who subsequently executed an agreement in her favour covenanting to give up his illicit connexion, but he had not kept his agreement The wife obtained a decree for maintenance Subsequently the husband sued for restitution of conjugal rights.

Judgment—This is a second appeal in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights The suit was dismissed by the Munsif of Ramsanehighat, District Bara Banki by his decree dated 5th May 1928, but it has been reversed by the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 28th August 1928.

The facts of the case stated briefly are that the appellant Mt. Chilha is a married wife of the plaintiff-respondent Chhedi. The parties belong to the caste of the gararyas They were married some 11 years ago and the gauna ceremony (consummation of marriage) was performed some five years ago. The case of the plaintiff respondent is that the defendant-appellant Mt Chilha left his house some two years ago and has not since then returned. A decree for restitution of conjugal rights is, therefore, prayed for in the plaint.

The defence put forward is to the effect that the defendant-appellant was married to the plaintiff-respondent, when she was very young and when she came to her husband's house after the gauna ceremony, she found the plaintiff living in open adultery with her elder sister Mt Gobindi, from whom he has also two children ; that she protested against this action of the plaintiff-respondent, upon which the plaintiff-respondent and Mt. Gobindi both beat her and that thereupon she left the house of the plaintiff and has since then been living with her parents She further stated in her defence that on the advice of certain relations the plaintiff executed an agreement in favour of the appellant on 21st February 1927, in which he agreed to give up his connexion with Mt. Gobindi and to keep the appellant with him, promising in case of breach of this arrangement to pay her a maintenance of Rs. 8 per month. It was further alleged that the plaintiff had not kept the terms of the said agreement and consequently was not entitled to claim restitution of conjugal rights, and that the appellant was entitled to maintenance as agreed upon

The learned Munsif of Ramsanehighat who tried the case did not believe the story of an actual assault deposed to by the defendant, but he came to the conclusion that there could be no doubt regarding the fact that plaintiff had ill-treated the appellant. He, however, found that the plaintiff had been living in open adultery with Mt. Gobindi for a long time and from her he had two children, and that it was impossible under the circumstances for the appellant to live peacefully with the plaintiff without any apprehension as to her own safety. He also found that the plaintiff had not given up his connexion with Mt Gobindi even after the execution of the agreement referred to above. In this view of the case he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. I may also mention here that after this decree of the learned Munsif the appellant brought a suit for her maintenance against the respondent and obtained a decree in respect thereof on 9th August 1928.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the finding of the Munsif so far that it was proved, that the plaintiff-respondent had illicit connexion with Mt. Gobindi and that that connexion still continued. He also disbelieved the story of the actual assault deposed to by the appellant. But he held that the marriage tie was indissoluble under the Hindu Law and could not be broken notwithstanding that the husband may have a number of wives or concubines and that the defendant-appellant could not legally refuse to go back to her husband. He also held that there might have been some ill-treatment, but that could not be considered to be sufficient for the Court to dismiss the suit for restitution of conjugal rights He observed in his judgment that in the case of the parties who were gararyas beating of the wives was not uncommon amongt them and even though the plaintiff may have on some occasions slapped the appellant, it could not be regarded as cruelty. In his opinion as long as there was no danger to the appellant as to her personal safety, legal cruelty must not be considered to have been established. Regarding the agreement he found that it was void under S 26, Contract Act In this view of the case he passed a decree for restitution of conjugal rights in favour of the plaintiff-respondent

The defendant-appellant has now appealed against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge and the main point which has now been argued before me on her behalf is that legal cruelty has been established, and that in any case the facts of the case are such as should not justify the Court in passing a decree for restitution of conjugal rights in this case After hearing the parties at great length I have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed and that the suit of the plaintiff-respondent must be dismissed I now proceed to give my reasons for arriving at this conclusion

Under the Hindu Law, there can be no doubt, that it has been enjoined as a duty on a Hindu wife that she must be obedient to the husband and have veneration for his person and that it directs that the husband and the wife should be entitled to the society of each other : vide Dr Gurudas Banerji's Tagore Law Lecture, 1878, pages 114 and 120 We also find that in the laws of Manu and other books it is definitely laid down that married women must be honoured and adorned by their fathers and brethren, by their husbands and by the brethren of their husbands, if they seek abundant prosperity and that kind treatment should be extended to wives : vide Manu, Chap 3, v 55 to 62 It is no doubt also true that no express provision in Hindu Law is to be found for a suit for restitution of conjugal rights nor is any particular reference to be found as to what would constitute a valid defence in such suits.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, have laid down in a case decided so far back as 1877 and reported in Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonissa Begum (1) as to what is to be the rule of law which the Indian Courts should follow in such suits Although that was a case dealing with Mohammedans, the principle enunciated by their Lordships has been recognised as the general principle to be followed in all cases whether of Mohammedans or of Hindus. On page 615 of the report their Lordships have laid down the rule in the following terms :

> " It seems to them clear, that if cruelty in a degree rendering it unsafe for the wife to return to her husband's dominion were established, the Court might refuse to send her back It may be, too, that gross failure by the husband of the performance of the obligations which the marriage contract imposes on him for the benefit of the wife, might, if properly proved, afford good grounds for refusing to him the assistance of the Court. And, as their Lordships have already intimated, there may be cases in which the Court would qualify its interference by imposing terms on the husband "

I have underlined (italicized) a portion of the passage quoted above in order to indicate the principle that although legal cruelty may not be establised in a case, yet it would be perfectly open to a Court to refuse to pass a decree in that case if the circumstances proved are such that it would be against the principle of justice, equity and good conscience, to award such a relief

It has now after a series of decisions become a settled rule of law in England that legal cruelty should not he considered as synonymous with acts of physical violence. It was pointed out by the House of Lords in the case of Russel v Russel (2) that it was not necessary to prove cruelty in the proper sense of the term as generally understood, but it was enough to show that the conduct complained of was such as to cause a reasonable

(1) [1877] 11 M. I. A. 551=8 W. R. 3 (P.C.).
(2) [1897] A. C. 393.

apprehension in the mind of the wife of danger to life, limb, or health, which is obviously far more comprehensive than mere physical violence. It has also been pointed out in some cases that where the general conduct of a husband towards his wife was of a character which tended to degrade the wife and to subject her to a course of annoyance and indignity injurious to her health, legal cruelty should be considered to have been established : vide Swatman v Swatman (3)

In Paigi v Sheo Narain (4) decided by Straight and Tyrrell, JJ., it was held that where a husband came to the Court as plaintiff seeking its assistance for compelling his wife to return to him the Court could not disregard any reasonable objection, which she might raise to such a relief being granted to him on the ground that she had been subjected before to personal injury or cruelty at the hands of her husband, or that she had any fear of one or the other or that the husband was actually living in adultery with another woman In Dulai Koer v Dwarka Nath Misser (5) the question was discussed by Mookerjee, J , at great length The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion after discussing the various authorities that there may be a case in which legal cruelty may not have been strictly established, but circumstances short of that will also bar a suit for restitution I am in entire agreement with this view In Kondal Rayal Reddiar v. Ranganayaki Ammal (6), the same rule of law has been laid down It has been held in that case that under the Indian law, cruelty in the legal sense need not necessarily be physical violence. A course of conduct which if persisted in, would undermine the health of the wife, is a sufficient justification for refusing to the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights

I have, therefore, to see whether the rule of law enunciated in the cases quoted by me above and which rule of law is in accordance with the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 11 Moore's Indian Appeals, 551, would justify me to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff-respondent in the present case. It has been found in this case that the defendant-appellant was married to the plaintiff while very young, being at the time about 10 years old, that gauna ceremony was performed five years after when she became of 15 years of age, that when she came to her husband's place, she found him living in open adultery with her elder sister from whom he has now two children, that she protested against this conduct of her husband, but to no avail, that the husband subsequently executed an agreement in her favour covenanting to give up his connexion with the appellant's sister, and that he has not been able to keep up the agreement, which has compelled the wife to sue for maintenance and for which a decree has been passed in her favour. On these facts it appears to me that it is impossible to believe that the defendant-appellant would be able to live peacefully with the respondent Any woman living in such an atmosphere is bound to suffer in health and it would be a reasonable apprehension on her part that she is not likely to receive proper treatment from her husband I regret I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge that in the case of a woman belonging to a gararya caste any other rule than the one which has been laid down in the cases quoted above would be applicable, nor am I prepared to hold that it would be open to a gararya husband to beat his wife and that she should not be justified in making a complaint if such a treatment is accorded to her I may observe that whether belonging to a high caste or low caste the principles which should ordinarily be observed by all men to whatever caste they may belong must be the same I am, therefore, of opinion that legal cruelty has been established in the present case and that apart from that taking all the circumstances into consideration I would not be justified in passing a decree for restitution of conjugal rights in favour of the plaintiff-respondent

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside, and that of the learned Munsif restored with costs in all the three Courts.

Second Appeal No 187 of 1928, Decided on 23rd August 1928, from decree of Addl Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 9th March 1928

 Transfer of Property Act, S 76—Mortgagee causing loss—Mortgagor can recover damages by separate suit and need not cut same when redemption accounts take place.

Where mortgagee causes loss to the mortgaged property in his possession, the mortgagor can recover damages from him by a separate suit, and need not necessarily cut the same in the accounts which take place at the time of redemption because the word "may" as used in the last clause to S 76 has not the force of "must": 33 Mad. 71 and 6 O *L. Niamatullah—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for the recovery of Rs 50 as damages for the cutting away of certain bamboo clumps by the defendants. The bamboo clumps in question lay in two mahals, mahal Bakhshish Husain and mahal Abbas Husain The plaintiffs were originally mortgagees of these two mahals and have now acquired the equity of redemption also by purchase but before the plaintiffs purchased the equity of redemption in mahal Abbas Hussain a puisne mortgage of it was made in favour of the defendants The plaintiffs' case was that the bamboo clumps in question had been planted by them and that the defendants had cut them wrongfully The main defence raised was that the bamboo clumps had been planted by the defendants' ancestors. It was also mentioned that the defendants were the mortgagees in possession of mahal Abbas Husain. Though the plea does not seem to have been distinctly raised in the written statement, yet it appears that in the arguments before the two Courts below the defendants in the alternative, relied on their title as mortgagees of mahal Abbas Husain. Both the lower Courts have rejected the defendants' pleas and decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents raised a preliminary objection about the suit being one of a Small Cause Court nature and the second appeal not being maintainable for that reason but subsequently he conceded that the case at any rate so far as it related to the bamboo clumps in mahal Abbas Husain would fall within Art (2), Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and for that reason he withdrew the objection.

On the merits, the learned counsel for the defendants has urged (1) that on the correct construction of the mortgage-deed in the defendants' favour they are entitled as mortgagees with possession to cut the bamboo clumps situated in mahal Abbas Husain and (2) that in any case the question regarding damages was one to be determined when accounts are taken between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the time of redemption and the present suit was not maintainable

As regards the first point, the mortgagee-deed (Ex A-1) allows the mortgagee to appropriate the entire profits towards interest and also provides that the entire mahal with all right and interest therein together with sir and share without exception of any right or thing was included in the mortgage It has been urged that bamboos are not in the same position as timber trees. They require for their proper growth to be cut periodically and their cutting does not constitute any waste. But in this case there is no evidence to show whether the bamboos at the time when they were cut were of a mature age and ripe for cutting It may be conceded that the cutting of bamboos of a particular class may amount to sayer produce just like the cutting of jungle which requires to be cut periodically, but the defendants not only did not set up any such case in their written pleadings but have also failed to lay the foundation for it in the evidence Their entire energy in the trial Court seems to have been directed to proving that the trees had been planted by their ancestors. Under the circumstances, I must hold that the defendants have failed to show that the bamboos in question were of such a class that their cutting could be regarded as sayer produce to which they are entitled under the terms of the mortgage-deed. This contention must, therefore, fail for want of necessary evidence. As regards the second point, so far as the bamboo clumps situate in mahal Abbas Husain are concerned, it might be possible for the mortgagors to debit the mortgagees with the loss occasioned to them by their having been cut in the accounts which take place at the time of redemption but I am not prepared to hold that the plaintiffs are in any way debarred from claiming the damages in the present suit The last clause of S. 76, T P Act which has been relied upon uses the word "may" The learned counsel for the defendants contends that this word should be considered as having the force of "must" I am not prepared to accept the contention The cases of Sivachidambara Mudaley v Kamakshi Ammal (1) and Angad Singh v Kashi Prasad (2) which have been referred to on this point are quite distinguishable and cannot afford any help in determining the question under consideration

For the above reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Commissioner of Income-tax, U P — Appellant

Jagmohan Das Rastogi — Respondent

Civil Reference No. 7 of 1928, Decided on 27th August 1928, made by appellant

 Income-tax Act (1922), S. 4 (3) (7)— Judgment-debtor giving security for certain sum to stay execution of partition decree— Interest on security paid to decree-holder— Receipt of interest is income—Exception to S 4 (3) (7) does not apply.

On an application to stay the execution proceedings in a partition suit, the debtor was asked to give security for a certain sum and to pay interest thereon Subsequently the interest was handed over to the decree-holder.

Held that the receipt of interest was "income" within the meaning of S 4, the income not being of a casual and non-recurring nature, the exception contained in S. 4 (3 (7) did not apply. [P 126 C 1]

G H Thomas—for Appellant

K. D. Seth and Mahabir Prasad Srivastava—for Respondent

Judgment.—This is a reference to the Chief Court from the Commissioner of Income-tax under the provisions of S 66, Act 11 of 1922 We are asked to answer the following four questions

(i) In the circumstances stated, were the sums of Rs 10,968 and Rs 5,621, income, to which the Income-tax Act applies, within the meaning of S 4, Income Tax Act, 1922?

(ii) Did the income received in 1925-26, which had escaped assessment to income-tax, come within the scope of S 34 of the said Act?

(iii) Is the claim tenable that the expenditure on the litigation, between the assessee and his brother, should be allowed, under the provisions of S 12 (3) of the said Act, as expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning the items of interest in dispute?

(iv) Were the proceedings of the Income-tax Officer bad in law, because he wrote one order under S 23 (3) of the said Act explaining the assessments made separately?

The facts are as follows Jagmohan Das assessee was a member of a joint Hindu family with his brother Indar Prasad Indar Prasad instituted a suit for partition On 25th July 1922 the Subordinate Judge granted a decree for partition One condition of this decree was that Jagmohan Das was to receive certain property Indar Prasad considered that the decree gave Jagmohan Das more than he was entitled to and he appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner The Judicial Commissioner's Court dismissed his appeal on 10th March 1924 Indar Prasad was not satisfied He applied for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee That leave was granted him The fact that the leave was granted him did not prevent Jagmohan Das from executing the decree and Jagmohan Das proceeded to execute the decree Indar Prasad applied for stay of execution On 17th November 1924, Mr Dalal, the Judicial Commissioner, ordered the execution to be stayed on conditions that Indar Prasad gave security for Rs 95,000 and further paid interest at 6 per cent per annum on Rs 95,000 at certain intervals into the Court The interest was so paid It was received by Jagmohan Das. As their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dismissed the appeal there has been no question of recovering it from Jagmohan Das We are asked in the first place as to whether this interest is income to which the Income-tax Act applies

We have no doubt as to the fact that it is 'income' to which the Income-tax Act applies within the meaning of S 4 The position was this If Indar Prasad had at once complied with the terms of the decree Jagmohan Das would have obtained this property From this property he could have obtained an income Owing to Indar Prasad taking the case to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee the enjoyment of Jagmohan Das over the property was postponed, but in lieu of this enjoyment he obtained interest at 6 per cent on the amount calculated as security This was clearly his income. The learned counsel for Jagmohan Das had argued that although it was his income-tax is not assessable thereon because it consisted of receipts which were not receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation and which were not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee and which were of a casual and non-recurring nature He asks us to apply the provisions of S 4, Cl (3) (vii) The receipts in question were certainly not receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, nor were they by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee But they were not of a casual and non-recurring nature In these circumstances the exception does not apply and they are assessable to income-tax

We, therefore, answer the first question in the affirmative In respect to the second question we find that the income received in 1925-26 which had escaped assessment to income-tax came within the scope of S 34 of the Act We, therefore, answer the second question in the affirmative The third question is based upon a plea by the assessee that he should be allowed in reduction of his assessment the expenses of the litigation incurred in the suit with Indar Prasad. He is not entitled, in our opinion, to any reduction of assessment for this reason The Income-tax Officer has not in any way taken into account the capital which he gained out of that litigation. He has only taken into account the income which he derived on the capital which he obtained through that litigation. We, therefore, answer the third question in the negative The fourth question is a simple one. We are asked to set aside the proceedings on account of an irregularity We do not find that there was any irregularity and we answer the fourth question in the negative The assessee must pay the costs of this case. We fix the fee of the Government Advocate at Rs 250; Rs 100 has been received already There will further be the costs of printing as certified by the Government Advocate, and costs incurred in process, etc

(a) Marriage—Presumption—Woman continuously living with certain man—Children begotten and treated as their issues—Man having absolute power of disposal over her income—Both jointly assessed with taxes by municipality—Presumption is that they are married—Evidence Act, S. 114.

A Mahomedan lady lived continuously with another man and had children who were treated by her, her relatives and friends as issues of that man. The latter had absolute power of disposal over her money. The incomes both of the man and the woman were jointly assessed with taxes by the municipality.

Judgment.—(After stating facts as given in the judgment of Gokaran Nath Misra, J., reported in A. I R 1928 Oudh 155, and after holding that as the evidence was equally balanced the case should be decided on the probabilities of the case, the judgment discussed the evidence and proceeded ) The case of both sides covers a well-defined common ground. This ground is that Sher Muhammad Khan was married to one of the two sisters only, Champa or Ketki. We are of opinion that when the facts now admitted are considered in the perspective just now mentioned, the only reasonable conclusion is that Champa and not Ketki was married to Sher Muhammad Khan Indeed the evidential force of the admitted facts which we shall presently state is so great that Mr. Jackson, the learned counsel for the appellant, had to take up the position that the children of Sher Muhammad Khan had the reputation of being and treated by all concerned as the children of Champa. The learned counsel suggested the theory which we regard as wholly untenable that these children or at least some of them were children born of the womb of Champa through illicit intercourse with Sher Muhammad Khan while Champa lived in his house together with her sister, Ketki, who was the lawfully wedded wife of Sher Muhammad Khan This theory is not only opposed to legal presumption of legitimacy and lawful connexion: Sadik Hussain Khan v Hashim Ali Khan (1), but is, it appears to us, fantastic. The facts to which we allude are as follows.

(1) Champa has continuously lived in the house of Sher Muhammad Khan. Considering her status in contrast with the status of her sister Ketki, it is highly improbable that Champa chose for herself one for all the life of a parasite on Sher Muhammad Khan and Ketki.

(1) A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 27=38 All. 627=43 I. A. 212 (P.C.).

(2) The children, Ibqal Jahan Begam and Unis Jahan Begam, daughters and Baqar Ali Khan son have since their respective births been treated by Champa and other members and friends of the family as the children of Champa. Indeed to explain this the plaintiff's evidence goes so far as to say that the boy Baqar Ali Khan was positively affiliated by Champa from the moment of his birth as her own son. Champa spent between Rs 6,000 to 7,000 on the marriage of Iqbal Jahan Begam and arranged for a dowry of the value of Rs. 10,000 to Rs 11,000. On the occasion of the marriage of Tahira Begam, Sher Muhammad Khan's daughter by another wife, Champa spent about Rs. 5,000

(3) Champa received a large sum of money from the Court of Wards by virtue of the compromise of 16th March 1918 Sher Muhammad Khan gives an account of the expenditure of this sum of money in his evidence to be found at p 721 of the printed record. It is as follows

"Out of this sum Rs. 37,500 were spent by Rani Champa in purchasing the share in village Saiyapur, District Hardoi, along with me, Rs. 5,500 or thereabouts were spent by her in building the imambara at Nanpara, Rs 20,000 or thereabouts were given by her to my mother Nawab Mehdi Begam, and Rs. 20,000 or thereabouts were given by her to me for being deposited in the Bank. This almost makes up the total of Rs. 48,000. A portion of money, say about Rs. 1,000 may have been spent by her on various objects, but I cannot give any detail of the said expenditure"

This statement is significant Champa and Sher Muhammad jointly purchased a village for a very large sum of money Champa makes a gift of Rs. 20,000 to Sher Muhammad Khan's mother and the imambara in its final form of construction bears the inscription of the names of Champa and Sher Muhammad Khan both. We do not say that these facts are conclusive but they certainly tend to establish a reasonable probability in support of the defendant's case

(4) Sher Muhammad Khan had an absolute and free power of disposal over Champa's money and frequently exercised that power.

(5) Champa purchased house property with her money in the name and for the benefit of Baqar Ali Khan, the boy, and acted as his guardian in that transaction.

(6) Finally we may refer to the fact that the incomes of Sher Muhammad

Khan and Champa were jointly assessed with taxes by the Notified Area Committee of Nanpara in the year 1920-1921 Indeed in the second column of the certified copy of the assessment register (Ex. A-85) the entry as to the description of the assessees is as follows:

"Nawab Sher Muhammad Khan, son of Nawab Sher Jahan Khan, together with Champa Begam wife of Sher Muhammad Khan."

The entry is clearly admissible in evidence under S 35, Evidence Act 1872, and is according to our judgment of very great importance It was suggested in the trial Court as well as before us that the entry just now quoted may be a forgery. It seems to us that the suggestion is prompted by the fact that the original register has been in due course and according to the rules of the department destroyed We are unable to give any weight to this suggestion

We have more than once referred to the compromise of 16th March 1918, which was intended to settle all claims of Champa and of Nawab Abdul Karim Khan as against the estate of Nanpara. There is one aspect of this compromise which now falls to be considered. For the maintenance of Champa in future an allowance of Rs 1,000 a month was fixed by this compromise as payable by the estate of Nanpara. This allowance has, of course, been received by her since and admittedly uniformally through the hands of Sher Muhammad Khan Now in this compromise a provision was entered as follows:

"The right of the second party (that is Champa) to get the allowance of Rs 1,000 per month, shall not cease in case of her remarriage."

In agreement with the learned Judge of the trial Court we are of opinion that this provision was made to safeguard against the consequences of an already accomplished fact and not of a prospective remarriage of Champa. It is the plaintiff's case that Champa has never remarried.

The defendant has examined a large number of witnesses and the plaintiff has also examined a number of them. Besides several witnesses were examined as Court witnesses and yet Champa has not given evidence in the case The presumption is that she has abstained from giving evidence by reason of the fact that truth lay on the side of the defendant. (The judgment after upholding the finding of the trial Court as to Champa's marriage with Sher Mohammad proceeded to consider the effect of this finding on the adoption of the plaintiff). The last provision in the will of Raja Mohammad Siddiq Khan

"If any of the Ranis contracted a second marriage after me she shall not be entitled to avail herself of any of the provisions of this will"

This is a slightly different translation from the translation in the printed record but having regard to the knowledge of the Urdu language possessed by one of us we are of opinion that the translation rendered by us is more accurate. According to our construction of this provision of the will we are of opinion that Champa on her remarriage with Sher Muhammad Khan forfeited her power of adoption and consequently the plaintiff's adoption made by her on 25th July 1914, is invalid The language of this provision is so clear that in our judgment there is no room for any argument. We may, however, notice the argument It is contended on the side of the plaintiff that the provision under consideration does not apply to the power to adopt because adoption brings no benefit to the adopter and on the contrary it deprives her of her right of possession and enjoyment of the estate till adoption. We think that there is no substance in this argument In the first place the language employed excludes it In the second place, the power is a benefit possessed by all the four widows of Raja Muhammad Siddiq Khan under a gift from him

It follows from what we have found above that the plaintiff's title on which his claim to the estate of Nanpara rests fails on the merits and consequently the decree under appeal must be affirmed.

Owing to the conclusion at which we have arrived on the question of the plaintiff's title we do not find it necessary, indeed it will not be proper, to give our judgment on other points affecting the plaintiff's and the defendant's title raised in the case So far as the defendant's title is concerned the case against it rests mainly on questions of law and the facts involved therein are not in controversy. As to some of the other defences than the defence which we have upheld against the plaintiff's title it will suffice for us to point out that all of them, that is bar of limitation and bar of res judicata, are pure questions of law and the facts in relation to them are not in dispute and are stated exhaustively in the judgment of the trial Court. One of the defences raises the question as to whether the plaintiff's adoption was made with sinister intentions. In our judgment the only reliable evidence on this part of the case is the evidence which has come out of the mouth of Sher Muhammad Khan and is accepted as true for the purpose of this part of the case by both sides We are unwilling to place reliance on any other evidence in this behalf. Sher Muhammad Khan's evidence has fully been noticed in the judgment of the trial Court

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with separate costs to the three respondents.

Sundar, and a daughter Mt. Rajana, who was defendant 1 in the Court below and is now respondent 1 before us Mt. Sundar died on 4th December 1923, and the plaintiffs claim that they being the next reversioners of her husband Ghulam Dastgir Khan, according to the pedigree appended to this judgment,* are entitled to the said property. They also allege a family custom under which the widows in the family of Ghulam Dastgir Khan get only a life-estate and the daughters are excluded altogether from inheritance. Defendants 2 to 4, who are now respondents 2 to 4, were impleaded as defendants in the case since they are transferees of different portions of the property in suit from Mt. Sundar, the widow of Ghulam Dastgir Khan. The plaintiffs alleged that they (Sarfaraz Khan and Najaf Khan) together with defendant 5 Shamsher Khan are nearest reversioners and thus entitled to the property in suit. They further alleged that defendant 5 had made an oral gift of a share in the property in suit to the plaintiff 2, Najaf Khan It is in this way that the plaintiffs claim the entire property in suit. The defendants denied the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs and contended that neither plaintiffs 1 and 2 (Sarfaraz Khan and Najaf Khan, nor defendant 5, were the nearest reversioners of Ghulam Dastgir Khan. They also denied the custom of exclusion of the daughters as set up by the plaintiffs. They further contended that the widow of Ghulam Dastgir Khan was full owner of the property in suit and as such competent to make the alienations in favour of the defendants. In any case they alleged that the transfers in their favour were justified by legal necessity. They denied the alleged oral gift by defendant 5 in favour of plaintiff 2 and contended that even if made it must be deemed to be invalid

The learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj who tried the suit, came to the finding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the pedigree set up by them and also the custom of the exclusion of the daughters, which they alleged to have prevailed in the family of Ghulam Dastgir Khan. He found that the widow was not in possession of the property in suit as absolute owner but was in possession of merely a life-estate He further found that the transfers in favour of defendants except in the case of one transfer in favour of defendant 3, were made for legal necessity. He also found that the oral gift alleged to have been made by defendant 5, in favour of plaintiff 2, was not proved, and even if proved such a gift must be held invalid in law On these findings the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

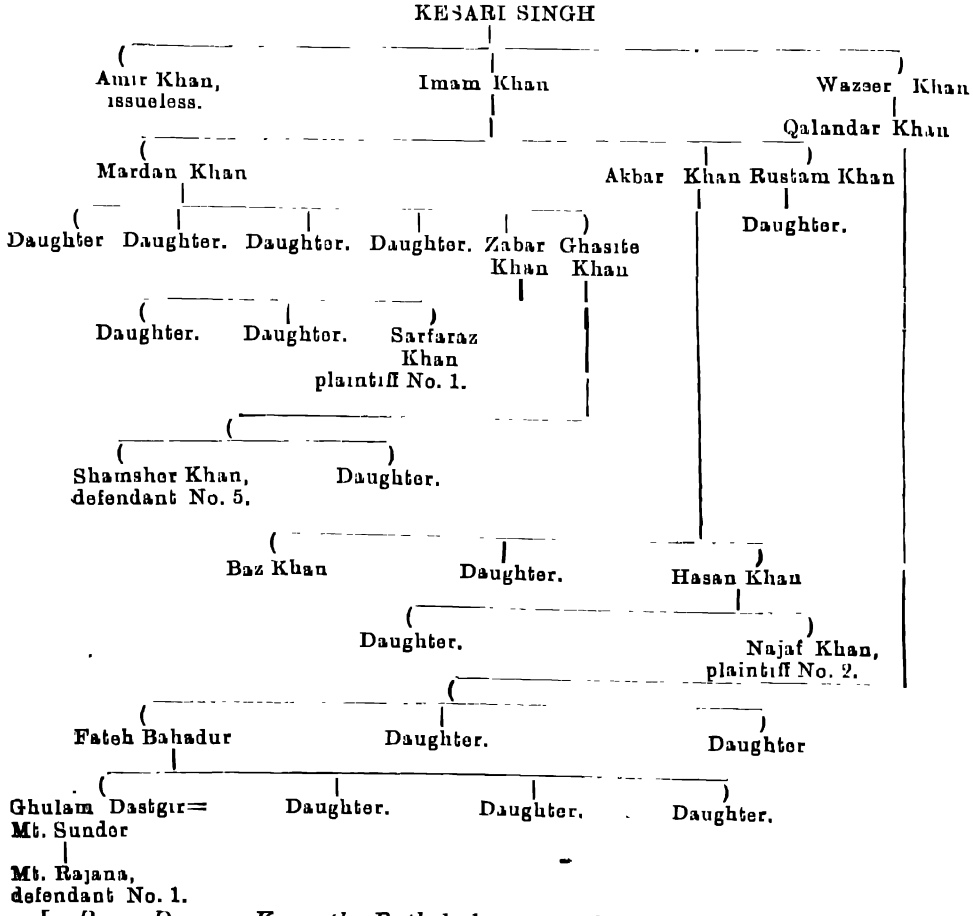
The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court against the decision of the Subordinate Judge and have sold a portion of their claim to one Ghulam Moinud-din Hyder, who has also been impleaded as an appellant in the case

In appeal it is contended before us on behalf of the plaintiffs that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge regarding the pedigree and custom of the exclusion of daughters are incorrect. It was contended that the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs had been fully established from the evidence on the record and that similarly the custom of the exclusion of daughters was also proved.

After hearing arguments on behalf of the appellants at great length we came to the conclusion that although the plaintiffs had established their pedigree, yet they had failed to prove that they were the next reversioners of Ghulam Dastgir Khan at the time of the death of Mt. Sundar which happened in December, 1923. The evidence which the plaintiffs gave in proof of their pedigree consists of both documentary and oral evidence. The documentary evidence consists of Exs. 1, 2, 6, 7, 9 and 10 and the oral evidence consists of three witnesses two of whom are the plaintiffs themselves and one of them happens to be their relation. Plaintiff 1 Sarfaraz Khan was examined as P. W. No. 6 and plaintiff 2 Najaf Khan as P W. No. 1, and Sikandar Khan, the relation of the plaintiffs, was examined as P. W. No 2 The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the oral evidence and on the strength of the documentary evidence found that the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs had been established except this fact that it was not proved that Imam Khan and Wazir Khan were brothers, and sons of one Kesri Singh, who had become a Muhammadan in his lifetime. The Subordinate Judge came to this conclusion because in his opinion Ex 9 which was a settlement pedigree and which was the only evidence to prove this fact was inadmissible in evidence We have to see how far this view of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct.

On the question of settlement pedigree the law which has prevailed in the Province of Oudh for a number of years, being based on several decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, is to the effect that a settlement pedigree can be admitted in evidence either under S. 32, Cl. (5), Evidence Act 1 of 1872 or under S 35 of the said Act If the settlement pedigree is one signed by the members of the family, it would be admissible under S 32, Cl. (5) as statements of deceased persons as to relationship since such statements would be considered to be of those persons having special means of knowledge It must, however, be proved that statements were made by them at a time when there was no dispute as to the pedigree set up If, however, the pedigree is not signed by the members of the family but is prepared by the Settlement Officer himself after proper enquiry and bears his signatures it can be admitted under S 35, Evidence Act, as an entry in a public record stating a fact in issue and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties

In Kashi Singh v. Balraj Singh (1) Mr. Evans, A J. C., held that a pedigree produced before a Settlement Court was admissible in evidence under S. 32, Cl (5), Evidence Act, if it was proved that the persons making the statement contained in the pedigree were dead and had special means of knowledge.



(1) [1911] 10 I. C. 199.

In Suraj Bali v. Tilok Chand (2) Mr Lindsay (Sir Benjamin Lindsay) held that the pedigrees filed in the Settlement Courts would be admissible under the provisions of S. 32, Cl (5), Evidence Act, to prove the statement of deceased persons relating to the family connexions, provided it is shown that the persons who made the statements had some special means of knowledge with regard to the relationship, which is deposed to, and that such knowledge should be presumed in the case of the members of the family or in the case of those persons, who are closely related to the family.

In Ram Din v. Kayasth Pathshala, Allahabad (3) [a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh consisting of Mr Stuart, J. C. (now Sir Louis Stuart) and Mr Kendall, A. J C] a pedigree put forward in the settlement proceedings was produced in evidence and it was found that although it had not been signed by any member of the family, yet it was established that the contents were adopted by the members of the family, who were privy to its preparation and that upon its basis the entries in the khewat were made at the time of the settlement, and it was, therefore, held that the pedigree was relevant and admissible under S. 32, Cl (5), Evidence Act.

In Kashi Singh v. Ram Narain (4) Mr. Stuart, J C. (now Sir Louis Stuart) held that where in order to establish a pedigree reliance was placed upon a genealogical table put in at the time of the settlement in order to make the document admissible in evidence it must be established that the document was prepared by a member of the family or an official, whose duty was to prepare it in discharge of his official duty

In Baij Nath Singh v Bahadur Singh (5) decided by a Bench consisting of Mr. Dalal, A J C (now Mr Justice Dalal) and Mr Wazir Hasan, A J. C (now Mr Justice Wazir Hasan) a pedigree, which was filed before a settlement Court, was produced as evidence in proof of the pedigree set up The document did not bear the signatures either of any of the co-sharers of the village or of the Settlement Officer The file of the Settlement case, however, showed that the pedigree was expressly referred to in the report of the Sadar Munsarim, which was addressed to the Settlement Officer and the khewat of the village, which was attested by all the village cosharers had been prepared on the basis of that pedigree It was held that the pedigree in question had been prepared for the settlement purposes and was the basis of the entries in the khewat and, therefore, it should be treated as a document prepared by a public officer in the discharge of his official duty and that, therefore, it was admissible under S 35, Evidence Act

These cases therefore, in our opinion, leave no room for doubt that the settlement pedigree can be held to be admissible in evidence either under S 32, Cl. (5), Evidence Act, if it be shown that it amounts to the statements of deceased persons, who were the members of the family and as such had special means of knowledge and further that these statements were made before there was any controversy as to the point, which it is sought to be established by the said pedigree of his or under S 35, Evidence Act, if it is proved that it was prepared by Settlement Officer in the discharge of public duty

The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected Ex 9 which is the settlement pedigree on the ground that it does not contain the signatures of any of the zemindars of the village, nor does it contain the signatures of any Settlement Officer He has, therefore, held that the document is not admissible in evidence either under S 32, Cl. 5, Evidence Act, or under S 35 of the said Act. The certified copy of the settlement pedigree, it is true, does not bear the signatures of any person. We, therefore, thought it advisable to send for the original settlement record in which this pedgree is to be found and to see for ourselves whether the original document does or does not bear the signatures of any person. The original file was sent for and on an inspection we found that it bore the signatures of the Sadar Munsarim Babu Gajrat Singh. On an inspection of the file we found that on 24th January 1865, Mr. G B. Maconachie, Settlement Officer had entrusted the Sadar Munsarim with the task of preparing the khewat. On 1st February 1865, he prepared the said pedigree and the khewat on its basis The pedigree bears his signatures as well as the date and is to be found in the file as paper No. 4. On 30th April 1865, the Sadar Munsarim finished his enquiry and submitted his report to the Settlement Officer On 24th July 1865, the Settlement Officer summoned the zemindars of the village to appear before him on 27th July 1865. We further find that all the zemindars of the village appeared and verified the accuracy of the khewat which had been prepared on the basis of the pedigree The khewat was finally accepted and brought on the settlement record on 28th April 1868. There is, therefore, no doubt left in our mind that the original of Ex. 9 is clearly admissible in evidence under S. 35, Evidence Act, as a record prepared by a Settlement Officer in the discharge of his official duty The document shows clearly that Kesari Singh had two sons Imam Khan and Wazir Khan as alleged in the pedigree filed by the plaintiffs. We are, therefore, of opinion that the pedigree, set up by the plaintiffs, a copy of which as stated above, has been attached to this judgment has been fully established and that we are, therefore, unable to accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point

There is, however, another difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs, which we have already indicated and which in our opinion goes to the root of their whole case

In Mathura Prasad Singh v. Bhulan Singh (6) Mr Piggott (now Sir Theodore Piggott) held that where person claimed as the next reversioner to a deceased Hindu he had not merely to prove his descent from the same common ancestor as the person, whose estate he was claiming, but also to adduce some evidence that there was no intermediate heir in existence with a better claim than his.

(5) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 101.

(6) [1912] 15 O. C. 364=14 I. C. 339.

In Bhabuti Singh v. Khetal Singh (7) Mr. Piggott (now Theodore Piggott) and Mr. Lindsay (now Sir Benjamin Lindsay) followed the above case and held that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs who claimed as reversionary heirs to lead some evidence to show that all other lines of descent from the alleged common ancestor were exhausted down to a point, which excluded the possibility of the existence of nearer reversionary heirs than the plaintiffs.

In Ram Din v. Kayastha Pathasala, Allahabad (3) decided by Mr Stuart, C.J, (now Sir Louis Stuart) and Mr. Kendall, A. J. C., the same view of law was again followed and it was held that where plaintiffs claimed as reversionary heirs of a deceased person in order to establish their right they must prove their relationship to the deceased and also that they were the nearest reversioners to him.

In a subsequent case reported as Chandan Singh v. Bhabhuti Singh (8) the case of Mathura Prasad v. Bhulan Singh (6) was again followed by Mr Stuart, A.J.C., (now Sir Lous Stuart) and it was held that a person claiming as nearest reversioner to a deceased person must establish that there was no intermediate heir in existence with a better claim to succeed to the property of the deceased than he asserts.

In Jashodha v. Murlidhar (9) Mr. Wazir Hasan, A. J. C, (now Mr. Justice Wazir Hasan) laid down the same rule following Mathura Prasad's case (6). He held that where a pedigree on which the plaintiff came into Court on the face of it showed a number of persons higher in degree than the plaintiff, he was not entitled to succeed unless he established that those who were higher in degree than him, were extinguished on the date when the succession opened. If he failed to prove this his suit must fail.

We might also mention a case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council and reported as Surjan Singh v. Sardar Singh (10). That was a case which went up in appeal to the Privy Council from a decision by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in which that Court had held that plaintiff before he can be entitled to succeed in a case like this must adduce some evidence to show that there was no intermediate heir in existence who could have a better claim than him. This will appear from p. 74 of the report, where the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner of Oudh is quoted. The decision of the appeal Court was confirmed by their Lordships.

We are, therefore, of opinion that before the plaintiffs can be held to be entitled to a decree in the present case they must establish that on the date of the death of Mt. Sundar in December 1923, no other person higher in degree was in existence. We have examined the record carefully and spent a great deal of time in going through the evidence of all the witnesses in the case but we are driven to the conclusion that at least so far as Ghasite Khan, father of Shamsher Khan, defendant 5 is concerned it is not established that he was dead at the time of the death of Mt. Sundar. He is admittedly a reversioner nearer in degree than either of the plaintiffs. Najaf Khan, P W. 1, deposed only to the effect that all male members in the family except himself, Sarfaraz Khan and Shamsher Khan were dead and that those three persons were the nearest reversioners alive. The value of his statement as to the plaintiffs being the nearest reversioners is, in our opinion, of no value whatever, when we find from the pedigree that although he is a degree lower than Sarfaraz Khan yet he states that both of them are the nearest reversioners. Similarly Sarfaraz Khan, P W 6, deposed to the effect that amongst the male members only he, Shamsher Khan, and Najaf Khan were alive. On the strength of this evidence it was contended that it ought to be held that on the date of the death of Mt Sundar these three persons were the nearest reversionary heirs. We, however, regret to observe that we cannot come to that conclusion, as the mere evidence to the effect that certain persons were now dead and that the persons who were alive were the nearest reversioners, does not prove that they were the nearest reversioners, at the time of the death of Mt. Sundar. She died in the year 1923 and the evidence of these witnesses was recorded in 1926. It may have been that when these witnesses gave their evidence they were the nearest reversioners, but this is not enough They have to establish further that they and they alone were the persons alive at the time of the death of Mt Sundar. If the plaintiffs had given even a slight evidence to that effect, we would have held that they had discharged the burden of proof which rested upon them, but we are painfully driven to the conclusion stated above since the evidence, as it stands, is not sufficient to discharge the burden of proof, which is required of them in law The case appears to us to have been very badly conducted but for this the plaintiffs must be held entirely responsible We were asked to remand the case for further evidence, but there are no grounds for our acceding to this request

(8) [1915] 2 O. L. J. 246=30 I. C. 220.

(10) [1901] 23 All. 72=27 I.A. 183=7 Sar. 752 (P.C.).

After arguments had been concluded in the case the learned counsel for the plaintiffs drew our attention to one more document, namely, Ex 6 which according to his contention proved that Ghasite Khan, father of Shamsher Khan, defendant 5, who could be the only person nearer in degree than the plaintiffs, was dead in 1923 We have examined that document It is a khewat prepared at the last settlement of the District Lucknow by Pandit Raghubar Daval, the Settlement Deputy Collector The khewat mentions the name of Shamsher Khan (defendant 5) son of Ghasite Khan as one of the cosharers in the village It was on the strength of this entry that it was argued that Ghasite Khan must be considered to be dead. We regret we are unable to take that view The mere fact that the name of a particular person is to be found entered in the khewat of a particular village as having a certain share does not show that his father is dead, unless it is proved that the share, which is recorded in his name was so recorded by virtue of inheritance It is quite possible that the father may have gifted his share to his son or that the son may have obtained that share by purchase or other means Unless it be established that the share which stands recorded in his name is the same share which was owned by his father and that it came to be recorded in his name on his death by right of inheritance, no conclusion like the one which the plaintiffs asked us to draw in this case, can be drawn.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the requirements of law which have been consistently followed in Oudh as shown by the cases, which we have quoted above have not been fulfilled in this case. The plaintiffs have, in our opinion, failed to establish that Ghasite Khan, father of defendant 5, was dead at the time of the death of Mt Sundar It is admitted that if he had been alive on the date, he would be one degree nearer than the plaintiffs

We, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they are the nearest reversioners of Mt Sundar's husband In view of these findings it is not necessary that we should discuss the question of custom involved in the case

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs

First Appeal No. 50 of 1928, Decided on 18th October 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 17th January 1928

(a) Mahomedan Law—De facto guardian—Agreement to refer to arbitration by mother for her minor children is not binding —But award if not unfair or corrupt and recognized for over 14 years should be recognized as family arrangement and should not be disturbed.

No doubt agreement to refer to arbitration executed by a Mahomedan mother on behalf of her minor children cannot be considered to be binding on them and the award is an inoperative document as an award, but if the scheme of distribution promulgated in the award is in no way perverse or unfair or influenced by any corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators and has been followed without any objection whatever for a long period extending over 14 years can well be recognized as a family settlement and should not be disturbed. Even if the agreement and the award based thereon are both legally inoperative documents, the settlement relating to the family property laid down in the award should be considered to be a valid family settlement : 35 All. 337 (P.C.), Rel. on.; A,I.R. 1918 P.C. 11, 47 Cal. 713 and *A. * (b) Family Settlement — Mahomedan Law — Minors' interests fully safeguard- ed—Adult members accepting arrangement —It is binding also on minors.

Even in the case of a Mahomedan family if the family arrangement is a fair and equitable one it should not be rejected simply on the ground that the minors were not represented by a properly constituted guardian of theirs at the time when the arrangement was arrived at. If the interests of the minor children are fully safeguarded and if all the adult members of the family accept the arrangement it should be held binding on the minors. 33 All. 356 (P.C.), 3 *Agra H. (c) Family Settlement—Although persons relinquish their claim on property allotted to others it is not transfer but family arrangement.

Where several members of a family arrive at a settlement each one relinquishing his claim in respect of the property not falling to his share and recognizing the rights of the others as they had previously asserted ft to the portions allotted to them respectively, the transaction should be looked upon as a family arrangement and not as a transfer from one member to the other member 33 All. 356 (P.C.), *A. (d) Family Settlement—Existing dispute is not necessary—Avoiding possible or anticipated dispute is sufficient consideration.

In order to have a valid family settlement it is not necessary that there must be a dispute in existence at the time when such settlement is arrived at. It may be that the members of the family may anticipate disputes likely to arise thereafter and if in order to prevent the arising of such disputes and to secure peace and happiness in the family they arrive at a settlement among themselves, the settlement arrived at must be deemed to be valid : 22 *O. (g) Evidence Act, S. 35 — Guardianship certificate in Oudh by District Judge is admissible under S. 35.

In the province of Oudh a certificate of guardian ship issued by a District Judge to a guardian appointed by him of a particular minor is a record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties and an entry in such record is therefore admissible under S. 35 : *A. Judgment—These are two connected appeals arising out of a suit brought in the Court of the Subordiuate Judges of Lucknow by one Mohammad Ejaz Husain and his sister Mt. Khaliqunnisa principally against defendant 4, Sheikh Amir, Hasan, Mt Faiyazunnissa defendant 7 and defendant 8, Mt. Hamidunnissa, the wife of defendant 4.

The relationship between the parties to this suit will appear from a pedigree which we attach to this judgment [see p. 136—Ed] and which will also facilitate the appreciation of many points raised in the case

The allegations upon which the plaintiffs came into Court are to the effect that one Sheikh Mohammad Husain was possessed of large properties situate in Lucknow and other places He had married twice From the first wife were born one, Sheikh Amir Hasan, defendant 4, and three daughters one of whom died during the lifetime of Sheikh Mohammad Husain and the other two are Habibunnissa and Wahidunnissa, defendants 5 and 6 in the case. Defendant 7 was his second wife From her were born four sons, Mohammad Iftikhar Husain, defendant 1, Mohammad Ejaz Husain who is plaintiff 1, Mahmud Husain who is defendant 2, and Ekram Husain, defendant 3. From this second wife Mohammad Husain had also a daughter named Khaliqunnissa whe is plaintiff 2 in this case It will thus appear that the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 6 are the issues of Sheikh Mohammad Husain, defendant 7, Mt. Faiyazunnissa is his second wife and defendant 8 is Mt. Hamidunnissa wife of Amir Hasan defendant 4.

The properties left by Mohammad Husain are entered in lists (A), (B) and (C) attached to the plaint. The properties mentioned in list (D) attached to the plaint are alleged by the plaintiffs to be properties acquired from the profits of the property left by Sheikh Mohammad Husain and therefore to constitue a portion of his assets. List (E) attached to the plaint contains the mesne profits in respect of those properties which the plaintiffs claim in this suit.

The plaintiffs alleged that Mohammad Husain died on 4th March 1912 leaving the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 7 as his heirs at the time of his death of whom the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 were minors at that time, the remaining heirs being majors; that defendant 7 the mother of the plaintiffs and of defendants 1 to 3, was a pardanashin and illiterate lady and was not fully aware of the assets and the nature of the property left by Sheikh Mohammad Husain; that defendant 4, Sheikh Amir Hasan, had the management of the entire property during the lifetime of Sheikh Mohammad Husain and continued to do so after his father's death; that defendant 4 got defendant 7 to execute an agreement of reference to arbitration on 25th March 1912 which resulted in an award which was delivered by the arbitrators on 2nd April 1912 and that under that award several items of the property were declared to be the properties belonging to Sheikh Amir Hasan, defendant 4 and Mt. Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7 having been acquired by the deceased for them or having bean gifted to defendant 4 by the deceased in his lifetime, and the rest of the property was declared as one in which all the heirs of Mohammad Husain were to get their shares due to them under the Mahomedan law.

The plaintiffs further alleged tha they are not bound by the agreement o by the award since Mt. Faiyazunnissa, their mother. did not execute the agreement out of her free will nor was she competent in law to execute it on their behalf; in short they challenged the validity of the arbitration proceedings They also contended that they were entitled to their share in the property entered in list (D) since it had been acquired out of the profits of the estate left by Sheikh Mohammad Husain and constituted a portion of his assets. They also claimed mesne profits in respect of that property which they entered in list (E) attached to the plaint. They further alleged that plaintiff 1 attained his majority on 21st October 1923, and plaintiff 2 did so on 8th October 1925, and that they came to know of the facts mentioned in the plaint in the beginning of October 1926 and consequently their suit which was brought on 20th October 1926 was within limitation. The plaintiffs claimed a decree for possession by actual partition in respect of 21/104th share in the property mentioned in lists (A) to (D) attached to the plaint and claimed mesne profits to the extent of Rs. 6,633-7-6 together with interest at 6%. They also claimed future mesne profits.

Defendant 7 did not put in appearance in the Court below. Defendants 1 to 3 who are the real brothers of the plaintiffs supported the plaintiffs' case. The suit was mainly contested by defendant 4 and defendants 5 and 6 who are his real sisters supported him in his defence. Defendant 8 said that she was the owner of the property which was entered in her name and that she had purchased it out of her own money and that the plaintiffs could not claim any share therein.

Defendant 4 contended that the agreement and the award were binding on the plaintiffs. Even if the agreement and the award be not considered to be valid the scheme and the division of the property embodied therein had been accepted by all the members of the family of Sheikh Mohammad Husain and thus constituted a valid family arrangement which the plaintiffs could not be allowed to challenge. Regarding the properties which were purchased by Sheikh Mohammad Husain during his lifetime either in his name or in the name of his stepmother Mt. Faiyazunnissa he maintained that those transactions could be considered to be benami but the properties dealt with in them should not be considered to be the exclusive properties of the persons in whose name they had been acquired, since the idea of Sheikh Mohammad Husain was to provide for him and his stepmother Mt. Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7. Regarding one principal item of the property in suit, namely, the factory with building and land known as Victor Ice and Flour Mill situate in Bhagh Sherjang in the City of Lucknow which is item 9 of list A, he contended that the plaintiffs could not claim any share in that factory since it had been given to him by Sheikh Mohammad Husain by means of an oral gift about two months before his death and it was therefore his own property. Regarding the two ice factories, one at Aishbagh and the other at Gorakhpore which had been recently started by the defendant and which were to be found as items 1 and 2 of list (D), the defence was that these factories had been built and started by himself with his own funds and could not be in way considered to be a portion of the assets of his father Sheikh Mohammad Husain, deceased, and that consequently the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim any share therein. As to items 3 and 4 entered in the same list (D) which consisted of a new residential house built close to the factory at Bagh Sherjang and of mortgagee rights in respect of Chak Dugawan situate in Lucknow under a deed executed in his own favour, he alleged that these were his own exclusive properties and the plaintiffs could not claim a share therein. He also denied the plaintiffs' right to claim any profits in respect of the three items of property mentioned in list (E) attached to the plaint. Those profits were in respect of the Aishbagh factory, the factory at Gorakhpore, the Chak Dugawan property and the property in Amethi which had been acquired by defendant 8. He further pleaded that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by limitation. His contention was that plaintiff 1 was born in August 1900 and the suit was brought in 1926, more than three years after the attainment of majority and was thus barred by limitation

The main points therefore for decision in this case were as follows: 1. Whether the award dated 2nd April 1912, could be considered to be valid as such or at any rate as a family settlement ?

2. Whether the Victor Ice and Flour Factory situate in Bagh Sherjang Mohalla Rakabganj, City Lucknow had been gifted orally by Sheikh Mohammad Husain to Amir Husain, defendant 4 during his lifetime some two months before his death ? 3. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any share in the ice factories at Aishbagh, City Lucknow and at Gorakhpore, and in the profits thereof or whether they are entitled only to their share in the old Victor Ice and Flour Factory situate at Bagh Sherjang at Lucknow in case the family settlement and oral gift set up by defendant 4 are held not to be established? 4 If the plaintiffs be found to be entitled only to their share in the old Victor Ice and Flour Factory what is the proper valuation of that factory as it stood at the date of the death of Mohammad Husain and should the plaintiffs be allowed any interest on the sum representing their share and if so, at what rate ? 5 Whether the items Nos 1 to 8 mentioned in list (A) attached to the plaint were acquired by Mohammad Husain as benami in the names of his son Amir Hasan (defendant 4) and his wife Faiyazunnissa (defendant 7) or whether they are their own proprietors having been acquired by him for their use and benefit? 6. Whether the residential house built by defendant 4 close to the site of the old Victor Ice and Flour Factory at Bagh Sherjang and the mortgagee rights in Chak Dugawan could be treated as assets of Mohammad Husain ? 7. Whether the muafi property situate in village Amethi District Lucknow acquired by defendant 8 is her own property or should that also be treated as assets of Mohammad Hussain ? (8) Is the claim of plaintiff 1 barred by limitation ?

The learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow who tried the case with care and attention decided by his judgment dated 17th January 1928 that the award could not be considered to be a binding document inasmuch as Mt. Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7 the mother of the plaintiffs had no right in law to agree to an arbitration on behalf of the plaintiffs who were minors at the time. The case of a family settlement though taken in the pleadings does not seem to have been pressed before him in the course of arguments and the learned Subordinate Judge has not therefore given any finding on the point. He held that the oral gift set up by defendant 4 in respect of the Victor Ice and Flour Factory at Bagh Sherjang, Lucknow, had not been established. He also held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the new factories started by defendant 4 at Aishbagh and at Gorakhpore nor in the profits thereof but they were entitled to their share in the Victor Ice and Flour Factory as it stood at the time of the death of Mohammad Husain He held that the plaintiffs were entitled on this account to their share in the sum of Rs. 25,526 which he found to be the value of the factory at that time. He awarded the plaintiffs interest on their share in the said sum at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem As to items 1 to 8, mentioned in list (A) attached to the plaint, which had been acquired by Mohammad Husain in the names of his son Amir Hasan, defendant 4 and his wife Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7 he held that they had not been acquired by him as benami but had been acquired by him for the use and benefit of defendant 4 and defendant 7 and were therefore their exclusive property As to the residential house built by Amir Hasan defendant 4 adjacent to the site of the old factory in Bagh Sherjang and the mortgagee rights in Chak Dugawan his finding was to the effect that these properties were the properties which had been acquired by defendant 4 after the death of Mohammad Husain and could not be considered to be the assets of Mohammad Husain As to the muafi land situate in village Amethi, District Lucknow, he held that that was the exclusive property of defendant 8 acquired from her own funds and could not under any circumstances be treated as the assets of Mohammad Husain

On the question of limitation he decided in favour of plaintiff 1 and hold that his suit was within limitation.

As a result of these findings he decreed the plaintiffs' suit by giving them a decree of 21/104th share out of the items which he held to be the property left by Mohammad Husain at the time of his death and also out of the sum of Rs 25,526 the value of the Victor Ice and Flour Factory As stated above he awarded to them interest on their share in this sum at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from 4th March 1912 the date of the death of Sheikh Mohammad Husain to the date of realization. A preliminary decree for partition was directed by him to be prepared in the case. Both the plaintiffs as well as defendant 4 have filed appeals against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appeal of defendant 4 is No 50 of 1928 and that filed by the plaintiffs is No. 61 of 1928

Defendant 8, Mt Hamidunnissa, wife of the defendant 4, has filed cross-objections to the effect that she should have been allowed her costs of the suit. The result of the two appeals is that the whole case has been argued before us in regard to every point involved therein

We have heard arguments in this case at great length and are indebted to the counsel for the parties for having argued their respective cases in an able and exhaustive manner. We now proceed to give our findings on each of these points which we have stated above and need not repeat them again

First point.—The question relating to the validity of the award was presented by defendant 4 from two points of view. Firstly that the award was valid, Mt. Faiyazunnissa being fully competent to refer the matter to arbitration since she was a testamentary guardian of her minor children having been appointed as such by her husband Sheikh Mohammad Husain Secondly, that the scheme of distribution of the property as detailed in the award constituted a valid family settlement binding on the plaintiffs and on all the members of the family of the deceased Shoikh Mohammad Husain. It was only the first aspect which was argued before the learned Subordinate Judge and it is unfortunate that the second aspect was not argued before him on behalf of defendant 4 Under the circumstances we have not had the benefit of the views of the learned Subordinate Judge on that point. In our opinion the matter was so important that we allowed the learned counsel for the defendant-appellant to argue it at full length and we shall state our conclusion presently.

As to the validity of the award the learned Subordinate Judge held that it was invalid since Mt Faiyazunnissa defendant 7 who was the mother of the plaintiffs had not been proved to have been the testamentary guardian of the plaintiffs. She was, in his opinion, a person who was not entitled to enter into such an agreement on behalf of the plaintiffs since she could not be considered to be their guardian. We think that on this point the view of the learned Subordinate Judge is right In Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the mother of a Mohammedan minor had no higher powers to deal with his property than any outsider or non-relative who happened to have charge of the minor for the time being. The facts that she was his de facto guardian could not invest her with any power to deal with the infant's property. This is now the settled rule of law in this country and on the basis of that rule it was held by the Calcutta High Court in Mohsiuddin Ahmed v Kabiruddin Ahmed (2) that an agreement executed by the mother of a Muhammadan minor to refer to arbitration any dispute on behalf of the minor will not be binding since such agreement would necessarily, if acted upon, involve dealings with the immovable property of the minor In a recant case decided by a Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party and which will be found reported in Mohammad Jamil v. Mohammad Hafiz (3), the same view was taken : vide p. 867 (of 5 O. W. N.).

We are, therefore, in entire agreement with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the agreement to refer to arbitration executed by Mt. Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7, on behalf of her minor children cannot be considered to be binding on them and the award if looked at from that point of view must be held to be an inoperative document

We are, however, of opinion that the scheme of distribution promulgated in the award, and which the learned Subordinate Judge has found to be in no way perverse or unfair or influenced by any corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators and which has been followed without any objection whatever for a long period extending over fourteen years can well be recognized as a family settlement and we are extremely reluctant to disturb the arrangement arrived at so far back as April 1912.

There were several objections raised by the learned counsel for the respondent to our considering the scheme of the distribution of the property laid down by the award as a family settlement and we propose to deal with each of those objections

The first objection raised by the learned counsel for the respondents was to the effect that Mohammad Husain had died on 4th March 1912, the agreement to refer to arbitration had been executed on 25th March 1912 and the award was delivered by the arbitrators on 2nd April 1912. The close proximity of these dates was according to him significant. He said that the time selected for arbitration was inopportune and that Mt Faiyazunnissa was not in a proper position to look after the interests of the minors. He contended that according to law she could not be considered to be the guardian of the plaintiffs who were minors at the time. We have considered this objection but have come to the conclusion that there is not much substance in it. Mt Faiyazunnissa, defendant 7, has not entered into the witness-box to depose to the effect that at the time that the arbitration was taking place she was in such grief that she did not understand what was being done She is a competent lady and we find from the documentary evidence on the record that she was appointed a guardian of her minor children including the plaintiffs from the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow : vide Ex. A 111 P. R. 87 and Ex. A 112 P. R 91 of Part. III The persons who were appointed arbitrators were Sheikh Aulad Ali and Sheikh Khurshed Husain both residents of the City of Lucknow, and one Maulvi Nasiruddin resident of District Bara Banki but residing at that time in the same mohalla in which all the children of Mohammad Husain were living at the time. The award was attested by two persons named Mohammad Tawangar Ali and Mohammad Ghiasuddin. Of these Tawangar Ali was the father of Mt Faiyazunnissa and the maternal grandfather of the plaintiffs. It is in evidence that he was present while the arbitration proceedings were going on and had also attested the agreement to refer to arbitration (Ex A 110 P R. 70). Mohammad Tawangar Ali was present at the time of the registration of the agreement executed by Mt. Faiyazunnissa. Indeed she was identified by him before the Sub-Registrar. When the award was presented for registration Tawangar Ali again identified the umpire Mohammad Nasiruddin. There is therefore no doubt left in our minds that Tawangar Ali knew what was going on and he could well have protected the interests of the minors.

The parties who had referred the matter to arbitration were Amir Hasan, his two sisters and Mt Faiyazunnissa, the mother of these minor children. If the settlement which was arrived at was a fair and equitable arrangement and was accepted by all the adult members of the family we do not see why it should not be held binding on the minor members of the family even if they were no parties to such a settlement. The chief point which we have to see is whether the arrangement to be found in the award was a proper and equitable arrangement. If that condition is not fulfilled the settlement can by no means be considered to be binding on the minors. If, however, it is a fair and proper arrangement, we do not see why the plaintiffs should now be allowed to challenge it after it has been acted upon by every body for a long number of years The justification for the principle of representation of the minors is to be found in the fact that their interests are properly safeguarded and that the arrangement arrived at is an equitable one If we find that there were persons present at the time who could look after the interest of the minors and if we further find that the arrangement was a fair and equitable one we do not feel that we should be justified in rejecting that arrangement simply on the ground that the minors were not represented by a properly constituted guardian of theirs at the time when the arrangement was arrived at In the case of Hindu families such arrangements are of usual occurrence and if found to be just and equitable they are upheld in spite of the fact that some members of the family are found to be minors. We do not see any reason why a different principle should be applied in the case of a Muhammadan family. Indeed we feel that if this principle were not held to apply to the case of a Muhamedan family it would be impossible to get a family settlement if one of the members of that family happens to be a minor with no legally constituted guardian. In view of the facts which we have stated above we hold that the interests of the minor children of Mohammad Husain should be considered to have been fully safeguarded and if all the adult members of his family accepted the arrangement laid down in the award there is no reason why it should not be held binding on the plaintiffs.

The next objection which was taken by the learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs was that if the agreement and the award based thereon are both legally inoperative documents, the settlement relating to the family property laid down in the award should not be considered to be a valid family settlement. We do not agree with that view. It may be that the agreement and the award as such may not be binding on the plaintiffs but there is no reason why the scheme of division of the property among the various members of the family laid down in the award should not be considered to be valid if it is found to be just and equitable and one that has been followed and acted upon by the various members of the family for a long period of time. We are fortified in this view by a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brijraj Singh v. Sheodan Singh (4) That was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for partition of joint family property which consisted of ancestral family properties. The head of the family to which the property belonged was one Rae Balwant Singh who had executed a will in respect of the said property and by virtue of that will had made a partition of the said property It was clear that a will executed by a member of a joint Hindu family even though he may be the head thereof is invalid in law and it was therefore contended by the defendants in that case that the partition effected by the will could not be held to be valid since it could not be treated as a deed of partition but was intended to operate only as a will which it purported to be.

The trial Judge took the view that the arrangement laid down in the will ought to be considered to be a valid family settlement since it had been accepted and acted upon by all the members of the family for a long series of years and the plaintiffs could not therefore impeach its validity. The High Court at Allahabad in appeal, however, took a different view and held that the will could not be treated as evidence of a family settlement and since it purported to deal with the joint ancestral property it could have no operation. On behalf of the defendant it was argued before their Lordships of the Privy Council that the partition exhibited by the will had been acted upon for a long number of years and that it could not now be impeached as invalid under Hindu law. Their Lordships accepted this view and took the same view of the case as was taken by the trial Judge

Their Lordships observed that the document was much more than a will since it could well be described as a family arrangement contemporaneously made and acted upon by all the parties. Their Lordships remarked that it was treated as such at the time, that mutation of names had been effected accordingly and that the scheme laid down therein had been acted upon by all parties for a series of years without any dispute or misunderstanding as to their respective rights under it and the arrangement exhibited by it could not now be upset. The circumstances similar to those which existed in that case are present in the case before us The award may be an invalid document but the scheme of partition exhibited by it was accepted as a family settlement by every member of the family of Mohammad Husain. It has been found to be a just and equitable arrangement and has been acted upon by all the members of the family without any dispute or objection having been raised against it for a period of over fourteen years. It would therefore be obviously unjust to set aside this arrangement now merely on the ground that the award could not be held operative in law.

The next objection raised by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs was that if the effect of the award was that the minors lost a portion of the property to which they were entitled it ought to be treated as an alienation of their property and since there was no legally constituted guardian of theirs the settlement could not be upheld. We regret we are unable to take this view of the family settlement. In a case which went to their Lordships of the Privy Council and which will be found reported in Khunni Lal v Gobind Krishna Narain (5), Mr. Ameer Ali delivering the judgment of their Lordships accepted the principle laid down in a case decided by the High Court N. W. P. and reported in Lala Oudh Beharee Lal v. Mewa Koonwer (6) which was to the effect that the true character of such a transaction appeared to be a settlement between the several members of the family of their disputes each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share and each recognizing the the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively, and it was in this light rather than as conferring a new distinct title on each other that the transaction should be re-regarded. The same principle was affirmed by their Lordships in a subsequent case reported in Ramsumran Prasad v. Syam Kumari (7). Lord Phillimore in delivering the judgment of the Board while referring to the previous case observed :

(4) [1913] 35 All. 337=19 I. C. 826=40 I. A. 161 (P.C.).

(5) [1911] 33 All. 356=10 I. C. 477=38 I. A. 87 (P.C.).

"This Board held that the compromise on its true construction did not mean an alienation and that it was not right to say that the heir at law or the derivative purchasers derived a title from the daughters. It is obvious that to put it as the respondents in that case did, that the purchasers derived title from the daughters, was begging the question. The property belonged to one or other, or possibly both, of the parties to the dispute, and the compromise proceeded upon the footing that it was uncertain in which of them the title was As their Lordships put it, it was based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledged and defined what that title was."

The principle of law thus laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council amounts to this that where several members of a family arrive at a settlement each one relinquishing his claim in respect of the property not falling to his share and recognizing the rights of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portions allotted to them, respectively, the transaction should be looked upon as a family arrangement and not as a transfer from one member to the other member This view was also held by Mr. Lindsay, J C (Now Lindsay, J.) in Dilapat Singh v Kashi Nath (8). The learned Judge held in that case that the test of a family arrangement was that it constituted a recognition of a pre-existing title and not that the parties derived any title from each other. In White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity (Vol 1 Edn 8) it is stated on p. 241 that the real consideration and motive of a compromise consisting of a family arrangement is not the sacrifice of a right but the abandonment of a claim We are also supported in this view by a recent decision of a Bench of this Court consisting of Stuart, C. J. and Hasan, J. and reported in Harihar Partap Bakhsh Singh v. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, known as the Gangwal case (9).

We therefore come to the conclusion that the scheme of settlement as laid down in the award cannot be looked upon as an alienation on behalf of the minor members and as such invalid

The next objection raised in respect of this family arrangement was that it had not been proved that the plaintiffs ever adopted the arrangement The reply to this argument is a very short one We have already stated that Mt. Faiyazunnisa, the mother of the plaintiffs was appointed their guardian by virtue of an order of the District Judge of Lucknow passed on 18th September 1912 (P R 91 of part 3) The appointment was, therefore, made about six months after the death of Sheikh Mohammad Husain and a little over five months after the award In the application for guardianship filed by Mt. Faiyazunnissa she showed as the property of the minors the very same property which had been given to them under the award This was a very clear evidence of her conduct accepting the arrangement laid down in the award. After she had been appointed as guardian by the Court no objection was raised by her to the effect that the arrangement of partition laid down by the award was injurious to her minor children of whom she had been appointed guardian by the Court. In our opinion her adoption of the arrangement after her appointment as guardian should be considered to be an adoption of the arrangement by the minors themselves But matters did not rest here. It is admitted that Mohammad Iftikhan Husain, the eldest son among the children of Faiyazunnissa, who is defendant 1 in the case and who attained his majority on 18th August 1920—vide Ex. 7 P. R. 92 of part 3—has not till now raised any objection to the validity of this arrangement The present suit was filed on 20th October 1926. It would thus appear that one of the sons of Faiyazunnissa has not chosen to repudiate the arrangement arrived at under the award and has abided by it for a period extending over six years. Plaintiff 1, Mohammad Ejaz Husain reached his age of majority on 21st October 1923 and for a full period of three years he accepted the arrangement laid down by the award It is only one day before the expiration of the period of limitation that he has filed the present suit. These facts speak for themselves.

We further find that on the basis of mortgage-deeds dated 16th September 1905, 19th September 1906 and 11th December 1906 which were mortgage-deeds executed in favour of Sheikh Mohammad Husain and which have fallen into the share of the plaintiff and his brothers under the award—vide Ex. 1 P. R. 73,—a suit was instituted by Iftikhar Husain, defendant 1 after attaining majority and by his other three brothers of whom plaintiff 1 was one as minors under the guardianship of their mother Mt. Faiyazunnissa on 13th October 1922. A decree was passed in their favour on 11th October 1923 This decree was made absolute on 1st November 1924 The application for making the decree absolute is on the record vide Ex. A 120 P. R. 179. This application was filed on 22nd September 1924 and is signed both by Iftikhar Husain and Ejaz Husain, plaintiff 1. It is admitted that the decree absolute which was passed on the basis of this application on 1st November 1924 has been put into execution and the property which was mortgaged has been purchased by the plaintiffs at an auction sale on 25th September 1926 : vide note appended to item 17 of list (A) P. R 9 Part 1. It is therefore clearly established that the award was acted upon not only by defendant 1, after he became a major but also by plaintiff 1 after he attained his majority.

One other objection raised by the learned counsel for the appellants was that the settlement exhibited by the award could not be considered to be a valid settlement since it had not been proved by any evidence on the record that there was any dispute among the children of Mohammad Husain relating to partition or otherwise. It was argued that there being no dispute it was idle to contend that any settlement could have been arrived at. We do not think this contention is possessed of any force. In order to have a valid family settlement it is not necessary that there must be a dispute in existence at the time when such settlement is arrived at It may be that the members of the family may anticipate disputes likely to arise thereafter and if in order to prevent the arising of such disputes and to secure peace and happiness in the family they arrive at a settlement among themselves, the settlement arrived at must be deemed to be valid. We are supported in this view by a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Gandharp Singh v Nirmal Singh (10). It was held in that case that in order to validate a family settlement it is not necessary that there should be an existing dispute. It is sufficient that there should be the possibility of a further dispute which might result in litigation, and to avoid a possible litigation and the consequent preservation of the family property is to be deemed a sufficient consideration for a family settlement.

We may now summarize briefly how the facts stand. Sheikh Mohammad Husain died on 4th March 1912 leaving a widow and a certain number of children some of whom were majors and some of whom minors. The widow was not the only person left to look after the interest of her minor children but there was her own father a respectable gentleman against whom nothing has been established and who stood in the position of the maternal grandfather of the plaintiffs Certain items of property stood in the name of one of the sons who was a major and certain items of property stood in the name of the mother of the plaintiffs. The Ice and Flour Factory which was owned by Mohammad Husain was claimed by one of the sons as his property having been gifted to him during the lifetime of Mohammad Husain. All the members of the family agreed to refer their disputes to arbitration. An award was delivered by the arbitrators against the fairness of which nothing has been established The learned trial Judge has found it to contain a fair and just arrangement. The partition effected by the award seems to have been accepted by every member of the family since no objection by any body has been proved to have ever been raised against it. Soon after the award the mother of the plaintiffs files an application for guardianship in a competent Court in which she shows the property belonging to the minors the same which had been allotted to them under the award. At no time after her appointment as guardian do we find her raising any dispute or objection to the arrangement laid down by the said award Matters continue in this position for a long number of years One of her sons attains majority but does not dispute the said arrangement. Another son attains majority and he too does not for about three years after attaining his majority dispute the arrangement. Indeed we find him joining with his elder brother in bringing a suit on the basis of the mortgages allotted to him under the said award. A decree was passed by the Court and the same property was purchased by both of them in execution proceedings held on the basis of that decree. We further find that it is after a period of over 14 years that the present suit has been instituted by the present plaintiffs.

Looking to the facts and circumstances which we have mentioned above we are clearly of opinion that although the award dated 2nd April 1912 may not be an effective and good award in law as such but the arrangement laid down by it for the distribution of the property was accepted by all the adult members of the family at the time, was also subsequently accepted by the mother of the plaintiffs who was appointed by the Court as their guardian and no dispute or objection has been raised against it for a period of 14 years. We therefore hold that the arrangement of distribution as exhibited by the award dated 2nd April 1912, must be upheld as a valid family arrangement.

Point No. 2. This point relates to the alleged oral gift by Mohammad Hussain to his son Amir Hasan, defendant 4. The learned Subordinate Judge has decided this point against the defendant and has held that the alleged oral gift has not been established. The learned counsel for the defendant-appellant has taken us through the entire evidence on the record on this point, but we do not find that evidence sufficient to enable us to give a finding in favour of the defendant. The first point which strikes us is that Mohammad Husain was a man of business and had large dealings both commercial and otherwise. For such a man to make an oral gift of such a large property as that of Victor Ice and Flour Mills seems to us to be improbable. The second point which we should like to mention is that if defendant 4 wanted to prove the oral gift it was necessary for him to set it up in his pleadings with accuracy as to detail and to prove it as alleged This rule was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council so early as 1867 in regard to nuncupative, i. e., oral wills : vide Baboo Beer Pertab v. Rajendra Pertab (11), where their Lordships observed that where a party relied upon an oral will he was bound to prove with the utmost precision the words on which he relied with other circumstances of time and place. Referring to para. 13 of the written statement of defendant 4 we find that without giving any time or specifying any place his plea was in the following words :

"Mohammad Husain about two months before his death having gifted the said factory to the answering defendant made him the owner thereof and delivered him proprietary possession instead of that of a manager."

On 14th May 1927, he was asked to give the exact date of the oral gift, but he was unable to do so When defendant 4 gave his evidence in Court and was in the witness-box his own side put him this question and on P R 96 he stated that the gift was made two or 2½ months before his death We thus see that till after the defendant went into the witness-box no indication of time and place as to where this alleged gift took place had been given. In view of this circumstance any proof subsequently given by defendant 4 through his witnesses would in our opinion be considered to be highly suspicious. (Judgment then discussed evidence and concluding that the oral gift was not established proceeded). Point No. 3. The question to be dealt with under this head is to the effect that the two new ice factories started by defendant 4 one at Aishbagh, City Lucknow, and the other at Gorakhpur should be held to have been acquired by defendant 4 out of the profits of the Victor Ice and Flour Factory at Bagh Sherjang, and the plaintiffs should be given a share in those factories and they should also be given mesne profits in respect thereof from 1st September 1925, up to 1st October 1926, as entered in list E. The Subordinate Judge has discussed this question at great length under issues 10 and 11, and has given his finding against the plaintiffs. He has held that the two new factories are the exclusive property of defendant 4 and that the plaintiffs cannot claim any share in them. We are in entire agreement with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point Although after the death of Mohammad Husain, defendant 4 continued to work the Victor Ice and Flour Factory and derived large profits, which enabled him to acquire considerable property afterwards and to develope his business, yet it cannot be said that those profits could be attributed to no other cause but to his being in possession of that factory. It is obvious that until it had been actually worked by defendant 4 and until he had spent his skill and labour on working it, it was not possible for the factory to yield any profits. We find ourselves unable to determine how far these profits could be attributed to one cause or the other and under these circumstances, the only course open to us is what the learned Subordinate Judge did: namely, to determine the valuation of the Victor Ice and Flour Factory situate at Bagh Sherjang, Lucknow, as it stood at the time of the death of Mohammad Husain and to give the plaintiffs a share in the said valuation and in lieu of profits to decree to them interest not at the ordinary Court rate of 6% but at a higher rate, which the learned Subordinate Judge has determined and in our opinion rightly to be 12% per annum

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs relied upon S 88, Trust Act, and upon the well-known case of Docker v Somes (12) We are in full agreement with the principle laid down by the Lord Chancellor in this case On p 324 it was remarked by his Lordship that should in any case a serious difficulty arise in tracing and apportioning the profits, that might be a reason for preferring a fixed rate of interest in that case. In the case before us no accounts of the profits of the factory have been filed, nor has an enquiry been made by the trial Judge on this point Indeed it would have been impossible to make an enquiry and to separate the profits in a manner so as to determine the share of such profits in which the plaintiffs would be entitled to participate. In a case reported in Davis v Davis (13) this proposition has been clearly enunciated by their Lordships of the Court of appeal On p 317 they have laid down the rule that it will be in the option of the Court either to decree the profits or to decree such interest, which it may deem proper in the circumstances and which need not necessarily be the current rate of interest. Our finding, therefore, on this point is that the plaintiffs are neither entitled to any share in the two ice factories started by defendant 4 one at Aishbagh, Lucknow, and the other at Gorakhpur, nor are they entitled to claim any profits of those concerns. The only thing to which the plaintiffs are entitled is the share in such value of the Victor Ice and Flour Factory as may be determined to be the proper valuation thereof at the time of the death of Mohammad Husain. This will be dealt, with under the next point. We also find that the rate of interest, which has been awarded by the learned Subordinate Judge as 12% per annum is a fair rate and it should be awarded to the plaintiff in lieu of profits in consideration of all the circumstances of the case. (Judgment then discussed evidence and proceeded ) It was contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that according to the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council there ought not to be made any presumption in this country as to the property having been acquired for the advancement of the son and of the wife and in support of this contention reliance was placed upon three cases reported in

(1) Gopeekrist Goysain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (14); (2) Nawab Ibrahim Ali Khan v. Ummat-ul-Zohra (15); (3) Lakshmiah Chetty v Kothandarama Pillai (16)

We fully agree with the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in these cases, and are bound to follow it. There being no presumption as to advancement the decision has to be given according to merits in each case. Evidence has been given regarding this matter, which the learned Subordinate Judge has discussed in great detail and we must state that after the whole of the evidence was placed before us we came to exactly the same conclusion as was arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge. (The judgment then discussed evidence and proceeded to consider whether plaintiff 1 attained majority three years prior to October 1926). The document relied upon in this connexion was Ex. 7 the certificate of guardianship granted by the District Judge of Lucknow to Mt. Faiyazunnisa on 20th September 1912. It will be found printed at P. R 92. That document clearly mentions that Ejaz Husain was to attain majority on 21st October 1923 It was contended on behalf of defendant 4 that this document was inadmissible to prove the age The argument was that the document could not be held admissible under S 35, Evidence Act, since it could not be considered to be a record kept by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and consequently any entry therein could not be considered to be relevant. In support of this argument reliance was placed on three rulings, that is, Satis Chunder v Mohendro Lal (17), Gunjra Kuar v. Ablakh Pande (18) and Harihar Prasad Singh v Edul Singh (19).

On behalf of plaintiff 1 reliance was placed on a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Mohan Lal v Muhammad Adil, decided by Messrs. Dalal and Wazir Hasan, A J Cs reported in (20) In this case the three rulings mentioned above were considered but not followed and it was held that a certificate of guardianship issued in Oudh was a record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties and an entry in that certificate was a relevant fact and could be relied upon to prove the age of a particular person

We have examined all these cases ourselves and after examination we are satisfied that the view of law taken by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Mohan Lal v Muhammad Adil (20) is a correct view at least so far as the province of Oudh is concerned.

In Satis Chunder Mukhopadhya v. Mohendro Lal Pathuk (17), the certificate of guardianship was held to be a document which could not be considered to be a record kept by a public servant in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country. It was pointed out that there was no law enjoining upon a Judge to keep a record of such a certificate It was pointed out in Mohan Lal v. Mohammad Adil (20) that the certificates of guardianship so far as the province of Oudh was concerned were issued by the Court of a District Judge in accordance with para 258, Oudh Civil Digest They are to be issued in a particular form prescribed therein. It was also pointed out that para 258, Oudh Civil Digest, which was in force at the time when the present certificate was issued contained a rule framed by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh which was to be reckoned as the High Court for Oudh under S 50, Cl (j), Guardians and Wards Act 1890. When the Chief Court came into existence and the rules were framed by it with the sanction of the Government under the same section of the Guardians and Wards Act, a similar rule has been incorporated in the Oudh Civil Rules as R 272 We think that this position which was pointed out in Mohan Lal v. Muhammad Adil (20) makes the ruling of the Calcutta High Court inapplicable in the province of Oudh We are not aware whether any rule has been framed by the Calcutta High Court under S 50, Cl (j) making it compulsory for the Court of a District Judge to issue a certificate in a prescribed form Be that as it may, it is clear from the Calcutta ruling that this aspect of the case was not present to the mind of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court who decided the said case

As to the case reported in Gunjra Kuar v. Ablakh Pande (18) it is quite enough for us to state that that case can be of no assistance to us in deciding this matter since the judgment reported is a short judgment and does not discuss the question on the merits The case decided by the Calcutta High Court was followed and this was considered sufficient for the decision of the appeal.

In Harihar Prasad Singh v. Edul Singh (19) the question of the admissibility of the certificate of guardianship was never considered The only thing that was held in that case was that an order appointing a guardian could be no evidence of minority and the Calcutta case quoted above was relied upon in support of the proposition. No reasoning is to be found in the said ruling beyond a statement to the effect that the Calcutta ruling laid down the proposition and it ought to be followed.

With all due respect to the learned Judges responsible for the decision of the cases quoted above we are constrained to hold in agreement with the case decided by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and reported in Mohan Lal v Muhamad Adil (20), that in the province of Oudh a certificate of guardianship issued by a District Judge to a guardian appointed by him of a particular minor is a record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties and an entry in such record is therefore admissible under S 35, Evidence Act

We, therefore, hold that the certificate of guardianship filed in this case (Ex. 7) is admissible in proof of the age of plaintiff 1

It was contended on behalf of defendant 4 that the date of birth of plaintiff 1 in Ex. A-79 and A-80 (P. R 172 and 174) was entered as 6th August 1900 and that ought to be considered the correct date of his birth On examination of the facts as disclosed by the evidence on the record it appears to us that that date was not an accurate date of birth and must be rejected. It was stated by plaintiff, Ejaz Husain, in his evidence on P R. 59 that he had to appear for the Second Class Engineer's Examination which was to be held in August 1921 and if he had put his correct date of birth he would not have been allowed to sit for that examination since under the Government rules in force he must have been at the time of the examination over 21 years of age. We have satisfied ourselves by looking into the Government rules on the subject that this is so. It also appears from the evidence of Amir Hasan, defendant 4: vide P. R. 80 that the first certificate which he gave to the plaintiff was on 26th July 1921. This must have been for an examination which was to be held in the month of August next. The plaintiff states clearly that he entered this age, 6th August 1900, in order that he might be 21 years of age in the examination held in August 1921 We accept this explanation and reject the date of birth given in Exs. A79 and A80 as incorrect. Our finding on this point therefore is that plaintiff 1 was actually born on 21st October 1902 According to that conclusion he attained his majority on 21st October 1923 The suit was filed on 20th October 1926 and was within limitation.

The result of all our findings is that the plaintiffs' suit must stand dismissed. We have confirmed every finding of the learned Subordinate Judge except on two points One of those points is that we have disagreed with him on the question of the arrangement as laid down in the award not being binding on the plaintiffs. The other is that we have found the price of the old Victor Ice and Flour Factory situate in Bagh Sherjang, City Lucknow, to be Rs 25,000 at the time of the death of Mohammad Husain instead of Rs 25,526 as found by the learned Subordinate Judge. If we could have found our way not to uphold the arrangement arrived at soon after the death of Mohammad Husain as exhibited by the award dated 2nd April 1912, we would have confirmed the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge on 17th January 1928 as modified by his subsequent judgment dated 8th March 1928 with a slight variation in the price of the factory as indicated above

The result is that the appeal of defendant 4 Sheikh Amir Hasan (No 50 of 1928) will be allowed and the plaintiffs' suit shall stand dismissed. In the special circumstances of the case we order both the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts The appeal brought by the plaintiff's Ejaz Husain and Khaliqunnisa (No 61 of 1928) will stand dismissed but without costs

The cross-objections filed by Mt Hamidunnissa, respondent 8 in appeal No. 61 will also stand dismissed, since we are of opinion that no separate costs should be allowed to her inasmuch as the suit was mainly conducted by her husband, Amir Hasan, who was defendant 4 in the case. No order as to costs in respect of the cross-objections.

Ram Prasad Varma—for Applicant.

Ramapat Ram—for Opposite Party.

Judgment—I have heard the learned counsel of both parties. Mr. Ramapat Ram on behalf of the opposite party raises a preliminary objection that this application is not maintainable under S. 115, Civil P. C, inasmuch as this is not "a case" within the meaning of S 115, Civil P C. He relies upon the ruling in Hemanchal Kunwar v Kandhiya Lal (1), in which it was held that no application for revision would lie against an interlocutory order which did not determine the case but which was made with the object of collecting materials upon which the case was to be determined thereafter. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the applicant relies upon the rulings of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court reported in Riyasat Ali v Rajeshwar Bali (2) and Allahabad Bank v Mohommad Raza Khan (3) In these two rulings it was held that proceedings under which a person is ordered to be added as a defendant amounts to "a case" within the meaning of S 115, Civil P. C, and therefore the order was liable to revision by the High Court. In the present case the learned Munsif refused to make the applicant B. Gopi Nath a defendant in the case. I am therefore, clearly of opinion that the order of the Munsif refusing to allow B Gopi Nath to be made a party is revisable. I, therefore, reject the preliminary objection.

Coming now to the facts of the case, it is necessary to give a very short resume of the events leading up to the present application On the 27th July 1925 B Gopi Nath purchased some land and houses from Mt Haideri Khanum, the mother-in-law of the plaintiff Mumtaz Ali for a sum of Rs. 5,600 On 3rd December 1927 Mumtaz Ali filed a suit against Husaini, a tenant in possession of a house included in the property sold to B, Gopi Nath, for arrears of rent in the Small Cause Court at Lucknow. On 25th January 1928 Gopi Nath filed a suit before the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow for a declaration against Mumtaz Ali and Husaini to the effect that he was the owner of the house and that Mumtaz Ali had no right to sue Husaini for rent in respect of the house sold to him. On 20th June 1928 this suit of Gopi Nath was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow and the appeal against that decision was dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge of Lucknow by his judgment dated 17th December 1928. The plaintiff Mumtaz Ali has now filed a suit before the Munsif of South Lucknow against Husaini claiming arrears of rent in respect of the house sold to Gopi Nath without impleading Gopi Nath In these circumstances it is clear that B Gopi Nath is a very necessary party to the present suit I am unable to understand the reasoning of the learned Munsif whereby he rejected the application of B Gopi Nath to be made a co-defendant If as averred by the learned Munsif the matter in dispute between the parties had been settled by the former decision of the learned Subordinate Judge the present suit before the Munsif ought also to have been summarily dismissed by him on the same reasoning. Be that as it may, I consider that for the ends of justice, B Gopi Nath should have been impleaded in the present suit. I accordingly allow this application for revision, set aside the order of the learned Munsif of South Lucknow, dated 5th November 1928 and direct that Gopi Nath be impleaded as a defendant

Revn. Appln No. 42 of 1928, Decided on 3rd December 1928, from order of 3rd Addl. Dist Judge, Lucknow, D/- 10th September 1928.

 Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 43 —Order of discharge not obtained, nor adjudication annulled—Insolvent cannot apply for second adjudication—Provincial Insolvency Act S. 10 (2).

Under the Provincial Insolvency Act once a person has been declared an insolvent, it is not open to him to apply for a second order of adjudication until he has obtained an order of discharge or until his previous adjudication has been annulled . 26 Bom. 171, Dist.

K. N. Tandon—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision against the order passed by the 3rd Additional District Judge of Lucknow, dated 10th September 1928. The facts of the case are that the respondent, Sultan Husain Khan, was adjudged an insolvent on 20th December 1911. The Act, which was then in force was the Provincial Insolvency Act, 3 of 1907, but the insolvent never obtained an order of discharge which he could have under S 44 of the Act or under S 41 of the Act now in force, viz , Act 5 of 1920. Without obtaining any such order of discharge the respondent has now applied for being re-adjudged an insolvent, the present application filed by him being dated 17th September 1927

One of the objections raised to this application was to the effect that the petitioner had not obtained an order of discharge either under the old Act or under the Act now in force, and without such an order no fresh application could be maintained This contention was, however, overruled by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Lucknow, by his order dated 1st February 1928. An appeal was lodged against the said order to the Court of the learned Additional District Judge, Lucknow, who has maintained that order and has dismissed the appeal.

The applicant, who is one of the creditors mentioned in the present application and who took this objection in the trial Court, has now come to this Court in revision against the order of adjudication passed a second time by the Court below. We have heard the counsel for the parties at considerable length and have come to the conclusion that this application must be allowed. We now proceed to give our reasons for having come to that conclusion. It is clear to us that under the old Act 3 of 1907, after a person has been adjudged an insolvent, all the property that he may acquire subsequent to the said order of adjudication and before his discharge is to vest in the Court or the receiver and would be divisible among the creditors: vide S. 16 (4) Under S 41 of the Act now in force, namely, Act 5 of 1920, it has been provided that it is incumbent upon an insolvent, who has obtained an order for adjudication to obtain an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court at the time of passing an order of adjudication as to his insolvency If no such application is made by the insolvent for an order of discharge, it would be open to any creditor to apply to the Court for getting the order of adjudication annulled under S 43, Act 5 of 1920. It is no doubt true that in the old Act there was no such similar provision and it was open to an insolvent to apply for discharge whenever he chose to do so. This, however, does not mean that if he failed to apply for that discharge, it would be open to him to apply a second time for an order for adjudication It would be anomalous to hold that such a position would be available to him All the property of the insolvent, as already pointed out by us above, must have vested in either the Crown or the receiver and it is difficult to understand how a second order of adjudication can be validly passed when it would not be possible for any of the creditors against whom the second application has been made, to avail themselves of the property subsequently acquired by the insolvent.

Several rulings of the English Courts were cited in the Courts below to justify the proposition that a second application by an insolvent for re-adjudication as such would be maintainable, if filed by the different sets of creditors, and it was pointed out that if such an application was entertainable, it should also be open to a debtor to get a second adjudication In regard to these cases it is sufficient for us to remark that they are based on the state of law which is stated to prevail in the English Courts, and would be no justification for adopting the same course when a different procedure has been specially laid down for us in the Provincial Insolvency Act, 5 of 1920. Apart from this even in English Courts a discretion is given to an insolvency Court to refuse such an application, if it is satisfied that there are no assets likely to be available for administration under the second bankruptcy vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol 2, S 18, p 13 If, as we have pointed out above, there is no property which could be considered to be the assets of the insolvent available for administration under the second adjudication, even a Court in England would be unwilling to entertain a second application. We are, therefore, of opinion that the cases decided by the English Courts which are referred to in the judgments of the Courts below and which have been relied upon before us on behalf of the petitioner-respondent, do not justify us in arriving at the conclusion, which we are asked to do

A reference was made in the course of arguments before us, as was before the Courts below, to a case decided by the Bombay High Court in the insolvency jurisdiction and reported in Dossa Gopal v. Bhanji (1). It was pointed out that in that case the High Court of Bombay held that a second application for adjudication was maintainable We need only point out that that case can be no authority for taking the similar view in the mufassil Courts, which are governed by the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 5 of 1920 We may state that in the Presidency Towns the Act which was originally applicable was the Indian Insolvency Act (Statute 11 and 12 Vic Ch 21) This Act was passed in 1848 and was in force till 1909 when the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 3 of 1909, came into force A decision which was passed under the old Indian Insolvency Act which has now ceased to be law could hardly be considered as an authority which should guide us in determining the procedure to be followed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 5 of 1920

We are, therefore, of opinion that under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 once that a person has been declared an insolvent, it is not open to him to apply for a second order of adjudication until he has obtained an order of discharge or until his previous adjudication has been annulled. If this has taken place and subsequently he contracts debts and acquires property, it would be open to him to apply again and the Court could then see whether a case has been made out which would justify it to pass a fresh order of adjudication as to his insolvency On these grounds we are of opinion that the order as to adjudication of insolvency passed on 1st February 1928, and upheld by the learned District Judge by his order dated 10th September 1928, must be set aside and that the application of the respondent dated 17th September 1927, must be dismissed. We order accordingly The applicant will get his costs of both the Courts.

Judgment.—This is a revision against an order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi with a request that the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment passed on one Ghura under S. 307, I. P. C., should be enhanced. The accused appealed against his conviction but that appeal was rejected and we are satisfied that the judgment of the Court below is correct and that the accused attempted to murder his relation Bhola by giving him Dhatura poison We also find that this Bhola narrowly escaped from death. He remained unconscious for two days and would undoubtedly have died but for the treatment that he received in hospital. The case has been referred to us merely on the question of sentence, and partly perhaps to bring to our notice the fact that such cases should not ordinarily be tried by Assistant Sessions Judges whose powers are limited to inflicting a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. If that is so, we are prepared to endorse this view We consider that cases of attempted murder which vary greatly in gravity should ordinarily be tried by Sessions Judges. We are not prepared to order a retrial in this case and consider it sufficient for the ends of justice that we accede to the other prayer made on behalf of the Crown, namely, that we should enhance the sentence to the maximum allowed by law in trials conducted by Assistant Sessions Judges We therefore enhance the sentence to one of seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 264—Summary trial—Substance of evidence and not of every deposition is necessary—Judgment containing necessary substance is legal.

The substance of the evidence required by S. 264 is a matter distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence and it should be recorded in such a manner that a superior Court acting in appeal or revision may be in a position to judge that there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction. A Magistrate is not bound to record substance of every deposition. He has to state the substance of witnesses' evidence. A judgment when it contains the substance of the evidence, which is sufficient for convicting the accused, is a legal judgment. [P 152 C 1]

R. F Bahadurji—for Applicants

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Several persons, including Jamna Prasad and his brothers Kanhaiya Lal and Jhabban Lal, were sent up for trial under Ss 3 and 4, Public Gambling Act (Act 3 of 1867) Jamna Prasad was convicted by the learned City Magistrate of Lucknow under Ss 3 and 4 of the Act He was sentenced to a fine of Rs 200 (or in default two weeks' simple imprisonment) under S 3, and a fine of Rs. 100 (or in default one week's simple imprisonment) under S 4 of the Act Jhabban Lal and Kanhaiya Lal were convicted under S 4 of the Act and sentenced each to a fine of Rs 100 (or in default one week's simple imprisonment) The rest of the accused were also convicted under S 4 of the Act and sentenced each to a fine of Rs 50 (or in default one week's simple imprisonment) One of the accused persons, namely, Jagdish Prasad, who pleaded guilty, was examined as a witness for the prosecution

It was a summary trial All the accused persons went in appeal to the Sessions Judge of Lucknow but their appeals were dismissed on the 15th November 1928 Jamna Prasad and Kanhaiya Lal alone have now come to this Court in revision This revision has been pressed before me upon two grounds only: (1) The judgment of the trial Court is not a legal judgment as it does not embody the substance of the evidence required by S. 264, Criminal P C (2) The trial Court was wrong in convicting Jamna Prasad under S. 3, Gambling Act

I think there is no force in the first ground I have read the judgment of the learned City Magistrate carefully. It contains the substance of the evidence which is quite sufficient for convicting the accused persons under S 4, Gambling Act It is true that the judgment does not contain the substance of every separate deposition ; but the Magistrate was not bound to record the substance of every deposition under S 264, Criminal P. C He had to state generally what was the substance of the witnesses' evidence and this he had done I agree that the substance of the evidence is a matter distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence I agree also that the substance of the evidence should be recorded in such a manner that a superior Court acting in appeal or revision may be in a position to judge that there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction The evidence might profitably have been summarized more fully in this case, but it cannot be said that the judgment is not a legal judgment when it contains the substance of the evidence which I think is sufficient for convicting the accused persons under S 4, Gambling Act

The second ground is not, I think, without force The warrant was issued for the search of the house of Jamna Prasad which, according to the warrant, was being used as a common gaming house However, there is no reliable evidence to show that the house or portion of the house which was searched was owned or occupied or kept by Jamna Prasad or that he had the charge of the house in question In dealing with this part of the case the learned City Magistrate has made the following observations in his judgment :

" Among the accused Jamna Prasad, Jhabban Lal, and Kanhaiyalal are brothers. Two of them are employed in the post office and the third in the railway. It is urged on behalf of these brothers that the house mentioned in the search warrant Ex. 1 does not belong to Jamna Prasad and hence the warrant is illegal having been directed for the search of the house of Jamna Prasad. According to the defence it belongs to Jhabban Lal. The evidence on this point is not at all definite. While the witnesses state that the brothers reside in separate houses or in different portions of the same house, they are unable to say definitely which portion is in the occupation of a particular brother. The warrant was, as a matter of fact, meant for search of the house in which, according to credible information, gambling arranged by Jamna Prasad was going on. It is immaterial whether that house belongs to him or to his brother as long as it can be proved that it was being used by Jamna Prasad as a common gambling house. I do not think, therefore, that the warrant becomes illegal even if it could be conclusively proved that the particular portion of the house or the house itself which was raided was actually being used as a common gaming house did not belong to Jamna Prasad."

There is no reliable evidence on the record to show that Jamna Prasad had arranged the gambling which was going on in the house in question or that he being the owner or occupier or having the use of the house, was using it as a common gaming house The judgment of the learned Magistrate does not contain the substance of any evidence on which findings can be safely based on these points It is true that Jagdish Prasad stated in his plea of an accused person that Jamna Prasad was taking the ' nal " but it is not clear if he stated that also at the time he was examined as a witness in the case It cannot be safely held on what Jagdish Prasad stated in his plea as an accused person that it was Jamna Prasad who had arranged gambling in the house in question. Jagdish Prasad being an accomplice his statement (or even evidence) should be received with great caution It is said that the house was being used by Jamna Prasad as a common gaming house but was he using the same as a common gaming house being the owner or occupier or having the use of the house?. There is no reliable evidence on that point I think it is not sufficient to say that the accused used it for the purpose of gaming It is to be proved that the accused is the owner or occupier or a person having the use of the place alleged to be kept as a gaming house The person having the use must be of the same genus as the owner, occupier or keeper of the house and of course a different person from those who resort to the house I am not satisfied that there were sufficient materials to support the conviction of Jamna Prasad under S 3, Gambling Act.

The result is that I accept this application to this extent only that I set aside Jamna Prasad's conviction and sentence under S. 3, Gambling Act The fine (Rs 200), if paid or realized, shall be refunded The application is dismissed in other respects. The applicants have been rightly convicted and punished under S. 4, Gambling Act.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the reversioners to the estate of one Durga Din who died in the year 1896, against the persons who are now in possession of the estate. These persons are alleged in the plaint to be unlawfully in possession of the property holding as they did, under a gift made in favour of Mt Lachmin who is defendant 1 by Mt Umeda, who was the mother of Durga Din, and who is stated by the plaintiffs to have had only a limited interest in the property as a Hindu female. The suit has been brought within twelve years of the death of Mt Umeda and is prima facie within time under Art. 141 Lim. Act The defence set up was that Mt. Umeda obtained a title by adverse possession and that this title set up a bar to the reversioners.

The facts are that Durga Din died in the year 1896. At the time of his death he was a minor and his widow Mt. Parbati was also a minor. Mt. Umeda, the mother of Durga Din, was in actual possession at the time of Durga Din's death and she obtained mutation in her own name from the revenue Court, the order of which is on the record The order shows that Parbati was not in possesion and that as her gauna ceremony had never been performed, she was still with her parents, who contemplated her remarriage. There was therefore no question of her being able to manage the property and the order was passed in favour of Mt. Umeda Mt. Parbati died in 1913 and Mt. Umeda died in 1921 Long before her death, Mt. Umeda, had executed a deed of gift in favour of her daughter Mt Lachmin. The argument which has been addressed to us is that Mt. Umeda did not succeed to the property as the heir of Durga Din, although she was after Mt. Parbati the person entitled to succeed to his estate in preference to the other reversioners but that she obtained adverse title against the widow, and when the widow allowed the title to become absolute by lapse of time the title was perfected also against the other reversioners. The question whether an adverse title obtained against a Hindu widow is adverse also against the reversioners is one which has been discussed at length in a recent judgment of a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court reported in Aurabindh Nath Tagore v Manorama Debi (1). The gist of that ruling is that the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Varthialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (2) is authority for the view that any adverse possession obtained against a Hindu widow operates in the same manner against the reversioners and that the period from which the suit should be brought begins to run from the date when the possession became adverse But it does not appear to us that the judgment of their Lordships referred to is an authority for that proposition It is true that they quoted a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in which some of the Judges appear to have taken this view ; but the only conclusion which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee arrived at was:

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 670=55 Cal. 909.
(2) A. I. R. 1925 P. C, 249=48 Mad. 889=52 I. A. 322 (P.C.).

"that the Board has invariably applied the rule of the Shivagunga case as sound Hindu law, where that rule was applicable," and the case which their Lordships had to decide was one similar to that which they had referred to as the Shivagunga case i. e. Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivagunga (3) All that that case laid down was that the whole estate is vested in a Hindu female absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects with a qualified interest, and that a decree fairly obtained against a widow must be held to be binding on the succeeding heirs. In argument before their Lordships it was contended that that ruling had not been followed by the Board themselves in the case in Runchordas Vandrawandas v Parvatibhai (4), but their Lordships said that this was not the case, and that the ruling in the Shivagunga case (3) had no application to the case of Runchordas (4) because in that case the widows had never been vested with the estate and the property had never been represented by them.

Recently a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has considered the same question in the case of Bankey Lal v. Raghunath Sahai (5). The Judges have not found that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee intended in the case reported in Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (2) to extend the principle laid down in the Shivagunga case, or if they have done so they have not intended to go beyond the decision in the case of Runchordas and therefore if adverse possession against a widow is sought to be made adverse also against the reversioner, it can only be so in a case where the widow has been in actual possession and has been dispossessed We are not prepared to carry the matter any further than this, and as Parbati never obtained possession we do not consider that the possession of Mt. Umeda, even if it were adverse possession, would be such an adverse possession as to operate against the reversioners But we do not consider that the possession of Mt Umeda was adverse. She obtained mutation in the revenue Court on the basis of possession, it being impossible for the minor widow to look after the property, and her possession was not adverse possession but merely the possession of the nearest reversioner before her time. After the death of Mt. Parbati Mt. Umeda was in possession as heir of her son and in our opinion her title could not be challenged during her lifetime. A gift in favour of her daughter could not be challenged by the heirs until Mt. Umeda's death and as the suit has been brought within twelve years of the death of Mt. Umeda it is within time.

It has also been argued before us that the appellants were prejudiced by the fact that the learned District Judge in appeal did not decide the question whether the defendant Lachman was not an illegitimate son. If Lachman was not illegitimate he would have an equal share with the three plaintiffs. It does not appear that the appellants would have been in any way prejudiced by the fact that three persons have obtained the property from them rather than four, but we find in the first place that the question of Lachman's illegitimacy was never raised by the appellants themselves, secondly, that it was denied by Lachman himself and decided against him, thirdly, that he never questioned the decision of the Court in appeal and lastly that the appellants themselves admitted that it was the three plaintiffs who were entitled to sue as the nearest reversioners. This ground of appeal has no force, and we are of opinion that the suit has been correctly decided by the Courts below. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision of the order of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad who dismissed an appeal against a conviction by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Fyzabad in a case tried by a jury The only point raised in appeal before him was that the trial was vitiated by the fact that the jury were not selected by lot in the manner provided for by R 14, Chap. 5, Oudh Criminal Rules The same point has been raised before us The rule in question lays down an elaborate procedure which should be adopted by Judges in trials both by jury and with the aid of assessors Not only have the jurors in the first instance to be chosen by lot out of the list of jurors, but those who have been so chosen have to be again subjected to a similar process in open Court in order to determine which of the jurors or assessors who are present should sit for the trial. In the present case no objection has been taken to the original selection of the jurors eight of whom were present in Court, but it appears that instead of conducting a second ballot the Judge chose five of the eight persons present and asked the accused if they had any objection As the accused had no objection the trial proceeded We have no hesitation in saying that this irregularity is one which can be covered by S 537. Criminal P. C It is not even suggested that the five persons who sat on the jury were unable to perform their duties fairly, or that the three persons who were not selected would have been more impartial. It is a purely technical error and one which in our opinion does not vitiate the trial. In coming to this decision we have followed the authority of the Calcutta High Court in the case of The Empress v. Jhubbo Mahton (1) a decision of the year 1882 which, as far as we know, still expresses the view of the Calcutta High Court The only ruling which we have been shown to the contrary is reported in Emperor v. Bradshaw (2) This was a case where a European British subject was tried under the special rules which were then in force, but we are unable to ascertain from the judgment of the learned Judge what the exact error was which was committed by the Court below, and which in his opinion vitiated the trial We are satisfied that the decision of the Calcutta High Court, to which we have referred, rightly expresses the law on the subject and we dismiss this application.

Judgment.— This is the plaintiffs' appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Lucknow dated the 22nd May 1928, which reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The only relief for which the claim was laid was the recovery of a motor car. The appellants are entitled to the relief if the agreement under which the car passed into the possession of the defendant-respondent was a contract of hire with an option to purchase. On the other hand, if under the same contract the ownership of the car vested in the defendant the relief must fail. The lower appellate Court is of opinion that the latter view is the right view.

The contract in question is evidenced by a duly executed deed dated 1st November 1924. We are of opinion that the interpretation placed by the appellants on the deed just now mentioned is the correct interpretation. The deed opens by the description of the respective status of the parties in the matter of the contract contained therein. The appellants are described as "the owners" on the one part and the respondent "the hirer" on the other part The relevant clauses of the deed are as follows:

1. The owners agree to let on hire to the hirer and the hirer agrees to take from the owners one 01 model maker Overland touring car No. 1,28526 as described in the schedule attached hereto.

2. The owners hereby acknowledge receipt of the sum of rupees one thousand and thirty-six for the option of purchase hereinafter contained. If the hirer shall exercise such option credit will be given to the hirer for that sum. If he does not, then such sum shall belong absolutely to the owners.

3. The hirer to pay the owners without demand the sum of rupees one hundred eighty-nine on the first day of every calendar month for the hire of the said motor car, the first of such payments to be made on the first day of December 1924.

4. All such payments made under the last preceding clause shall be credited to the account of the hirer against the total cost of the motor car as set forth in the next succeeding clause.

5. When the hirer has paid the owners monthly instalments of Rs. 2,268 making, inclusive of the initial payment set forth in Cl. 2, the total sum of Rs. 8,304, the said motor car shall become the absolute property of the hirer and this agreement shall terminate.

6. The hirer agrees that until such time as he shall have paid the aforesaid monthly payments herein before mentioned. . . .

(a) The said motor car shall remain the absolute property of the owners.

(b) . . . (c) . . . . (d) . . . . (e) . . . . . (f)

7. If the hirer

(a) shall make default in punctually paying any hire instalment or

(b) . . . (c) . . . (d) . . .

(e) shall fail to observe and perform any of the agreements and conditions contained in this agreement then in any such case this agreement shall immediately cease and it shall be lawful for the owners, their servants or agents to enter by force if necessary upon any premises in which the said car may for the time being be and to seize and take away the same, no matter where the said motor car may be at the time of seizure and in the event of such seizure the owners may sell the motor car either privately or by public auction and out of the proceeds of such sale shall be entitled to pay to themselves all moneys which may be then due to them under these presents and shall pay the balance of such proceeds (if any) to the hirer.

In the plain language of this deed we find nothing to support the contention that the ownership of the car in question was transferred from the date of the contract from the appellants to the respondent. Indeed according to our judgment there is no room for such a contention on the face of this document. It is said, however, that the substance of the transaction evidenced by the deed in question must be looked at and not its mere words. We agree But the substance must be ascertained by consideration of the rights and obligations of the parties as stated in the several provisions of the whole of the agreement. In support of the construction placed by the defendant the learned District Judge relies on the case of Lee v. Butler (1) According to him this case

"decided that where the alleged hirer agreed to pay all the instalments the agreement amounted to an agreement to pay."

We think that the learned Judge has misunderstood the decision in that case. There one L, being in possession of furniture under a hire and purchase agreement made with the plaintiff, sold and delivered the furniture, before the last payment had accrued due or been paid, to the defendant, who received it in good faith and without notice that the plaintiff had any right in respect of it. It was decided that the sale and delivery to the defendant was within the provisions of S. 9 Factors Act 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. C. 45) and therefore valid. Lord Esher, M. R and Kay, L. J., held that the agreement was hire and purchase agreement to buy the goods and Kay L. J. added that the clause provides in effect that "the goods shall become the absolute property of the hirer when the two sums, amounting to ..... £s have been paid."

(1) [1893] 2 Q. B. 318=62 L. J. Q. B. 591=42 W. R. 88=69 L. T. 370.

In the arguments before us stress was laid on Cl. 5 of the agreement in question and it was said that in the present case—as in Lee v. Butler (1)—the motor car was to become the absolute property of the hirer when the hirer has paid the owners the monthly instalments following the initial payment of Rs 1,036. This argument ignores altogether the provision contained in Cl 2 of the agreement. According to that clause the hirer had the option to buy or not to buy the car. In consideration of this right of option the hirer paid the initial sum of Rs 1,036 It was open to him not to exercise this right. If he did then the initial sum paid by him shall be credited in his favour but if he did not, it shall belong to the owners In face of this provision as to option it is impossible to construe this deed as a deed evidencing an out-and-out sale where the price of the thing bought was to be paid in certain instalments We think that the present case is in line with the case of Lewis v. Thomas (2). The leading case on the subject is Helby v Matthews (3). In this case Lee v Butler (1) was referred to in the judgments delivered by their Lordships and distinguished. From the decision in that case we infer the principle of interpretation to be that if in substance there is an agreement to buy the parties cannot by calling it a hiring or by mere juggling with words escape from the consequences of the contract in which they entered but if the contract imports no legal obligation to buy there is no such agreement. We think it would be useful to quote the following from the judgment of Lord Waston in the case of Helby v. Mathews (3):

"Apart from the arrangement for hire of the piano, the only right given to Brewster by the agreement in question was the option to become a purchaser. It is true that whilst he was under no obligation to buy the appellant was legally bound to give him that option, and could not retract it, if the other stipulations of the contract were duly observed by the hirer. But the possession of such a right of option was, in no sense, an agreement by Brewster to buy the piano and the appellant's obligation to give the option was not, in the sense of law, an agreement by him to sell. In order to constitute an agreement for sale and purchase, there must be two parties who are mutually bound by it."

As we have said before, in the present case the hirer obtained the option of purchase in consideration of the initial payment and having thus obtained the right it was open to him to exercise it or not to exercise it, in other words, he was under no legal obligation to exercise it.

The respondent's learned advocate cited the case of A Cecil Cole v Nanalal Morari Dave (4). The judgment in that case clearly shows that the distinction between the two classes of cases lies in the element as to whether there is or there is not an obligation to purchase.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court. As to the costs in the Court of first instance we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs in that Court.

Zafar Husain—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal preferred by the Local Government against the acquittal of one Ori who was found in possession of a double-barrelled muzzle-loading gun without license at Kawwapur railway station in the district of Gonda The Magistrate acquitted the accused on the ground that no offence has been committed Although there is no license for this gun in British India, the Magistrate is of opinion that as the accused is a servant and the gun belongs or is said to belong to his master, he was able to bring it into British India for the purposes of repairs without a license The Magistrate relies upon certain rulings none of which apply to a case where a gun has been brought into British India without any license in British India for possession of the gun The judgment on which he principally relies is reported in Emperor v Harpal Rai (1), which is the case of the transfer of a licensed gun for a temporary purpose to a person other than the licensee The other rulings mainly deal with the cases of servants and others who carry guns belonging to their masters for some temporary purpose No doubt the case set up by the accused is that this gun belongs to his master and that he was carrying it for a temporary purpose. It may be so, but in the first place he had to prove that this was a gun for which there was a valid license in British India He has attempted to show that the gun is licensed in Nepal State He has not done so The two documents which he has produced and which are alleged to be licenses are not legally proved and the number contained in one of them which refers to a double-barrelled muzzle-loading gun is not the same as the number on this gun In the license the number is 666 whereas the gun bears the number 796 and we cannot see how the license can refer to this gun

In our opinion there is no ruling which protects a person without license and who is found in British India carrying a gun which has no license acknowledged by the British Government from the provisions of S. 19 read with S 6, Arms Act. On the other hand we are prepared to accept the Magistrate's view that the accused is merely the servant of some lady in the Nepal State and that he brought this gun to British India for the purpose of having it repaired. Under those circumstances we do not consider it necessary to impose a sentence of imprisonment.

We therefore accept this appeal, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate and find the accused guilty under S. 19 (c), Arms Act (Act 11 of 1878) and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs 50 or in default to undergo three month's simple imprisonment

Even where a son is the manager of the family property, it cannot be concluded that the son is the agent of the father for the purpose of refusing an offer of a sale of property to which the father may wish to lay claim in his personal right by bringing a suit for pre-emption founded on the statutory provisions of the Oudh Laws Act. 1 *O. Radha Krishna for A. P. Sen and Sheo Gobind Tripathi—for Appellant

M Wasim and Naimullah — for Respondent

Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli, dated 8th September 1927. The appellant's suit has been dismissed by the decree under appeal

On 28th January 1926 a 5 annas 4 pies share situate in village Pindaria, pargana Inhauna, in the district of Rae Bareli, was purchased by Sheo Darshan, defendant (since deceased and now represented by his son, Shanker Dat, the sole respondent in this appeal) ostensibly for a sum of Rs 12,000 By means of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen Ram Narain claimed to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the sale of 28th January 1926. The defence gave rise to several issues One of the issues was: "Is the plaintiff estopped from suing as alleged?" In answer to this issue the finding of the Court below is in the affirmative and on the basis of that finding alone the suit has been dismissed. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on every other issue in the case has been accepted before us by both the parties and it is agreed that if the finding of the Court below on the issue relating to estoppel is reversed by us, the plaintiff should be given a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs 12,000.

The law of pre-emption, as it is administered in the Province of Oudh, is contained in Chap. 2, consisting of ten sections (Ss. 6 to 15), Oudh Laws Act, 1876. By virtue of the provisions of S. 13 a person entitled to a right of pre-emption may bring a suit to enforce such right on the ground, amongst others that no due notice was given as required by S. 10. It is admitted on both sides that the appellant is a person entitled to a right of pre-emption. It is also admitted that no due notice as required by S 10 was given in this case. On these facts, therefore, the appellant is prima facie entitled to a decree but it is said that he is estopped from enforcing his right of pre-emption on the ground that one of the vendors, Surajpal Singh, asked Mohan Lal, son of the appellant, as to whether he would purchase the property. Mohan Lal in answer declined to do so. On these premises being established, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, the plea of estoppel must be given effect to.

It is not necessary to decide the somewhat vexed question as to whether a plea of estoppel of the nature put forward in this case is entertainable at all, having regard to the requirement of the statutory law that there must be a notice as to the proposal of sale given according to the formalities prescribed by that law. A single Judge of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh decided in Maryam Begam v. Tika (1) that oral evidence of notice prescribed in S 10, Oudh Laws Act, 1876, is inadmissible. In the case of Bhagwat Singh v. Nazir Husain (2) decided by Mr. (now Sir Edward) Chamier, it was held that in a suit for pre-emption although notice in writing is not given by the vendor the plaintiff may be estopped from claiming pre-emption, if it is proved that the property was offered to him for a certain price, that he refused to purchase at that price and that he expressly consented to the purchase of the property by the vendee

The facts are as follows and they were not disputed before us at the hearing of the arguments in this appeal The appellant and his son, Mohan Lal, constitute a joint Hindu family. The family is possessed of certain zamindari share in the village of Pindaria, in which the share in suit is also situate. The appellant generally lives in Calcutta where he carries on a printing press. At times he comes to his village While the appellant is absent Mohan Lal naturally carries on the household work and the management of the zamindari share in the village. Mohan Lal is 25 years of age. Early in the year 1925 the appellant executed a formal power-of-attorney in favour of Mohan Lal and on its destruction by fire a fresh power was executed in August 1926 Neither a copy of the former power nor the original or a copy of the latter has been produced in this case and it has never been suggested on behalf of the respondent that Mohan Lal had received under any of these powers express authority to act on behalf of his father in matters like the one involved in the present case But it is argued that on the facts stated above Mohan Lal must be deemed to be a manager of the joint Hindu family, that his conduct in refusing to buy the property fell within the scope of usual authority of a manager and was therefore binding on the plaintiff.

We cannot accede to this argument. In the first place, having regard to the evidence on the record and particularly of Mohan Lal, who alone gives some details as to the work he does on behalf of his father, we are unable to accept the contention that Mohan Lal must be treated to have been occupying the position of a manager of the family at the time when the offer is said to have been made to him The sale in question was made by a registered deed of 28th January 1926 and according to the evidence of Surajpal Singh, one of the vendors, the sale was settled a month before the execution of the deed. Surajpal Singh's version is that after the sale had been settled with the respondent he offered the property for purchase to Mohan Lal. He took Mohan Lal to be an agent of his father. Mohan Lal in his evidence denied the alleged offer. The learned Judge in the trial Court has accepted the evidence of Surajpal Singh and of Sheo Adhar as against the evidence of Mohan Lal as to the offer made and the refusal by Mohan Lal and we have done the same. Mohan Lal was examined as a witness in this case on 7th September 1927. He states that he is the plaintiff's agent for 1½ years. This obviously has a reference to the power-of-attorney executed in August 1926 by the appellant in favour of Mohan Lal. As to the terms of the authority we have already said that they are not proved. As to his work on behalf of his father outside the scope of the written authority, all he tells is that he has been doing his father's work for the last two years since the death of his grandmother and that during her lifetime she looked after his father's work with the aid of an agent. He also said that his father comes home at times.

(1) [1898] 1 O. C. 254.
(2) [1902] 5 O. C. 395.

On the evidence therefore we are not satisfied that Mohan Lal occupies the position of a manager of the family in whose favour an agency by implication may be deemed to have been created by his father. But even if it be granted that he is the manager of the property of the family, from that alone we are unable to draw the conclusion that the son is the agent of the father for the purpose of refusing an offer of a sale of property to which the father may wish to lay claim in his personal right by bringing a suit for pre-emption founded on the statutory provisions of the Oudh Laws Act. Clearly a right of pre-emption is a personal right in the sense that it is conferred on a cosharer. It must be conceded that both, father and son, being members of a joint family are cosharers if any of them is recorded as such in the revenue registers of the village. That the appellant is so recorded is admitted. This being so, it follows that each is entitled to enforce his claim for pre-emption in his own right. We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and decree the plaintiff's suit on condition that he deposits in the Court below the sum of Rs. 12,000 within three months from the date of the decree of this Court. In case of default the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in both the Courts. If the deposit is made as is hereby directed the plaintiff will be entitled to his costs in both the Courts and he will be permitted to deduct the amount of costs from the sum of Rs. 12,000 in making the required deposit.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 41—S. 41 will not protect transferee who has not made necessary enquiries about title of real owner.

Only those persons are entitled to claim protection under S. 41 who, in spite of necessary enquiry, have not been able to discover who the real owner of the property is, and who have, in full belief that the person making a transfer in their favour is the person really entitled to that property, taken the transfer from him. If the transferee has not made necessary enquiries about the title of the real owner the protection afforded by S. 41 is not available to him. [P 162 C 1]

Where a co-mortgagee A sued on the mortgage impleading the other mortgagee B as defendant, but the latter never appeared in Court, and the decree was exclusively passed in former's favour, A was entitled to execute it and to give valid discharge to the judgment-debtor or to the puisne mortgagee and if such discharge has been given and A has received money, it would not be open to B to urge that this position was not legally available to A. Judgment—This is an appeal arising out of a declaratory suit The facts of the case are that the plaintiff-appellant, Lala Jagmohan Das, and his brother, Lala Indar Prasad, defendant 1, constituted prior to 1915 members of a joint Hindu family; that out of the joint family funds money was advanced to one Mt. Bakhtawar Begam by virtue of a mortgage deed, dated 20th July 1914, in which was hypothecated the property situate in the district of Cawnpore and in the city of Lucknow; and that in a partition between the two brothers which took place in 1915 the said mortgage-deed had been allotted in equal shares to both of them.

A suit was brought on the basis of this mortgage-deed by Lala Inder Prasad alone, and a decree was passed on 20th February 1925, in his favour. It appears that when Lala Inder Prasad instituted the suit on the aforesaid mortgage he also impleaded plaintiff-appellant as a defendant in that case alleging that he had declined to join him as a plaintiff in the suit. It further appears that the said decree was transferred by Lala Inder Prasad to defendants 2 and 3, who are the sons of one Lala Purshottam Das, who is also a defendant (5) in this case. His brother Lala Jugal Kishore has been impleaded as defendant 4. It would thus appear that defendants 2 to 5 constitute a joint Hindu family. The present suit has been brought by the plaintiff-appellant for obtaining a declaratory decree to the effect that he is the owner of half the decree since the mortgage on the basis of which the said decree was passed was owned in equal shares by him and his brother, defendant 1, that the sale-deed executed by Lala Inder Prasad in favour of defendents 2 and 3 in respect of the entire decree is null and void and that he is entitled to have the decree executed to the extent of his half share in it.

The suit was contested principally by defendants 2 and 3, who urged in their defence that the decree obtained by defendant 1 being in his favour alone he was entitled to have it executed and realize the whole amount due; that they having paid the whole amount due under the decree had obtained a sale-deed in respect thereof from defendant 1; and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no remedy against defendants 2 and 3, but should obtain from defendant 1 half the amount which had been paid by them to him as sale price for the said decree. They also contended that they had purchased this decree out of their own personal funds and not of the funds of the joint family, to which they and their father and uncle (defendants 4 and 5) belonged, and that they having purchased it from an ostensible owner, the plaintiff was not entitled to avoid the sale executed in their favour under the provisions of S. 41, T. P. Act, 4 of 1882.

The suit was tried by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow to whose Court it had been transferred and who by his decree dated 22nd March 1928, gave the plaintiff a decree against defendant 1 for half the consideration, for which the original decree had been transferred by him in favour of defendants 2 and 3 and dismissed the suit so far as the other defendants were concerned. This decree was passed upon a finding to the effect that defendants 2 and 3 having taken a sale-deed of the decree from Lala Inder Prasad in whose favour it stood, the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any relief against them, but was only entitled to claim from defendant 1 half the sale consideration for which the decree had been sold.

The plaintiff-appellant has brought the present appeal against this decree and the contention now urged on his behalf is to the effect that the mortgage-deed executed by Mt. Bakhtawar Begam being the property of the plaintiff and his brother defendant 1 in equal shares, he must be held to be entitled to be the owner of the decree also to the extent of half and that, therefore, the sale-deed executed by defendant 1 in favour of defendants 2 and 3 should be considered operative only to the extent of half, and that, therefore, they should be declared as entitled to execute the decree only to that extent.

We have heard the arguments in this case at great length and it appears to us that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and should, therefore, be maintained. It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that defendants 2 and 3 cannot invoke in their favour the protection of S. 41, T. P. Act, since they must be presumed to know full well that the decree in dispute was the joint property of plaintiff-appellant and of defendant 1 We have looked into the record and it appears that defendants 4 and 5 brought a suit against the son and husband of the mortgagor Bakhtawar Begam on the basis of a mortgage executed by her in their favour on a date subsequent to the deed, in which the plaintiff is admittedly entitled to a half share. The decree was passed in their favour on the basis of the said mortgage deed on 27th May 1927. It is clear from the proceedings of that suit that the rights of plaintiff and of defendant 1, who were impleaded in that suit in the capacity of prior mortgagees as defendants 3 and 4, were fully known to defendants 4 and 5, who were plaintiffs in that suit. It is also equally clear from the evidence on the record that defendants 2 and 5 constitute a joint family It is also admitted that defendants 2 and 3 have failed to prove that the money with which they purchased the decree from Lala Inder Prasad was their own personal money. Under these circumstances defendants 2 and 3 being members of a joint family with defendants 4 and 5, they must be saddled with the knowledge of the fact that the decree obtained by Lala Inder Prasad was his property as well as that of the plaintiff-appellant to the extent of half and half. The defendants having full notice of the title of the plaintiff-appellant cannot be allowed to seek protection of S. 41, T. P. Act. It is a settled rule of law that only those persons are entitled to claim protection under that section, who, inspite of necessary enquiry, have not been able to discover who the real owner of the property is, and who have, in full belief that the person making a transfer in their favour is the person really entitled to that property, taken the transfer from him. If the transferee has not made necessary enquiries about the title of the real owner the protection afforded by the said section is not available to him. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that defendants 2 and 3 cannot be allowed to take advantage of S 41, T. P Act, 4 of 1882.

There is, however, another aspect of the case from which it has to be looked at. It would appear from the facts already stated in the earlier portion of this judgment that the plaintiff-appellant refused to join defendant 1 as his co-plaintiff when the latter brought the suit on the basis of the mortgage-deed, dated 20th July 1914. He had, therefore, to be impleaded as a defendant in the case and in spite of the fact that notice of the suit went to him, he never appeared in Court, nor did he express his willingness to be impleaded in the said suit as a co-plaintiff along with defendant 1 It was due to his own action that a decree was passed exclusively in favour of defendant 1. If any complications have now arisen from that situation it is the plaintiff-appellant who has to thank himself. It appears to us that after the decree in the mortgage-suit was passed in favour of defendant 1 alone he was entitled to execute it and to give discharge to the judgment-debtor or to the puisne mortgagee If such a discharge has been given and money has been received by defendant 1, it would not be open to the plaintiff appellant to urge that this position was not legally available to defendant 1. The sole remedy to which he would be entitled in such a case would be to claim his half share in the money paid to defendant 1. We are inclined to hold that the sale of the decree in favour of defendants 2 and 3 should place them in the same position as if they were judgment-debtors and had by making the payment obtained a discharge. It is admitted that the defendants 2 and 3 are puisne mortgagees of the property mortgaged in favour of the plaintiff-appellant and defendant 1 under deed dated 20th July 1914, and in such a case it would be open to them to pay the decretal money to defendant 1 in whose favour alone the decree stood and to obtain a discharge in respect of the mortgage, on the basis of which the decree had been passed in favour of defendant 1

We are, therefore, of opinion that the defence of defendants 2 and 3 must prevail, and that it is not open for the plaintiff-appellant to question the sale of the decree in favour of defendants 2 and 3 when it was effected by defendant 1, in whose favour alone it stood, and which position was brought about by the own conduct of the plaintiff-appellant himself. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, correct in passing a decree for half the sale consideration against defendant 1 and in dismissing his claim for a declaratory decree against the other defendants. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 33 of 1928, Decided on 18th October 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalgang, Lucknow, D/- 30th November 1927.

(a) Hindu law—Partition—Suit for—Offer to include omitted property if proved joint—Suit should not be dismissed—Practice—Duty of Court.

An offer by the plaintiff in a suit for partition to include other property, not mentioned in the plaint, which may be proved to be joint, is sufficient to cure the defect of omission of any properties from the partition and the suit is not liable to be dismissed on the technical ground of certain items not having been included in the plaint. [P 165 C 2]

(b) Civil P.C., O. 2, R. 2—Joining several causes of action is not compulsory.

The general principle of avoiding multiplicity in litigation must be controlled in its application by the rules of procedure regarding frame of suits and joinder of causes of action. The law only requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. But a plaintiff cannot be compelled to join several causes of action though in certain cases he can do so. [P 166 C 1]

(c) Partition—Suit—Partition of common, not joint, property—Partial partition is allowed.

A suit for partition of common properties, and not joint properties, is not liable to be dismissed on the ground that the suit did not include all the common properties available for partition : A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 124, Foll. A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 501, not Foll. [P 166 C 1]

Judgment.—This is a first appeal by the unsuccessful plaintiff and arises out of a suit for partition One Lachhman Prasad was a well-to-do kalwar, residing in Amaniganj, a hamlet of Kasmandi Khurd, near Malihabad District Lucknow. He had four sons, the eldest of whom is Hira Lal, plaintiff. The other three were Ram Prasad, Kali Charan and Ram Lal. Ram Prasad predeceased his father, leaving a widow, Mt. Birma. Kali Charan and Ram Lal are the defendants in the case. On 17th May 1924, Lachhman Prasad executed a will, bequeathing all his property, immovable and moveable including cash, to his three sons. In this will he made a specification of the immovable property allotted to each of the sons and directed that they shall be the owners in equal shares of certain mortgagee rights and that the moveable property such as ornaments, utensils and the household effects shall be divided in this way that the plaintiff, Hira Lal, was to get a 5 annas 6 pies share and Kali Charan and Ram Lal were to get 5 annas 3 pies each. As regards the cash also, he directed that it was to be divided in the same proportion. Lachhman Prasad died on 7th June 1924. The plaintiff, Hira Lal, instituted the present suit on 14th May 1927, claiming a one-third share in two houses and an orchard specified in list E., attached to the plaint on the allegation that they had been left undivided in the will and for a partition of his 5 annas 6 pies share in the moveable property and cash as specified in lists A, B, C and D, attached to the plaint on the allegation that the defendants were in possession of all the properties in the said lists.

The defence was that Lachhman Prasad in his lifetime on 22nd May 1924 had made a division of all his moveable property and that the defendants were not in possession of any property except what had been allotted to them at the division made by the father. Referring to the lists the defendants alleged that the properties entered in lists A, B and C., were all fictitious and that they were not in possession of a single item of the properties entered in those lists. As regards list D the defendants admitted some of the properties entered in that list being in their possession and said that they had got them at the division made in the lifetime of Lachhman Prasad. With respect to the houses and orchard entered in list E., they pleaded that they were included in the immovable property which was given to the defendants under the will. They further pleaded that the suit was defective inasmuch as the plaintiff had not brought into the hotchpot the property in his possession On these pleadings the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj framed the following issues for decision:

"1. Whether the moveable property was partitioned in May 1924, as alleged ? 2. Whether plaintiff is not entitled to sue for partition until he offers and discloses the joint property which he has received or which is in his possession ? 3. What joint property he has received which should be included in the division ? 4. What items of joint property are in the possession of the defendants or have been received by them ?"

He dealt with issue 2 as a preliminary issue and on 20th July 1927, before recording evidence in the case gave a finding to the effect that if the defendants were able to establish the existence of any items of joint property in the plaintiff's possession besides the two items which were admitted by the plaintiff in his statement made in the course of oral pleadings the suit should be dismissed.

After the trial had been completed the learned Subordinate Judge found that the defendants had established beyond doubt the existence of at least seven such items of joint property in the plaintiff's possession. As a result of this finding on issue 3 he held that the plaintiff's suit must fail by reason of his failure to bring into the hotchpot all the joint property in his possession. As regards the partition alleged to have been made in May 1924, his finding under issue 1 was that the partition had not been satisfactorily proved. Lastly on issue 4 he held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that any items of moveable property specified in lists A to D were in the possession of the defendants. As regards the houses and orchard in list E, he found that the claim in respect thereof was also not maintainable as they were included in the properties given to the defendants specifically under the will. As a result of the above findings he dismissed the plaintiff's suit The plaintiff has come up in appeal and has impugned all the findings of the trial Court which are against him. The learned counsel for the defendants-respondents has, on the other hand, questioned the correctness of the finding on issue 1. Thus between the plaintiff-appellant and the defendants-respondents all the findings of the lower Court have been challenged before us and we have to determine all the questions on which the parties were at issue We think it would be convenient to deal with these points in the order of the issues framed in the trial Court

Issue 1 relates to the partition alleged to have been made by Lachhman Prasad before his death. The defendants' case was that the partition was made on 22nd May 1924 (The judgment after considering the evidence on the issue concluded that the defendants had failed to prove the alleged partition and proceeded ) The next question requiring consideration is as regards the effect of the plaintiff not offering for partition joint properties in his possession. It is the common case of the parties that the entire property possessed by Lachhman Prasad was his self-acquired property, that the title of the plaintiff as well of the defendants is based on the will of Lachhman Prasad and not upon any right of inheritance and that the interest possessed by the parties in the properties in suit is that of tenants-in-common and not of joint tenants. The defendants' case is that if a coparcener in a joint family in a suit for partition of the family property fails to bring into hotchpot all the joint property in his own possession his suit must be dismissed and that the same principle ought to govern suits for partition between tenants-in-common also. We have, therefore, to consider, firstly, the rule applicable with regard to suits for partition of joint family properties and, secondly, whether the same rules would govern the cases of tenants-in-common.

As regards joint Hindu families, there is no text in the Mitakshara directly prohibiting partition of a portion only of the entire family property. But the definition of the word "partition" in the Mitakshara, Chap. 1, S 4, namely that "it is the adjustment of divers rights regarding the whole by distributing them on particular portions of the aggregate" implies that the partition must be of the entire estate. The nature of the interest possessed by coparceners in joint Hindu families is also such that in order to determine the rights and liabilities of the coparceners it is necessary and desirable that the partition should embrace the whole family property. Thus while there are certain well-recognized exceptions, for instance, where part of the property lies outside the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit for partition is brought or where it is held jointly with a stranger or is not available for actual partition, yet the general rule is that the partition should not be partial but should comprise all the joint family property. While this is so, the tendency of the Courts always is not to dismiss suits on the technical ground of some items having been left out .but to allow inclusion of such items by amendment of the plaint. This view would be borne out by an examination of the cases cited before us [n Jogendra Nath Mukerji v. Jugobundhu Mukerji (1), Petheram, C. J , with considerable hesitation, decided that a suit would not lie for partition of a portion of the joint family property but in dismissing the suit he added:

"that we reserve to the plaintiff liberty to bring a fresh suit for the partition of this property bringing in the whole of the family property."

(1) [1887] 14 Cal. 122.

In another case reported in the same volume Punchanun Mullick v. Shib Chunder Mullick (2) it was recognised by Trevelyan, J., that the plaintiff should be afforded an opportunity to amend his plaint before his suit is dismissed. Coming to more recent cases we find that in Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bhashyakarlu Naidu (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"It was argued that his failure to disclose at the outset his possession of this property converted the suit into one for partial partition only, and that the suit ought therefore to have been dismissed. But their Lordships cannot assent to this argument. The plaint seeks a complete partition of the whole of that family property, and at an early stage of the case, the principal plaintiff expressed his willingness to bring these jewels into hotchpot . . . . . There is therefore no question of partial partition."

In Amir Chand v. Lakhmi Chand (4) Sulaiman, J , said :

"In our opinion in a suit for partition of the whole family property the plaintiff is not bound to file with the plaint such a complete and exhaustive list of all the properties as not to exclude any item, howsoever small. If any defendant wishes to raise the plea that any part of the joint family property has been excluded it is for him to specify such properties and show that they belong to the family and and have been wrongly excluded. In our opinion, in view of the offer made by the plaintiff to include the properties which it had been suggested, also formed part of the joint family property the suit should not have been dismissed on the technical ground that when it was originally brought, these items had not been included in the plaint. The only inference that under the circumstances we can draw is that the Court below shirked its duty and tried to get rid of the case in as short a way as possible. The result of the dismissal would be that the plaintiff will have to bring a second suit for partition and the parties will be put to further embarrassment and trouble . . . . In our opinion there was really no defect, either in form or procedure, in the suit ; but even if there had been any, we are of opinion that he should have been allowed to amend the plaint and include these items of property. As soon as the application was made by the plaintiff all defects in the case had disappeared and we fail to see why the learned Subordinate Judge thought fit to dismiss the suit on an admittedly technical ground, namely, that the plaintiff did not include the whole of the joint family property."

In Mukund Lal v. Jogesh Chandra (5) which is a case decided by the Patna High Court, the trial Court had dismissed the suit, which was for partition of joint family property, solely on the ground that the plaintiff had omitted five properties from the list of joint properties attached to the plaint. Their Lordships remarked that :

"in a case like the present one it was the obvious duty of the Court to have allowed the amendment of the plaint and as amended to allow the action to proceed, including all the properties that were found to be joint family properties. Such power of amendment is vested in the Court by the provisions of S. 153, Civil P C., coupled with O 6, R. 17."

In the present case the plaintiff in his application dated 25th July 1927 stated in detail his reasons for not considering properties which the defendants alleged had been excluded from partition, to be joint properties and wound up his application in the following terms :

"The applicant has not intentionally concealed any joint property. If perchance any property might have remained excluded from this suit, and if any sort of property be proved to be joint, the applicant has no objection to its being divided."

In our opinion this offer by the plaintiff was sufficient to cure the defect of omission of any properties from the partition and the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the suit was liable to be dismissed on the technical ground of certain items not having been included in the plaint.

Then as regards suits for partition of properties held by persons as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants we find ourselves unable to hold that the same rule should apply to such suits. Reliance has been placed by the learned Subordinate Judge on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Brojendra Kumar Bose (6) No doubt it was laid down in this case that cases of co-tenants are governed by the same rule as that of joint tenants. But with great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case we cannot agree with this opinion. Unfortunately we have been unable to examine the English authorities referred to by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, J., in his learned judgment because they were not available in the Court library. The rule stated in Freeman on Co-tenancy and Partition, S. 508, as quoted in the judgment, namely, that a tract held in common cannot be partitioned by fragments and a suit for partition should always embrace the whole tract held by the co-tenancy is perfectly correct. But we cannot take this to mean that if there are different properties held by the same co-tenants, a suit for partition between them must embrace all such properties Suppose A, a Christian, B Muhammadan, and C, a Hindu jointly purchase at different times ten different villages and each of them makes equal contribution to the price and and has an equal share in each village. It is obvious that each village is held by A, B and C in common tenancy If the rule laid down in this case is correct, A cannot get a partition of his share in any one or more of the villages, until he seeks partition of all the ten villages. We do not think that this can be the law. The learned Judge refers to the principle of avoiding multiplicity of litigation as the foundation for the rule. We would respectfully point out that this general principle in its application must be controlled by the rules of procedure regarding frame of suits and joinder of causes of action. The law only requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action A plaintiff is not compelled to join several causes of action though in certain cases he can do so This principle therefore would support the view that a single tract or a single item of property cannot be partitioned by fragments but cannot justify the opinion that distinct items of property must be included in one suit merely because they happen to be held by the same tenants-in-common. We agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court in Pakkiri Kanni v. Mahammad Manjoor Sahib (7), here it was laid down that a suit for partition of common property and not joint properties, is not liable to be dismissed on the ground that the suit did not include all the common properties available for partition. In the present case it being admitted that the parties are tenants-in-common and not joint tenants the suit could not be dismissed on this ground.

However, the learned counsel for the plaintiff has before us maintained the offer which was made by the plaintiff in the lower Court and has expressed his willingness to include in the suit all properties in his possession which might be adjudged as joint properties. We, therefore, proceed to consider the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. (The judgment then considered the findings and concluded as follows): It would be clear from what we have stated above that for the complete determination of the case, it is necessary to remand it to the learned Subordinate Judge for findings on certain points. The plaintiff's counsel in the course of his arguments laid emphasis on the attitude of the lower Court and the pronounced bias shown by him against the plaintiff. Although we think that there is not much to choose between the plaintiff and defendant 1 yet we have no hesitation in saying that the plaintiff by his own improper conduct drew against himself the wrath of the learned Subordinate Judge At the same time we should add that use of strong language does not always make a judgment strong. Very often it gives a handle to the counsel assailing the judgment for adverse comments and makes the position of the counsel supporting it rather difficult

Taking all the circumstances into consideration we send the case back to the Court of Babu Mahabir Prosad, Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, with directions as given in the body of this order that he should again appoint a commissioner to go to the houses of the plaintiff and the defendants and to prepare a complete list of the moveables and account books which may be found in their possession and another commissioner for the purpose of drawing up a plan of the house at Amaniganj. The Subordinate Judge should also try to get all the account books before him and if any of the account books are not forthcoming he should find out which of the parties is responsible for withholding their production. He should also examine them himself or appoint a commissioner for the purpose. He should also after receiving the reports of the commissioners record his findings on the following issues :

1. What sums, if any, belonging jointly to the parties are held by the plaintiff in respect of the following items :

(a) Money realized from Ram Dayal on account of four hundis ; (b) Income of the business of Lachhman Prosad ; (c) Money realized from Mathura Prosad ; (d) Money realized from Sarju Prosad Chandika Prosad.

(7) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 124=46 Mad. 844.

2. What items of gold and silver articles in list A are the stridhan of the ladies ?

3. What items in list A other than those which are stridhan of the ladies and of other moveables in lists B, C , and D are properties belonging to Lachhman Prosad and in the possession of the defendants ?

4. Is there any portion of the house situate at Amaniganj which was in possession of Mt. Birma and which is not included within the portions bequeathed to the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 ?

The parties will be allowed to adduce any further evidence which they wish to produce on the above issues The findings should be returned within three months from this date and ten days from the date of the findings will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Criminal Appeal No. 4 of 1929, Decie ded on 29th January 1929, against th order of Addl Sess. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 22nd December 1928.

Evidence Act, S. 114, Ill. (b)—Retracted confession of co-accused is conclusive against himself but is only evidence against other co-accused.

Where a confession does not appear to have been tutored nor made under the influence of drugs or fear but is one which adds to the knowledge which was then available as to the cause of death in many particulars and has not been contradicted by anything and thus appears to be in the evidence a true confession, it is sufficient, without any corroborative evidence, for the conviction of the maker though retracted : A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 17, Foll.

[P 170 C 2; P 171 C 1]

Such a confession is not alone sufficient evidence to justify a conviction of a co-accused but that confession if unrebutted is admissible in evidence against a co-accused.

Judgment.—Three Brahmans Sheo Ratan, Sheo Narain and Sheo Gobind have been convicted of murder and sentenced to death. The sentence is before us for confirmation and all the prisoners have filed appeals from jail. Sheo Gobind has engaged counsel, while Sheo Ratan and Sheo Narain, who are father and son, have been provided with counsel by the Crown.

The story which has been unfolded by the evidence in this case is one of exceptional atrocity The lower Court has found and we, for reasons which we shall state later, agree in the finding, that the origin of this crime dates from the year 1924. In May of that year the wife of Sheo Narain, son of Sheo Ratan, was abducted, and on 29th May a complaint was filed by Sheo Narain against Birj Lal and his wife and another person under S 498 and 363, I. P. C The complaint was dismissed and the accused persons were discharged on 7th July 1924. From that date Sheo Ratan allowed his hair to grow long, and told several persons that he was doing this in order to cast the evil influence of his hair on the persons who got his daughter-in-law kidnapped. He also said more clearly to the witness Bodh Lal that he had taken a vow that he would not shave until the person who got his daughter-in-law kidnapped was ruined (sattyanas hojae). There is no question that this vow of Sheo Ratan was well-known in the village. The growing of the hair long has been adopted by many nations as a means of emphasizing a vow or oath. It was the practice amongst the ancient Jews and is part of the ceremonial of the Nazarite vow, and it is also the practice among Brahmans Sheo Ratan himself says that he grew his hair long from the date of his wife's death many years before, but there is no evidence in support of this statement. We notice that in cross-examination a question was put to the witness Lachman, clearly on the instigation of the accused himself, as to whether it was not the fact that Sheo Ratan had grown his hair long for the destruction of this witness.

Birj Lal and his wife lived in the house next to and adjoining the house of Sheo Ratan and his son. On the morning of 19th August 1928 the ploughman of Birj Lal went to his master's door and asked him to give out the plough. He could not arouse the inmates of the house and the village chaukidar advised him to look inside. The door was found to be open and not latched from inside as is customary in the case of the house of respectable villagers. The ploughman looking inside saw Birj Lal and his son lying on one bed and Birj Lal's wife lying naked on another. He would not go in, but called other persons and they also refrained from going near the bodies. They saw from the blood that a murder had been committed and the chaukidar went to the police station and made a report. He left a man sitting at the door and no body went into the house until the police came. It is only natural that under the circumstances Sheo Ratan should have been suspected and this suspicion was noted in the first report The police Sub-Inspector reached the village at about 4 P. M. and began investigation He found that the bodies had received terrible injuries The child of two years old had a lacerated wound 6" × 4" in the abdomen and the intestines were protruding The child's scalp was ruptured in several places and the skull fractured. The father had four lacerated wounds on the head, face and neck and two other lacerated wounds on the leg But the injuries to the woman who had been pregnant and whose belly had been ruptured so that the fætus of seven months had issued from the womb presented such a horrible spectacle that the Sub-Inspector could not make a further investigation but for decency's sake covered the naked corpse with a cloth after coming to the conclusion that the woman had been strangled apart from other injuries.

This fact is most important in view of the importance which we attach to a confession made by one of the accused. The bodies were sent for post mortem examination but owing to the great distance from headquarters that examination was not held until the morning of 21st August by which time all the bodies were to a large extent decomposed. In the doctor's opinion the cause of the child's death was fracture of the skull and abdominal injury, the cause of the woman's death was "asphyxia due to pressure on neck and shock of abdominal wound" and the man's death was due to 'fracture of the skull and injuries in neck." In the post mortem report the doctor did not note that any weapon had been inserted into the vagina of the woman and it was only when he was examined in Court on 6th October that he stated that in his opinion more than a foot of a lathi must have been thrust into her private parts to cause the injuries to the abdomen and the uterus. On the following morning, that is to say, 20th August, the Superintendent of Police visited the village at 8 o'clock. On the night before, it had been impossible for the Sub-Inspector to do much except to despatch the bodies for post mortem examination. But in the morning he had made a search of the house of Sheo Ratan and had taken possession of two dhotis which appeared to have been recently washed and to be stained with blood

When the Superintendent of Police came it appears that inquiry was made as to how the house had been entered. The Sub-Inspector had already noticed that there was a hole in the roof and as the door had been found open it was suspected that the murderer or murderers had come in by the roof and left by the door The Superintendent went on to the roof and found close to the place where the hole had been made a burnt match He also found, though the significance of the fact did not occur to him at the time, a ladder standing in the courtyard of Sheo Ratan by which it was possible to reach the roof of his house and consequently the roof of the house of Birj Lal. The Superintendent also saw the marks of foot-prints between the ladder and the hole in the roof. A second search of the house of Sheo Ratan disclosed a box of matches of the same kind as the burnt match stick which han been found on the roof. This clue confirmed the suspicion that Sheo Ratan was concerned with the murder and the Sub-Inspector made inquiries as to the relations and associates of Sheo Ratan with the result that Sheo Gobind accused was brought to him on 22nd August. This Sheo Gobind is a man of 38 years of age, although he gave his own age as 25 and there is no reason to doubt that he is doubly related to Sheo Ratan and Sheo Narain by marriage. It appears that this man showed himself ready to confess, and he was taken to the Superintendent of Police on the following day with a view to having his confession recorded by a Magistrate The Superintendent of Police very wisely sent the man to jail with a request that he should be kept in separate havalat :

"to escape adverse influence. and called for his confession after a day or two with the approval of the Court."

On the following day, 24th August the confession of Sheo Gobind was recorded by Mr. Mahfooz Ali, who is a Magistrate of the first class and who has been examined as a witness in the case. The Magistrate in his statement in Court bears out what is already clear from his own note of the confession, that he took every precaution in order to ascertain that the statement was voluntary. He even went so far as to keep the man in his Court for, as far as he remembers. two or three hours in order that he might be entirely clear from police influence

The confession which was recorded with great patience and minuteness by the Magistrate extends to eleven pages of Urdu writing and it is a most elaborate and detailed statement It describes how this murder was designed for over a year when Sheo Ratan first approached Sheo Gobind with a suggestion that he should hold the neck of Birj Lal while he was asleep, when Sheo Ratan and his son would cut his throat. Sheo Gobind says that he declined the first offer of Rs. 200, but afterwards, when the matter had been discussed with certain Pasis many of whom are known to be criminals and are registered as a criminal tribe, the witness began to waiver. On one occasion he was present when Sheo Ratan told the Pasis that Birj Lal should be killed near the Guria festival. This Guria festival, which is also known as Nagpanchmi, was celebrated on 20th August and it is the day on which married daughters return to the house of their parents The fact that this murder was committed on the eve of the Nagpanchmi festival, for it probably took place in the early morning of 19th August, affords a further reason for believing that the murder was committed out of revenge for the abduction from her husband's house of the wife of Sheo Narain.

It appears that Sheo Gobind lingered over his statement and was rather reluctant to come to the point but he ultimately stated clearly enough the events of the evening. According to him Sheo Narain and the Pasis, who have been acquitted in this case owing to the lack of evidence to corroborate the statement of Sheo Gobind, but not owing to the existence of any proof that they did not take part in the crime, met on the bank of the river. After midnight they all went to Sheo Ratan's house, but first of all Sheo Narain told Sheo Gobind that they were about to kill Birj Lal and gave him a chance of leaving at the last moment, but Sheo Gobind says : "I cannot help it now I have come." Sheo Ratan was awake inside his house. This man gave his age as 85 but the Judge says that he is perhaps about sixty years of age, and it does not appear that he is infirm on account of his age. Sheo Narain and one of the Pasis then went out. How they went out Sheo Gobind does not say After sometime they returned and they all, that is to say, Sheo Ratan, Sheo Narain, Sheo Gobind and four other persons whom he named, went into the house of Birj Lal through the door which was open The father and the son were sleeping on one bed and the wife was on another According to Sheo Gobind they were all strangled. Sheo Ratan and one of the Pasis throttled Birj Lal. Sheo Narain and two of the Pasis throttled the wife and Sheo Gobind himself throttled the child. Sheo Ratan then asked them to cut them into pieces but the murderers refused to do this as they thought that the night was almost over and they were afraid they would be caught But Sheo Gobind admits that before they left, one of the men, who have been acquitted, at the instance of Sheo Ratan, thrust a lathi between the woman's legs This was done after tying the woman's legs to the frame of the charpoy with a rope in order to pull them apart Sheo Gobind does not admit that any knife or lathi was used, except the lathi which was thrust into the woman while he was there, but he suggests that after he and the others left, Sheo Narain and Sheo Ratan may have returned to the house At least after leaving the house they went back and did not accompany Sheo Gobind and the Pasis. In the confession Sheo Gobind also tells the story of Sheo Ratan's vow saying that Sheo Ratan allowed his hair to grow, that is, he would not shave his hair until he had killed Birj Lal and his wife. He also says that some of the money promised to the Pasis was paid, namely, Rs 200 but he himself had not been paid It is on this confession that the conviction of all these three persons is based.

Sheo Gobind himself retracted the confession in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and he said that he had been beaten by the police and that he had been given some drug to drink so that he was not in his proper senses when he made the confession The whole of this story is rendered absurd by the fact that he was kept for a day in jail in solitary confinement and that the Magistrate left him sitting in his Court for two or three hours before taking his statement. It is perfectly clear that he was neither under the influence of drugs nor affected by beating when he made the confession. We are not prepared to say that it is impossible that a confession so detailed and elaborate might have been made on some inducement offered by the police even after all these precautions had been taken, but in our opinion there is proof in the statement itself that it was not made at the direction of the police. The first reason which leads us to this conclusion is that even if the post mortem report had been known to the Sub-Inspector on 23rd August, when he took the accused to the Superintendent of Police, there was nothing in that post mortem report which showed that a lathi had been thrust into the private parts of Mt. Bhagirati. This fact had not been observed by the Sub-Inspector himself and therefore it was a fact stated by the accused for the first time and only corroborated when the Civil Surgeon was examined in Court long after the statement was made. Secondly according to Sheo Gobind all the deceased were throttled Although the Sub-Inspector himself for some reason which is not clear to us, deposed that he thought that the child had been throttled, we cannot understand how he had that opinion. To the ordinary observer the child died either from the fracture of his skull or from severe injury to the abdomen : and it never occurred even to the Civil Surgeon that the child had been throttled. Similarly Birj Lal to all appearance died as the result of cuts which he received about the head and neck and in his case also the Civil Surgeon at the time of his post mortem examination did not suspect throttling. It was only in the case of the woman that he found clear symptoms showing that she had been throttled.

When therefore Sheo Gobind stated that all had been throttled he was making a statement which, whether the post mortem report was in the hands of the police or not, was contrary to the opinion which any ordinary person at that time must have held as to the cause of death both of Birj Lal and of the child. Yet when the learned Sessions Judge conducted in his own Court a very careful examination of the Civil Surgeon it was made to appear quite possible that all these persons were killed by throttling before the infliction of the other injuries. Birj Lal had two signs of throttling, namely, the protrusion of his tongue and eyes and no test could be made from his lungs which were completely decomposed. In the case of the child both lungs were congested which is a sign of asphyxia but cannot be due to decomposition. The doctor had never looked at these bodies with the idea of finding that the obvious injuries were not the cause of death, and, as he says, he did not examine them on the supposition that theirs were cases of throttling. All that he can say definitely is that they may or may not have been throttled and that the lacerated incised injuries were either ante mortem or caused immediately after death, that is to say within two hours Thus in a most unexpected way a statement made by Sheo Gobind, which appeared at the time to be contrary to the facts of the case, was shown several months afterwards in the Sessions Court to be possibly true. The third point in which Sheo Gobind added to the knowledge possessed by the police at the time when he was taken into custody is the use of the rope which was found tied to the woman's legs. It does not appear that the reason why the rope was tied to her legs was ascertained by the investigating officer and the explanation given by Sheo Gobind is clearly correct. We are not of opinion either that this explanation can have been given to him by the Sub-Inspector or that he can have invented it himself.

The confession therefore is not one of those which can be considered to have been tutored ; and it was certainly not made under the influence of drugs or fear. It is a confession which adds to the knowledge which was then available as to the cause of death in many particulars and has not been contradicted by anything which has been shown to us in the evidence. Even the fact that two men left the party in the house of Sheo Ratan and then came back and took them to the open front door, lends support to the view that they climbed on to the roof by means of the ladder, entered the house of Birj Lal by making a hole in the roof and opened the door from inside, although these facts were probably not in the knowledge of Sheo Gobind. The confession, therefore, being in our opinion a true confession, is sufficient, without any corroborative evidence, for the conviction of Sheo Gobind himself. This view of the law has been taken both by the Allahabad High Court and by this Court on many occasions. The first ruling to which we would refer is that reported in Queen Empress v. Mayku Lal (1). In that case it was held that such a confession, namely a retracted confession, was sufficient evidence, if a Court believed it to be true, for convicting the persons who made it. This view was carried further in the case of Emperor v. Kheri (2). It is there expressly laid down that as regards the person making it the retracted confession may, even without any corroborative evidence, form the basis of a conviction. These views have been recently confirmed by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Raggha v. Emperor (3) and this Court has followed that judgment of the Allahabad High Court on more than one occasion, in particular in the case reported in Raj Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (4). Thus even if we hold that there was no corroborative evidence we would feel ourselves justified in upholding the conviction of the accused Sheo Gobind on the basis of his own confession alone.

As to the effect of that confession against the co-accused we would not be prepared to follow the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Kheri (2) to which we have referred above and lay down that a retracted confession of a co-accused can alone be sufficient evidence to justify a conviction, nor has this view been maintained by the Allahabad High Court itself in more recent decisions, but that confession standing as it does unrebutted is admissible in evidence, and it is in the present case a strong piece of evidence. There is nothing to show that Sheo Gobind had any reason for naming these men falsely, and his story fits in exactly with all the facts which are known to us. The actual evidence which goes to corroborate the confession, apart from the motive which has been so clearly shown to exist in the case of these two men, is the circumstantial evidence offered by the discoveries made by the Superintendent of Police. There can be no question, in view of the fact that the door was found open, that a hole was found in the roof, that a ladder was set against the wall leading to the roof from the house of Sheo Ratan and that a burnt match corresponding to the matches in Sheo Ratan's match box was found on the roof, that the murderers entered the house from the house of Sheo Ratan Sheo Ratan and his son were the only persons living in his house, and they had no defence to offer. They did not even attempt to say that some other persons entered their house, took one of their matches, climbed on to the roof by their ladder and so entered the house of Birj Lal In our opinion this circumstantial evidence would have been difficult to answer and no attempt has been made to answer it.

Lastly there is the recovery of two dhotis which had been recently washed. This fact presents nothing unusual, but still it is worthy of notice that one of those dhotis was marked with human blood and it was the dhoti of Sheo Ratan He has given three explanations as to how there was blood on his dhoti. It cannot be proved that one of these explanations may not be right, but it forms the link, even though a weak link, in the chain of evidence against these men We have mentioned already the motive for the murder. The manner in which the bodies were treated, probably after death, shows clearly enough that this was a murder for revenge. If, as appears to be the case, mercenaries were employed who removed some money from the house, there can still be no question that the persons who submitted this woman's body to these atrocities were actuated by motives of revenge and not by motives of gain. The persons, who were incensed against this family and particucularly against the woman, were Sheo Ratan and his son, and where there is direct evidence against these persons that they committed the crime we cannot regard the existence of a strong motive as immaterial. In our opinion the confession of Sheo Gobind is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against both the co-accused. We believe that the learned Sessions Judge, who has tried this case with great care throughout, and has personally brought to notice many points which had escaped the investigating officer, has come to a correct decision. ### Order of reference

Misra, J.—This is an application for revision out of a suit for damages. The appellants filed originally a second appeal in the case but when the matter came up for hearing before a learned Judge of this Court, it was found that no second appeal lay in the case and the appeal was permitted to be converted into an application for revision. The facts out of which this suit has arisen are that on 18th April 1926, a pronote was executed by one Rameshwar Prasad in favour of Kedar Nath, the respondent before us, for a sum of Rs 200. On 24th February 1927 the said Kedar Nath sold the aforesaid promissory note to one Baldeo Prasad. Shortly after the transfer he filed a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Bilgram to recover Rs 232-9-0 due to him under the said pronote. The suit was instituted on 3rd March 1927 against two persons they being Rameshwar Prasad the original executant of the pronote, and Kedar Nath, the person in whose favour the pronote stood and who had transferred it in favour of the plaintiff. In para 6 of the plaint the respondent claimed relief that a decree should be passed for the amount claimed against Rameshwar Prasad who was defendant 1 or against both Rameshwar Prasad and Kedar Nath, who were defendants 1 and 2 respectively in the case, or against such of the defendants as the Court may find liable for the sum claimed whether jointly or severally.

The suit was tried by the learned Munsif of Bilgram on the Small Cause Court side He held that the pronote in suit was without consideration and no decree could, therefore, be passed on its basis against defendant 1. As regards the applicant who was defendant 2 in that case he held that no decree could be passed against him because: (1) such a pronote was unenforcible in law; and (2) that the respondent (the plaintiff in that case) had knowingly purchased this litigation from defendant 2 The suit was according to these findings dismissed on 28th April 1927.

After the dismissal of this suit the plaintiff respondent Baldeo Prasad instituted the present suit for recovery of a sum of Rs 348-9-0 as damages and costs. The amount which he claimed was in respect of the amounts paid by him as consideration for the transfer of the promissory note, and the sum incurred by him in prosecuting the original suit, brought against the executant Rameshwar Prasad and the defendant appellant Kedar Nath. In the present suit he states his cause of action to have accrued to him on 28th April 1927, the date when the previous suit was dismissed. The defence put forward in the present suit by the applicant was to the effect that the plaintiff-respondent fully knew the circumstances in which the pronote in question had been executed and that he knowingly took the transfer of the said deed Under these circumstances it was alleged that no suit for recovery of any damages could lie. The second contention put forward was to the effect that the present suit of the plaintiff-respondent was barred by the rule of res judicata since he had in the previous suit claimed a decree against the defendant which had been refused. The learned Munsif of Bilgram who tried the suit came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had purchased the pronote with full knowledge that it was without consideration and that he was not, therefore, entitled to recover any damages and that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. On these findings he dismissed the suit with costs by his decree dated 19th November 1927.

The plaintiff-respondent appealed against this decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, who differed from the learned Munsif on both questions He held that it was not proved that the plaintiff had any knowledge of the circumstance that the pronote was without consideration, and that he had purchased it bona fide and had paid the consideration. On the question of res judicata he also took a difierent view from that taken by the Munsif. He took the view that the cause of action for the present suit had only arisen after the dismissal of the previous suit, and although the plaintiff had impleaded in the previous suit the defendant of the present suit as defendant 2 he could not be considered to have sued him in that case for damages on the foot of the sale-deed and therefore his joinder in that case did not estop him from suing for recovery of damages in the present suit In this view of the case he decreed the plaintiff's suit but passed a decree in his favour only for Rs. 261-8-0 with interest on Rs. 200 from the date of his purchase up to the date of the suit at the rate of 6% per annum and also future interest at the same rate from the date of the suit up to the date of realization. His decree is dated 13th March 1928.

As stated above the defendant has now brought the matter to this Court Originally he filed a second appeal, but that has now been treated as a revision. Two points have been urged in revision against the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The first point is that no application for revision lies and the second point is to the effect that the decision in the previous suit operates as res judicata

As to the first point we may state that it has no substance If the present suit is really barred by the rule of res judicata we would in that case be inclined to entertain the present application for revision. The second point, however, raises a question of some difficulty The contention raised on behalf of the defendant applicant is to the effect that when the plaintiff respondent brought the previous suit and impleaded him as well in that suit and prayed for a decree against him he must be deemed to have claimed the same relief, which he now claims against him in the present suit. The further argument advanced is to the effect that if the relief which is being claimed in the present suit has already been claimed and has been refused, it is no more open to the plaintiff-respondent to bring a second suit in respect of the same relief

The reply on behalf of the plaintiff respondent is to the effect that the cause of action for the present suit is quite different from that of the previous suit. It is argued that the cause of action for the present suit had not even arisen at the time when the previous suit was brought, it having arisen only after the dismissal of the previous suit. It is, therefore, contended that though the plaintiff claimed a relief against the defendant in the previous suit, yet he could not be considered to have claimed a relief on the present cause of action and that the matter now in controversy was never directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. It was also argued that Expln 4, S 11, could not be held applicable to the facts of the present case inasmuch as it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to claim the present relief in the previous suit The question is one of some difficulty and also of importance. We have, therefore, thought it proper to refer it to a Full Bench under S. 14, Cl. (1), Oudh Courts Act, 4 of 1925. The question which we refer to the Full Bench is as follows :

"Whether a subsequent suit for damages brought by the transferee of a pronote against the holder of the note who has transferred it in his favour, is barred by the rule of res judicata, when he has already claimed a relief against the holder of the note by impleading him as a defendant along with the executant of the note in a suit previously brought against them for recovery of the money due under the promissory note, and that relief has been refused to him."

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C J.—I agree

Opinion.

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C J.—This is a reference to Full Bench by a Division Bench of this Court for decision of the following question : (The question referred was quoted as above) I was a party to this reference. It seems to me that the question as framed can admit of one answer and that is in the affirmative When a relief has already been claimed against a party and that relief has been refused to him, I see no escape for the application of the rule of res judicata as enacted in S. 11, Civil P. C. But in order to elucidate the substance of the reference it is necessary now to state a few facts, which are not incorporated in the question just now mentioned In the previous suit the plaintiff had impleaded two defendants. Defendant 1 was one Rameshwar Prasad and defendant 2 was Kedar Nath. Kedar Nath is again the dedefendant in the present suit. The facts of the previous case were that Rameshwar Prasad had executed a pronote in lieu of a consideration of Rs. 200 in favour of Kedar Nath. Kedar Nath had on 24th February 1927, assigned the pronote in favour of the then plaintiff, who is the same person as the plaintiff in the present suit In para 1 of the plaint in the previous suit the fact of the execution of the pronote by Rameshwar Prasad, defendant 1 of that suit, in lieu of the sum of Rs. 200 in favour of Kedar Nath, defendant 2 of the same suit, was stated. In para 2 the assignment by Kedar Nath in favour of the plaintiff Baldeo Prasad was alleged. It was further stated that the right to sue under the assignment had arisen in favour of the plaintiff. The averment in para. 3 of the plaint was that, in spite of repeated demands made on defendant 1 to repay the sum of money advanced under the pronote, the said defendant had failed to make any payment either to the plaintiff Baldeo Prasad or to his assignor Kedar Nath defendant 2 ; and it was further said that the fact of the non-payment to either of the two had necessitated the institution of the suit. In para. 4 of the same plaint the date of the cause of action was stated to be the date of the execution of the pronote, that is 18th April 1926. Para 5 relates to the valuation of the claim with reference to the Court-fee and the jurisdiction of the Court. Para 6 is devoted to the claim for reliefs, and that is important. It may be translated as follows :

"The plaintiff prays that a decree may be passed for a sum of Rs. 232-9-0 principal and interest as stated below together with the costs of the suit and also together with interest during the pendency of the suit and future interest till the date of recovery as against the defendant 1, that is Rameshar Prasad the executant of the pronote, or as against both the defendants, that is Rameshwar Prasad and Kedar Nath, the second defendant being the assignor of the plaintiff or as against any one of the two defendants jointly or severally."

A general prayer for any other relief, which the Court may deem fit to grant in the circumstances and justice of the case, was added. The judgment, which the Court delivered in the case, to the plaint of which reference has just now been made, is also before us By that judgment the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in its entirety. When we come to consider the language of that judgment there is no difficulty in interpreting the intention of the Court. Clearly the Court directed its mind to the prayer contained in the plaint in respect of the relief claimed by the plaintiff against both the defendants, either jointly or severally The relief in so far as the defendant 1, that is, Rameshwar Prasad, the executant of the pronote, was concerned, failed on one ground. With that ground we are not concerned. The relief as against defendant 2, that is to say, present defendant Kedar Nath , the assignor of the plaintiff, was also rejected on two grounds. Here again we are not concerned with the merits of those grounds. It follows from the analysis of the plaint and of the judgment founded on that plaint that relief against the present defendant was claimed by the present plaintiff in the previous suit and the relief was refused. Is it then on those facts open to the plaintiff to bring a second suit for the same relief against the same person, the relief in substance being for the recovery of the same sum of money or is the claim barred by the rule of res judicata? On my part I have no hesitation in holding that it is so barred.

In support of the maintainability of the claim several arguments were addressed to us. I will notice some of them briefly. It was urged in the first place that the cause of action for the present suit is different from the cause of action on which the previous suit was founded. In answer to this argument little need be said. The test as to whether a previous adjudication operates as a bar to a subsequent adjudication of the same matter does not lie in the fact as to whether the two causes of action are different or the same. The law as it stands to-day is perfectly clear on this point. There was some room for such an argument under the earliest Code of Civil Procedure (Act 8 of 1859) but it became wholly untenable under the Code of 1877, 1882 and is now equally untenable under the present Code. This has been repeatedly pointed out by the High Courts of India and even by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. The cases will be found collected in a very illuminating, if I may respectfully say so, judgment of the late Dr. Sir Sundar Lal when he was one of the Judges of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. I refer to Daya Sankar v. Ganga Sahai (1). For the purpose of this judgment it is enough to re-state the reference to Sri Gopal v Prithi Singh (2), affirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sri Gopal v. Prithi Singh (3) Recently the matter was again discussed at some length in a decision of the High Court of Patna in the case of Ram Lal Malikand v. Deodhari Rai (4). This argument therefore fails.

The second argument was that defendant 2, that is the plaintiff's assignor might have been impleaded in the previous suit and the relief claimed against him might have been claimed on the ground that since the date of the assignment or previous to it any money due under the pronote might have been paid to him by defendant 1 Rameshwar Prasad and not on the alternative ground of the assignment failing for want of consideration. The argument is excluded altogether by the allegation made in para. 3 of the previous plaint. We have quoted that paragraph in extenso and a careful perusal of it will show that it is impossible to attribute that intention to the plaintiff which is now being attributed to him in the arguments. When we carry this matter a little further, and indeed to its logical conclusion, there can be no doubt left that defendant 2 was impleaded in that suit and relief was claimed as against him on the sole possible and reasonable ground of an alternative claim on the failure of the assignment This exposition of the pleadings leads to the conclusion that the title on which the present suit is based is exactly the same on which the title to the relief as against defendant 2, that is Kedar Nath the assignor, in the previous suit, was based. If this view is correct, as I humbly say it is, there can be no question of the application of Expl. 4, S. 11, Civil P. C.

The third argument addressed to us was based on the assumption that it was only by the force of the application of Expl. 4 to the present case that the rule of res judicata could be held to constitute a bar to the adjudication of the present suit. It was argued that that Explanation did not apply and therefore there was no such bar. The learned advocate for the respondent developed this argument with some warmth, repeatedly insisting on us that the ground of claiming a relief against his assignor on the failure of the assignment might not and ought not to have been alleged in the previous suit for the reason that it would have introduced dissimilarity in the allegations and confusion in the trial. To my mind there was no danger of either introducing dissimilarity or confusion. That the plaintiff might not have claimed any relief against defendant 2, his assignor, or might not have brought any suit against him may be conceded, but the fact remains that he did bring the previous suit against him and that he did also claim a relief against him. Now I have already shown that there could be no reasonable ground for any relief against the assignor except the ground that the assignment had failed for want of consideration Now either that was impliedly alleged in the plaint or it was not so alleged. If it was alleged then, as stated before, Expl. 4 has nothing to do with the case whatsoever. If it was not so alleged, there can be no doubt to my mind that it might have been alleged ; and I also hold that it ought to have been alleged What dissimilarity or confusion could arise in an alternative claim as against one of the two defendants to the previous suit on the ground that the assignment had failed ? If we test the argument in the light of the events that have happened, it seems to me that it would have been more expedient and more reasonable on the part of the plaintiff, having impleaded defendant 2 Kedar Nath as a party to his previous suit, to have claimed the relief, which he did claim against him, on the ground of the failure of the assignment. Nothing has happened, so far as the legal relationship between the two persons is concerned since the date of the judgment in the previous suit which has made the ground for attack against Kedar Nath either more certain or clearer now. It was said that what has happened is the judgment in the previous suit refusing relief against defendant 1, that is the executant of the pronote ; but this event was, in the alternative, clearly anticipated, according to my interpretation, in the plaint of the previous suit and it was on that anticipation that relief was claimed against the assignor. These were all the grounds which were urged in support of an answer in the negative to the question referred to us by the Division Bench.

I now proceed to refer briefly to some of the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee which bear on the arguments advanced by me in support of the answer which I have given to the question In the case of Tekait Doorga Prasad Singh v. Tekaitni Doorga Konwari (5) Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred to a previous decision of the same Committee in the case of Soorjamonee Dabee v. Sudanund Mohappatter (6), and quoted the following observations from the judgment of that case :

" Their Lordships are of the opinion that the term 'cause of action' is to be construed with reference rather to the substance than to the form of action and they are of opinion that in this case the cause of action was in substance to declare the will invalid on the ground of the want of power of the testator to devise the property he dealt with. But even if this interpretation were not correct, their Lordships are of opinion that this clause (Cl. 2 Act 8 of 1859) in the Code of Procedure would by no means prevent the operation of the general law relating to res judicata founded on the principle nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa."

Sir Barnes Peacock proceeded to say :

" This law has been laid down by a series of cases in this country with which the profession is familiar. It probably has never been better laid down than in a case which was referred to in Vol. 3 of Atkyns, Gregory v. Molesworth (7), in which Lord Hardwicke held that where a question was necessarily decided in effect, though not in express terms, between the parties to the suit, they could not raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form ; and that decision has been followed by a long course of decisions, the greater part of which will be found noticed in the very able note of Mr. Smith to the case of the Duchess of Kingston."

It would appear from what I have stated in the preceding portion of this judgment that the remarks of Lord Hardwicke are apposite to the present case. In the case of Kameshar Prasad v. Rajkumari Ruttun Koer (8) Lord Morris after considering the scope of Expl. 2, S. 13, Code of 1882, which is similar to Expl. 4, present Code, said :

" That it ' might' have been made a ground of attack is clear that it ' ought' to have been, appears to their Lordships to depend upon the particular facts of each case. Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word 'ought' would become important. In this case the matters were the same. It was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon Run Bahadoor and it appears to their Lordships that the matter ' ought' to have made a ground of attack in the former suit and, therefore, that it should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the former suit and is res judicata."

I have already held that the title for an alternative relief founded on the failure of consideration of the assignment in favour of the plaintiff might well have been made a ground of attack in the previous suit. That an attack was made in the form of a relief against the assignor is admitted. What is disputed is that the ground of attack now made is not the same as the one in the previous suit. But to my mind there is nothing to show that it might not have been made and I have no difficulty in further holding that it ought to have been made The matter was not so dissimilar that its union with the primary ground of attack against the executant of the pronote might have led to any confusion To use the language of Lord Morris, it was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon the assignor alternative to the liability which was, according to the respondent's learned advocate, pleaded on the ground of the possibility of any payment having been made by the executant of the pronote to the assignor Expl 2, Old Code, was also considered by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Fateh Singh v Jagannath Bakhsh Singh (9), and the view taken in the previous cases was affirmed

Before taking leave of this case I would also mention a decision of this Court in Bansi Dhar v. Jagmohan Das (10) on which reliance was placed by the learned advocate for the respondent Two of us in the case considered the applicability or otherwise of the rule of res judicata to the facts of that case as contemplat d by Expl. 4 of the Code, and in disposing of that matter we said :

"It appears to us that the conduct of Lala Jagmohan Das in withdrawing the issue which was raised in the suit amounted to no more than an abandonment of a plea which was wholly foreign to the substance of that suit."

If we could predicate the same of the previous suit of the plaintiff we would certainly then hold that there was no bar of res judicata, but we could not do so as I have endeavoured to show in the preceding portion of this judgment. My answer to the reference therefore is in the affirmative.

Misra, J.—I am of the same opinion as the Hon'ble Acting Chief Judge. It is clear from the plaint filed by the plaintiff-respondent in the previous case that he claimed a relief against defendant 2, the applicant before us. That claim clearly meant that the plaintiff-respondent wanted a decree against the applicant. It is also clear that such a relief could only be claimed, as explained by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-respondent, on two grounds : Firstly, that the money due under the pronote had either wholly or partially been paid by the executant of the pronote, who was arrayed as defendant 1 in the previous suit to the applicant who was defendant 2 in that case. Secondly, that if the pronote be found to have been without consideration, that is, if there was proved to be a failure of consideration It is true that neither the first ground nor the second ground was set up by the plaintiff-respondent in the previous suit and it is only left to us to find out what could be the possible grounds on which he could be considered to have claimed a decree against the applicant, who was as stated above arrayed as defendant 2 in the previous case

As to the first aspect it is clear from the allegations made by him in para 3 of the plaint that he (the plaintiff-respondent) could not be considered to have put forward that case. In that paragraph he clearly stated that defendant 1 of the previous case had paid no money either to the plaintiff-respondent or to defendant 2 who is the applicant before us. If then this aspect be considered to be one that cannot be entertained the only aspect that could have been in the mind of the plaintiff-respondent when he claimed a decree against defendant 2 of the previous case, now the applicant before us, is that embodied in the second ground. Indeed the Court deciding the previous case understood the plaintiff to mean this very thing It considered that aspect and gave a clear finding against the plaintiff. We are not here concerned whether it was right or wrong in doing so. We are only concerned with the finding as it was actually given The result therefore seems to me that the same relief which the plaintiff is now claiming in the present suit was claimed by him in the previous suit and that it was refused If this is the conclusion to which we have to arrive in the case, in my opinion there is no room left for doubt that the matter is now res judicata

It has been remarked by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment that the present suit cannot be held to be barred by the rule of res judicata inasmuch as the cause of action for it can only be considered to have accrued on the dismissal of the previous suit, and this argument has been urged before us with vehemence by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-respondent. In reply to this I need only state that if the plaintiff himself claimed a decree against the applicant who was a defendant in the previous suit and if the only ground on which he could be considered to have claimed that decree was the ground of the failure of consideration as pointed above, it is no more open to him to say that the cause of action had not accrued to him for the present claim when he had brought the previous suit and claimed a relief against the applicant. If the plaintiff-respondent had not impleaded defendat 2 in that case and had not claimed a decree against him it would have been open to him to take up this position, but having claimed the relief and the case for that relief having been considered in the previous suit I do not think it is any more open to him to take up that position. I am therefore of opinion that the present suit is barred by the rule of res judicata and that the answer to the reference made to the Full Bench should be in the affirmative.

Pullan, J—Before expressing briefly my full concurrence in the judgment pronounced by the Hon'ble Acting Chief Judge, I must promise that in my opinion it is difficult, if not impossible, to answer in general terms, a question as to whether a whole class of cases can or cannot be held to be barred by the principle of res judicata. Our judgment should therefore apply strictly to cases exactly parallel with that which has given rise to this reference.

We have to consider then a case when a person buys a promissory-note from the holder, and brings a suit against the assignor and the executant of the note, claiming from both of them jointly and severally the consideration of the note, and at the same time stating in express terms that nothing has been paid to the assignor by the executant It is such a plaintiff who having lost his suit against both the defendants essays to bring a second suit against the assignor claiming damages, and is met in limine by the plea of res judicata.

We have only to consider whether the previous decision is one covered by the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C. Undoubtedly the plaintiff is litigating under the same title against one who was a party in the previous suit. The real question for determination is whether the matter now in issue, was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit. In my opinion it was The fact that the present suit is said to be a suit for damages, and the former was a suit for money decree on a promissory note is in my opinion immaterial. The plaintiff is now claiming, as he claimed in the first suit, the sum due on the promissory note It matters not that he puts forward a different cause of action. A competent Court has decided in a reasoned judgment that he cannot recover that money, and that is a decision which bars the subsequent suit The defence that the plaintiff did not at the time of the first suit contemplate the possibility that the pronote would be held to be without consideration, is in my opinion negatived by his own plaint If no money had been paid by the executant to the assignor, the plaintiff could have no claim against the latter, unless the consideration failed. It is only on the ground that the consideration has failed that he bases the present suit. I would answer the reference in the affirmative

Judgment—This is a plaintiffs' appeal against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bahraich, dated 30th July 1927 by which the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs were Shambhu Singh, son of Jagmohan Singh, Daya Shanker Singh, Mahadeo Singh and Ram Karan Singh, son of Adhar Singh After their suit had been dismissed and this appeal has been filed they have sold their title to half the property, which is the subject-matter in this suit, to Lala Ram Sarup Rastogi of Lucknow city. He has been joined as an appellant The facts, which it is necessary to state in order to appreciate the nature of appeal, are these A certain Indar Pal Singh owned three entire villages and a share in a fourth village in the District of Bahraich These villages will be described in this judgment as the estate Indar Pal Singh died on 21st August 1871 leaving three sons: the eldest was Madho Singh (or Mahadeo Singh) the two other sons were Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh After his death the estate was entered in the name of Madho Singh, who provided maintenance for his brothers in a manner which will be detailed subsequently This maintenance has been continued to their descendants The plaintiffs are the descendants of Chhattar Singh. The descendants of Sheo Ratan Singh are in existence As they did not join in the suit they were made defendants. Madho Singh died on 16th June 1890 On his death the estate was entered in the name of his son Shanker Baksh Singh Shanker Bhaksh Singh remained in enjoyment of the estate, continuing the payment of maintenance to the descendants of Chhattar Singh and the descendants of Sheo Ratan Singh. Shanker Baksh Singh died on 25th September 1922. He left no male issue He was survived by his widow Mt. Sukhraj Kuer, respondent 1 and five daughters, Jagraj Kuar known as Bari Bachhi, who was s widow at the time of her father's death, Mt. "Babu" who married Thakur Bishrup Singh and three others. "Babu" was not a widow when her father died but is a widow now Jagraj Kuar "Bari Bachhi" is respondent 2 He also left surviving him two married daughters, Jagpal Kuar and Harfa or Batauli and an unmarried daughter, Jagpal Kuar has a son Birendrapal Singh or Lal Saheb who is respondent 3. Shanker Baksh Singh was about forty-seven years of age at the time of his death. He had not been born in 1874 He resided in the village of Naugaiyan in the Bahraich District It is proved and admitted on both sides that for some months previous to his death he had been suffering from chronic dysentery and harmorrhoids He was daily becoming weaker.

On 2nd and 3rd September 1922, he was brought from Naugaiyan to Bahraich to the house of Babu Sheo Gopal, a legal practitioner, whom he had consulted on previous occasions. He stayed in the house of Babu Sheo Gopal, pleader and underwent medical treatment. About 10th or 11th September 1922, his wife Sukhraj Kuer and his widowed daughter Jagraj Kuer arrived at Bahraich and went to the house of Babu Sheo Gopal where they resided with the invalid. According to the evidence on 15th September 1922, Shanker Baksh Singh instructed Babu Sheo Gopal to draft a will On 18th September 1922, he issued further instructions A rough draft was made by Sheo Gopal Babu Sheo Gopal sent at about 10 A. M for a petition-writer called Mahadeo Prasad Mahadeo Prasad faired out the draft. At 2 P M. the will was signed, being executed in the presence of attesting witnesses Sheo Gopal and Lal Bahadur. Lal Bahadur had died before he could be called as a witness in this suit. The will was registered by the Sub-Registrar of Bahraich on the same day Shanker Baksh Singh had up to this time been under the medical attendance of an hakim called Mohammad Umar. On 21st September 1922, Dr Plant, a regularly qualified medical man, who was then Assistant Surgeon at Bahraich, was called in to attend Shanker Baksh Singh. Shanker Baksh Singh was then in a precarious state of health. On 22nd or possibly on 24th September 1922, Shanker Baksh Singh was taken back to Naugaiyan. He died on 25th September 1922.

After his death Buddhu Singh, the brother of Shambu Singh, plaintiff and Gaya Singh, the son of Ahbaran Singh who was the brother of Adhar Singh applied to the revenue authorities to have their names entered to engage for the revenue of the estate Gaya Singh and Buddhu have since died. Gaya Singh died in July 1923, and Buddhu Singh died in January 1924. Sukhraj Kuer opposed this application claiming inter alia under the will of 18th September 1922 The plaintiffs agreed that her name should be entered and that the question of title should be left to be decided in a regular civil suit In the proceedings before the revenue authorities defendants 4 to 7, who belong to the Sheo Ratan Singh branch, made an application to the effect that they accepted the title of Sukhraj Kuer. The revenue authorities entered her name as the person entitled to engage for the revenue of the estate and she is still in possession. The present suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich on 15th September 1925.

We had considerable difficulty in discovering from the plaint in the suit what the case of the plaintiffs actually was. We shall advert later to this question. It is sufficient to note for the present, that we consider that the plaint, as it stands, reflects little credit on those responsible for its preparation. So far from putting the case of the plaintiffs in a coherent and intelligent manner the plaint leaves in considerable doubt what their case actually was, and even leaves the question of the relief sought doubtful. This is one of the cases in which the right to seek alternative reliefs was pressed in a manner which interfered considerably with the subsequent decision. Put broadly, the case for the plaintiffs, appears to have been that Madho Singh had the property for the benefit of himself and his brothers, that he was entitled to manage the estate and to enjoy the profits subject to a liability to provide maintenance for the collateral branches, but that he had not full title as proprietor The case continued, that on the death of Mahadeo Singh, Shanker Baksh Singh obtained the same status as that possessed by his father, that Shanker Baksh Singh had no power of alienation either by devise or otherwise, and that on his death without male issue the property reverted to the collateral branches Great stress was laid upon the contents of an award of 27th July 1874. We shall consider the terms of this award later. In event of it being found against the plaintiffs that Shanker Baksh Singh had a right to devise the property by will the plaintiffs attacked the will itself. They asserted that Shanker Baksh Singh, at the time that he executed the will, was not of sound disposing mind, and they further asserted that the will had been executed as the result of undue influence. The directions of O. 6, R. 4 in respect of particulars of the undue influence alleged were not in our opinion, satisfied. The plaint asserted, for a reason which the learned counsel for the appellants has been unable to ascertain, that daughters and daughters' sons were excluded from inheritance under a family custom. It is difficult to see how the question could arise on the merits of the suit. After a series of pleadings and a replication, which so far from clearing up the position went rather to confuse and complicate it, issues were framed.

The main issues with which we are concerned are the issue as to the effect of the award and the issue as to the validity of the will. There was further an issue that Sukhraj Kuer was debarred from inheriting the properties in suit under the terms of the award and also under a family tribal custom. We have difficulty in finding when the plaintiffs first asserted a tribal and family custom excluding widows from inheritance under the Mitakshara law as to intestate succession. It is not, however, of importance as to whether this latter plea was properly raised, as the learned trial Judge has decided on the evidence that the existence of a custom excluding widows has not been established, and as his decision upon this point has been accepted as correct by the learned counsel for the appellants. The grounds of appeal question the accuracy of this decision in ground 10, but the learned counsel has abandoned that ground of appeal. The learned trial Judge decided that Shanker Baksh Singh was at the time of his death a full proprietor of the estate and that he had complete title to devise the estate by will. He found that there was nothing in the terms of award which prevented his exercising this power of devise. In respect of the will he found that it had been executed by Thakur Shanker Baksh Singh in the manner required by law, and he further found that Shanker Baksh Singh was of sound disposing mind at the time that he executed the will, and that the plaintiffs had been unable to establish that the execution was vitiated by the exercise of undue influence upon the testator. Having thus found that Shanker Baksh Singh was a full proprietor with a full power of devise and that he had made an effective devise which excluded the plaintiffs absolutely, he dismissed the suit. He further found that daughters and daughters' sons were in this family excluded from succeeding to property under the intestate succession provided by the law as there was a special local and family custom established which so excluded them This point is immaterial to the decision of this suit, as Jagraj Kuar did not claim except under the terms of the will, and Lal Saheb has based his title upon a transfer made in his favour by his grandmother, Sukhraj Kuar.

We now approach the matters for decision in the appeal We have first to note our appreciation of the great care which the learned trial Judge has devoted to the decision of a suit complicated by inaccurate pleadings and by the introduction of much irrelevant and useless evidence. We have further to note that we have received the most valuable assistance from the experienced senior learned counsel who have appeared on both sides

We have now to advert to the plaint It is necessary to examine this closely in order to appreciate the arguments of Sir Tej Bahadur on behalf of the appellants We have indicated the case asserted by the plaintiffs in respect to the limitations of Shanker Baksh Singh. We here quote in extenso the second, third and fourth paragraphs of the plaint:

Para. 2.—That Indar Pal Singh was the proprietor and possessor of Naugaiyan estate, which includes the villages and property in suit, entered in the list hereto attached.

Para. 3.—That Indar Pal Singh was Raikwar Suraj Bansi and he died on 21st August 1871, leaving three sons, Mahadeo Singh, Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh.

Para. 4.—That after the death of Indar Pal Singh disputes arose between his sons the decision of which was referred to Lalta Singh, Sheikh Nawazish Ali and Zafar Mehdi as arbitrators, under an agreement for arbitration, executed by Mahadeo Singh, Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh. That the said arbitrators under the award on 27th July 1874, decided the case to this effect that in view of the preservation of the estate, Mahadeo Singh would remain proprietor of the estate, that Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh would get some land by way of maintenance and it was held that in case of Mahadeo Singh having a male issue he would be the successor of Mahadeo Singh in respect of the estate and that in case of his having no male issue it would be incumbent on him or his heirs to appoint some one from among the sons of Chhattar Singh or Sheo Ratan Singh as his successors, and that in the presence of the descendants of Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh nobody would have a right to be the successor or representative of Mahadeo Singh."

It is to be observed that in these paragraphs the plaint does not describe clearly the title of Madho Singh, the father of Shanker Baksh Singh Nowhere does the plaint assert that Indar Pal Singh and his sons Madho Singh, Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh were members of a joint Hindu family. Nowhere does it suggest that the property was joint family property. In the whole course of the pleadings, in the issues and in the conduct of the case the plaintiffs never put forward that the property was joint family property; and in the grounds of appeal it is not suggested that the property was joint family property. The circumstances here are such that the ordinary presumption of the Mitakshara law is rebutted by the facts of the case There is evidence on the record which shows that during the lifetime of Indar Pal Singh his son Madho Singh had claimed as against him portions of the estate The evidence upon this point though scanty precludes the view that the family was a joint family. It is established from this evidence that this estate had come into being before the confiscation of 1858 and it was clearly awarded by the British Government to Indar Pal Singh after the confiscation. There is no evidence as to the manner in which it was awarded. The mere circumstances that it was entered in Indar Pal Singh's name is not of great assistance, for it is well known that many estates were awarded to a person as head of a joint family. But the award, upon which the appellants rely, precludes the view that the family was joint, and it even precludes a view other than the view that the property after Indar Pal Singh's death was obtained by Madho Singh as his own property subject to the obligation of providing his brothers with maintenance. We have to emphasize these points as the position taken by the appellants varies according to the findings at which we arrive. If the property had been the self-acquired property of Indar Pal Singh and the family was not a joint family it should under the Mitakshara law have, upon his death, been divided into three shares one of which would have gone to Madho Singh, one of which would have gone to Chhattar Singh, and one of which would have gone to Sheo Ratan Singh The award, however, clearly shows that the property was not divided in that manner We now come to the award itself It is printed at two places We refer to Ex A-5 which is printed at p 95 of Part 3. We shall note in examining it certain inaccuracies in translation We have first to see how this award came into being It appears from its heading that in a suit brought early in the seventies by Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh against Madho Singh in the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of Bahraich in which they claimed maintenance against their brother, the determination of the maintenance due was referred to the decision of arbitrators who made this award on 27th July 1874 The award was subsequently made a decree of Court

We have been unable to obtain any evidence as to the origin of the suit or its subsequent conduct except the evidence contained in the award itself This much, however, appears to us clear The suit was a suit for maintenance brought by two younger brothers against an elder brother. The fact that they considered it necessary to institute a suit in this form would go to show, not only that the family was not a joint family, but that the estate had not devolved as self-acquired property under the provisions of the Mitakshara law for had it devolved under the provisions of the Mitakshara law it would, if joint family property, have been inherited by all three brothers by survivorship, and if it had been the self-acquired property of Indar Pal Singh it would have been divided in three equal shares amongst them. But we find that the eldest brother Madho Singh was in possession of the estate and that his brothers were suing for maintenance. The estate would appear from this to have been an estate held singly by an elder brother under a common practice in Oudh which was prevalent before 1857 which placed upon him the obligation to provide maintenance to the younger members of the family

The following are the necessary extracts from the award :

"The parties by executing an agreement for mutual arbitration on 26th July 1874, empowered us (and agreed) to the effect that the parties would agree to anything that we might decide with regard to the parties."

This is certainly general enough but it must be remembered that the suit was a suit for maintenance and for nothing else. It was not a suit to decide title to the estate The arbitrators continued :

"In our opinion it is expedient that for the preservation of the family estate, Madho Singh should remain the owner of the estate and that he should give in perpetuity for the purpose of maintenance of Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh and their heirs"

—here certain land is specified and certain other privileges are specified The award then continues

"During the lifetime of Madho Singh, the persons should be content with the said lands. If God is pleased to grant male issue to Madho Singh he (i. e., such son) would be the representative of Madho Singh's estate."

As Madho Singh begot a son Shanker Baksh Singh we are clear on the first point that Shanker Baksh Singh succeeded Madho Singh as "owner of the estate" The word owner in the Urdu is "malik" There is nothing stated affirmatively as to the powers of Madho Singh and his son, if any, to deal with the property as they wished, but, on the other hand, there is nothing to restrain them in any way and the use of the word "malik" as we read the context, would give both Madho Singh and his son full proprietary rights We now come to the passage upon which the learned counsel for the appellants had laid great stress We note before we come to it that this passage only refers to the eventuality of Madho Singh having no son :

"In case there be no male issue of Madho Singh it will be incumbent upon Madho Singh and his wife that they should constitute one of the sons of either Chhattar Singh or Sheo Ratan Singh as successor and representative. So long as there are Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh's sons in the field no one shall be entitled to become successor and representative of Madho Singh. When the daughter of any of the aforesaid persons is to be married it shall be incumbent upon Madho Singh to help them with cash and kind in proportion to his income and means. At present Madho Singh should pay Rs. 100 in cash to the said persons."

We have to note that in the copy of this award filed by the plaintiffs instead of the word "wife" is inserted the word "heirs" The learned trial Judge has given good reasons for showing that the defendants' copy Ex. A-5 is correct in this particular and that the plaintiffs' copy has been tampered with.

This latter incident is one of the many unsatisfactory incidents in the conduct of the plaintiffs' case in the trial Court. It is upon this passage that the learned counsel for the appellants has relied. He frankly accepts the view that the word "heirs" in his clients' copy is an interpolation, and that the power of appointment was given to Madho Singh and his wife and not to Madho Singh's heirs. He argued in the first place that the property was joint family property which, for the purpose of convenience, was left first in the hands of Madho Singh and then in the hands of his male descendants, if any, to be enjoyed by them for their individual benefit subject to the provision of maintenance to the collaterals, but he maintained that the property remained joint family property. It is upon the plea that the property is joint family property that he pressed his claim for the first relief sought in the plaint, which is a relief by way of immediate possession of the property.

He then took the position that even if the property is not joint family property and is to be considered as the self-acquired property of Madho Singh his clients are entitled to a declaration of their title to succeed Here he took a position which was certainly included in the relief claimed in the plaint but which was inconsistent with allegations in the body of the plaint, to the effect that in absence of a valid testamentary disposition, the property would vest under the provisions of the Mitakshara law in Thakurain Sukhraj Kuar after her husband's death. His case was that the will was bad, and that she would have the estate of a Hindu widow. The learned counsel agreed that in order to succeed on this plea he would have to set aside the will, but maintained that if he succeeded in setting aside the will his clients were entitled to a declaration that Sukhraj Kuar's title was only that of a Hindu widow and that his clients were entitled to a declaration that they were the nearest reversioners. The learned counsel agreed that it would be difficult for him to obtain the second declaration in view of the fact that it is impossible to determine at this stage who will be the nearest reversioners after the death of Sukhraj Kuar, the lady being still alive. But he has pointed out that if he can upset the will he is entitled at least to a declaration that the estate of Sukhraj Kuar is only that of a Hindu widow We agree with him upon the latter point

We now turn to the passage in the award itself In the first place we have to consider what this award means and if it has the meaning which the learned counsel for the appellants suggests, we should then have to consider whether the restriction placed by the arbitrators on such a construction is a restriction which is enforceable in law The learned trial Judge did not go into the latter point because he found that there was no restriction upon Shanker Baksh Singh under this portion of the award. Shanker Baksh Singh had not been born when this award was made. The learned trial Judge has written:

"It may be thus seen that the award contemplates two contingencies for each of which it has made a separate provision. Madho Singh had a son and so the other contingency, viz., that arising in the case of his having no son, did not at all arise making the provisions in the award relating to it nugatory and inapplicable. No restriction, whatsoever, has been imposed by the award on the powers of Madho Singh's son of his succession to the properties in suit on Madho Singh's death, nor is there anything at all in the award indicating that the devolution of the properties after the death of Madho Singh's son would take any course other than laid down by the ordinary rules of succession. It is thus clear that under the award the properties in suit absolutely vested in Madho Singh's son Shanker Baksh Singh after the death of Madho Singh without any restriction on his powers, and that the said properties did not, as they could not under the circumstances, vest in Chhattar Singh and Sheo Ratan Singh. This being so, the plaintiffs cannot, in any way, benefit by the award."

After consideration we have arrived at the same conclusion. It appears to us that the arbitrators were looking no further then Madho Singh's death. They were concerned with the claims of his two brothers to maintenance. So long as Madho Singh lived the two brothers were to receive maintenance and nothing more; but they were to get something more if Madho Singh died without leaving male issue. If he died without leaving male issue the arbitrators considered that a son of Chhattar Singh or a son of sheo Ratan Singh would be selected who would become owner of the estate in the manner in which Madho Singh had been owner of the estate. It is obvious that this provision could only affect one of the sons of the two brothers. The provision for maintenance of the remainder had already been made by the previous part of the award We do not read this award as meaning, as the learned counsel for the appellants would have it, that on the extinction of the line of Madho Singh the successor was to be appointed by the last holder or his widow or both of them from the collaterals, and there is certainly nothing in this award which can support the plaintiffs' case, which is not that the widow, or in the event of her refusal the Court should make the appointment, but that they should succeed according to the Mitakshara law as reversioners. The claim to succeed as reversioners under the Mitakshara law is palpably not based upon the award We decide that the award does not help the plaintiffs in any way. This being the case we need touch very lightly on the validity of such a provision, if it existed We consider that upon the authority of the decision in Jafri Begam v Ali Raza (1) such a provision, if it had existed, would have been invalid. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in that case had to decide whether a provision in an award which deprived a lady, called Abbasi Begam, of the right, which she had under the Mahomedan law, to obtain partition of certain property could be enforced against her son, who had succeeded her after her death. Their Lordships said at page (118 of 28 I A):

"As regards the effect of the fifth clause, their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioners that it affords no defence to the present action. It may have bound the parties who agreed among themselves to abide by it; but as against the present plaintiff the clause has no effect whatever. The arbitrator had no power to alter the course of legal devolution in a mode at variance with the ordinary principles of Mahomedan law in the absence of a special custom prevailing in the family. He had no power to make property which was divisible by law indivisible for ever."

(1) [1901] 23 All. 393=28 I. A. 111=8 Sar. 27 (P.C.).

The facts were, of course, different but the principle appears to us to bind the present case. If the arbitrators had directed that the son of Madho Singh should not be competent to devise his property as he was entitled to devise it by law, but was to be confined to appointing a person of a particular class as his successor, the arbitrators would have been endeavouring to alter the course of legal devolution in a mode at variance with the ordinary principles of Hindu law

We summarize our conclusions. We find that the estate was owned and possessed by Shanker Baksh Singh with full proprietary title We find that it was not family property The whole history of the estate is in favour of the view which we take It is noticeable that in the year 1895 an appeal was decided by the Judicial Commissioner's Court, in respect of this very estate This litigation has been referred to by the learned trial Judge. He found assistance from a translation of the award now in suit which was made in that litigation and he has referred to the litigation in support of his finding that the copy of the award produced by the defendants was accurate and that the copy of the award produced by the plaintiffs was inaccurate. We refer to this litigation upon another point This litigation originated in a suit brought by Jagmohan Singh (the father of Shambhu Singh plaintiff) against Shanker Baksh Singh for a contribution towards the marriage expenses of his daughter. The appeal was decided on 6th August 1895 by Mr. G. T. Spankie It is Shanker Baksh Misra v. Jagmohan Singh (Second Civil Appeal No. 162 of 1893) The judgment in that suit shows clearly that Jagmohan Singh never suggested that this estate was joint family property or that he had any title or claim thereto except the right to maintenance and the right to have the expenses of his daughter's marriage satisfied. The Judicial Commissioner found that he had no right in that case to any contribution from Shanker Baksh Singh. The decision is immaterial as far as we are concerned, but it is very noticeable how the property was treated in that litigation. Thus finding that the estate was held with full proprietary title by Shanker Baksh Singh, who undoubtedly was liable to provide maintenance for his collaterals but who was in no way debarred from disposing of the estate in any manner in which he wished (the charges for maintenance remaining as charges upon the estate) we find that he had power to devise his property.

This brings us to the remaining question. Was the devise a good devise in law? This question is important for, if this devise is not a good devise in law, Sukhraj Kuar's estate is only the estate of a Hindu widow. We proceed to examine the contents of the will which is translated as Ex A-1. The will is not a very long will. After a preliminary recital as to the testator's age, ill-health and uncertainty as to the future the testator devised possession and enjoyment over the whole of his estate to his widow Sukhraj Kuer He devised to her full proprietary rights over half, and a life-estate over the residue with remainder to his eldest daughter Jagraj Kuar. He added a clause which might have given rise to future litigation had it not been for a subsequent disposition Under this clause he directed that if his widow has not disposed of the moiety of the property over which she had absolute title within her lifetime that moiety was to pass to Lal Saheb the son of his daughter. As the lady has already transferred to Lal Saheb the moiety during her lifetime by a registered deed of gift dated 11th October 1925, Ex. C-1, this provision is not likely to be made the subject of future judicial determination

The position with regard to this will is as follows: As the will is challenged it is for the propounders, that is to say, the respondents, to show not only that it was executed but that it was executed by Shanker Baksh Singh intelligently and that he had a sound disposing mind. After they had put forward their evidence it was for the appellants to break that evidence down or to meet it with other evidence. But after these two conditions had been satisfied it was still open to the appellants to establish that the execution of the will had been obtained by exercise of undue influence. The defendants' evidence in support of the will is the evidence in the main of Babu Sheo Gopal (D. W 1), the pleader who prepared it under the testator's instructions and of the Sub-Registrar Mohammad Wasi Ali Khan, whose evidence was recorded on commission There is other evidence, but this is the most important. (The judgment then discussed the case and concluded that the will was not only executed by Shanker Baksh Singh but that it was executed under his instructions, that he thoroughly understood its contents, that he was of sound disposing mind at the time of its execution, and that the execution of the will was not caused by undue influence It then proceeded) We can now proceed to decide the appeal. The first ground of appeal to the effect that the evidence showed that the cash nanka in suit in village Reoli was also owned by Indar Pal Singh was not pressed by the learned counsel. The only grounds that were pressed were that Shanker Baksh Singh had no power to devise his estate and that the will which he made was bad in law. We have already found on both these grounds against the appeal. We accordingly dismiss the appeal The appellants will pay their own costs and the costs of the contesting respondents. Jagraj Kuar was unrepresented and she will get no costs. Sukhraj Kuer will receive one set of costs Lal Saheb who was separately represented will receive another set of costs.

Second Appeal No. 202 of 1928, Decided on 24th January 1929, against decree of Dist. Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 2nd April 1928.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 43 — Person selling land as full owner—Vendor full owner at least as to portion and having reversionery interest as to rest—S. 43 does not apply.

Where the vendor in his sale-deed expressly states that the property sold by him is the property in which he has a title in presenti and he is in actual possession thereof as an owner and it was found that it was so only as to a portion, S. 43 does not apply, merely because some portions of the lands sold were actually situate in an estate in which the vendor had only a reversionary interest. [P 187 C 1, 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 115—Estoppel.

An estoppel cannot have the effect of making a void transfer valid. [P 187 C 2]

(c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 43—Sale of Hindu reversioner's interest is not validated—Hindu law.

Section 43, T. P. Act, clearly enacts a rule of estoppel commonly known as "feeding the grant by estoppel." This estoppel cannot make a transfer forbidden by law good e. g , a transfer of spes successionis of a Hindu reversioner. A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 189 and A. I. R. 1921 *P.  (d) Hindu Law—Reversioner assuming that property had already been gifted to donee by widow's husband when living and therefore consenting to its gift by widow to him as he (donee) had allowed widow to remain in possession—Consent is not to an alienation by widow as female heir.

A consent to gift by widow, by a reversioner given under assumptions of facts which never existed e g., that the alleged donee was nephew of her husband and that the estate had already been gifted by the husband to the donee but as the donee had allowed the widow to remain in possession she executed a gift deed in his favour, is a consent to an act which the widow did not do in her right of a female heiress but by virtue of her bare possession which she held under the good will of the donee of the estate and thus is not a consent by a reversioner to an act of transfer of the estate by the female heir at all. *A. (e) Hindu Law — Alienation by widow—Gift to stranger—Reversioner consenting — Presumption as to gift being legitimate does not arise.

There can be no case of an alienation by a Hindu widow unless the alienation is made for legitimate purposes which may be proved either aliunde or by raising a presumption in favour of it, which presumption may, if not rebutted by contrary proof, be passed on the consent of reversioners. A transfer by way of gift in favour of a stranger is not an alienation to which the presumption of its being legitimate founded on the consent of the reversioners can be applicable *A. I. Judgment —This is the appeal by defendant 1 from the decree of the District Judge of Fyzabad, dated 2nd April 1928, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same place dated 17th January 1928. In the suit, out of which this appeal arises, the plaintiff-respondent claimed to recover possession of a 5 annas 4 pies share situate in pukhtadari mahal Debi Singh, patti Lakhpati Koer, in the village of Parsauli, pargana Bidhar, in the district of Fyzabad. The facts of the case are as follows:

The share in suit originally belonged to one Mangal Singh Mangal Singh died many years ago On his death he was survived by his minor son, Mendai Singh and widow Mt Lakhpati. Mangal Singh's estate, in the circumstances, devolved by right of inheritance on Mendai Singh but the mutation of names in the revenue records was made in favour of Mt Lakhpati. Mendai Singh died in 1908 unmarried. The estate then devolved on Mt. Lakhpati in the character of the mother of her deceased son, Mendai Singh She therefore held a Hindu female's estate in the share in suit On 14th February 1917 one Ram Lagan sold certain specified plots of land situate in the village of Parsauli to the defendant-appellant under a deed of sale of the date just now mentioned (Ex. A4). On 15th May 1918 Mt Lakhpati made a gift of the zamindari share, which had devolved on her by right of inheritance from her deceased son, Mendai Singh, in favour of the defendant-appellant with the exception of certain sir lands. On 28th May 1922 Ram Lagan aforementioned relinquished a certain zamindari share to which he had become entitled, not the share in suit, in favour of the defendant-appellant. He executed a deed, which is Ex A2. In this deed he refers to the gift made by Mt. Lakhpati on 15th May 1918 and it is this reference which has given rise to a ground of contest on the part of the appellant in the present litigation. To this matter we will advert again

Mt. Lakhpati died in April 1925 It is agreed that on her death the share in suit devolved by right of succession on Ram Lagan, whose name we have already mentioned twice, and on one Gopi in equal moieties and it was on the death of the widow that they became entitled in that right to the possession of the property in suit. On 16th September 1926 Ram Lagan and Gopi sold the share under a deed of sale (Ex. 1) in favour of the plaintiff-respondent and the suit, which is now being considered by us, was instituted to enforce the title which came to be vested in the respondent under the transfer of 16th September 1926. In defence several pleas were taken but we are in the appeal before us concerned with two of such pleas. 1. That the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to a decree in respect of the specific plots of land, which were sold to the defendant-appellant by Ram Lagan under the deed of 14th February 1917 by reason of the estoppel, as the argument is now put before us, arising out of the provisions of S 43, T. P Act, 1882, and (2) that the reference to the deed of gift of 15th May 1918 made by Ram Lagan in the deed of relinquishment of 28th May 1922 by way of approval thereof disentitles the plaintiff from claiming his share in the property in suit. The Courts below have rejected both these pleas and decreed the plaintiff's suit as already stated The same pleas are again urged upon us at the hearing of the appeal

As to the plea of estoppel under S. 43, T P Act, 1882, the first observation which falls to be made is that it was never taken in either of the Courts below. There are certain facts in relation to this plea which have to be stated to enable a proper appreciation of its bearing on the present case Before the year 1915 the village of Parsauli stood divided into two distinct mahals of equal proportions. One of these mahals was called mahal Narindar Bahadur Singh and the other mahal was called mahal Debi Singh. In the former mahal, Ram Lagan and Gopi held a 4 annas 4 pies share in their own right In the latter mahal of Debi Singh is situate the share, which formerly belonged to Mangal Singh and latterly was possessed by Mt Lakhpati This is the share of 5 annas 4 pies now in suit. In the year 1915 an imperfect partition of mahal Debi Singh was made by the revenue authorities and a separate patti of 5 annas 4 pies held by Mt. Lakhpati was constituted This was called patti Lakhpati. On a comparison of the sale-deed of 14th February 1917 with the partition chitti in respect of patti Lakhpati (Ex. 19), we find that some portions of the land transferred under the sale by Ram Lagan in favour of the defendant-appellant are situate in the newly formed patti Lakhpati. It is now argued on these facts that though Ram Lagan had no interest in those portions of the lands sold, which are now included in patti Lakhpati on the date of the sale he has acquired a proprietary interest therein in the character of a revesionary heir after the death of Mt. Lakhpati in the year 1925 and that therefore he is entitled to those lands by the effect of the provisions of S 43, T P. Act, 1882.

We are of opinion that those provisions are wholly inapplicable to the facts of this case. The deed of sale which Ram Lagan executed in favour of the defendant-appellant expressly states that the property sold thereby was the property in which Ram Lagan had a title in presenti and was in actual possession thereof as an owner This description of the interest transferred is clearly applicable to Ram Lagan's interest as a cosharer of the village in his own right. The fact that some portions of the lands sold are actually situate in Mt. Lakhpati's patti formed after the partition does not lead to the inference that Ram Lagan considered himself to be the owner of anything which lay within that patti It might be that at the date of the sale he had forgotten that two years previous to it an imperfect partition of mahal Debi Singh had taken place But be that as it may, it is perfectly clear and the contrary is not shown to us to exist, that when Ram Lagan lost at the partition some of the lands of the village which he held in severally before the partition, he must have received other lands in lieu thereof and the sale, if otherwise valid, must fasten on the lands so received

The second ground, on which this plea fails, is that the provisions of S. 43, T P. Act, 1882, cannot obviously be so given effect to as to override any other provision of the same Act A transfer by a Hindu of immovable property to which he on the date of the transfer in the reversionary heir expectant on the death of a widow to come into possession is forbidden by S. 6 (a), T P Act, 1882 It is therefore void : Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (1). We have no hesitation in stating as a proposition of law that an estoppel cannot have the effect of making a void transfer valid. S. 43, T. P Act, 1882, clearly enacts a rule of estoppel commonly known as "feeding the grant by estoppel." This estoppel cannot make a transfer forbidden by law good This view was recognized by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (2). In that case Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of the Committee said :

This principle of law, which is sometimes referred to as feeding the grant by estoppel, is well established in this country. If a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by a conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate, and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes, Doe d Christmas v. Oliver (3), discussed in Smith's Leading Cases, vol., II., p. 724. It is unfortunate that this view of the case does not seem to have been presented either before the Subordinate Judge or to the High Court ; but it appears to their Lordships that it could have been raised under issue 15 (2) and it is raised in the appellant's case. In these circumstances it is not in accordance "with their Lordships' practice to determine a point of law of such importance. There may be statutory provisions or provisions of native law which would prevent the operation of the doctrine ; for the law of conveyance in England depends on special and complicated considerations."

(The italics in the above quotation are ours). Finally their Lordships remitted the case to the Court of first instance to be tried on the point just now mentioned. The provisions of S. 43, T. P. Act, 1882 may also be stated in another form familiar in English law, that is, a man cannot in equity any more than in law assign what has no existence; he can cantract to assign property which is to come into existence in future and when it has come into existence equity treating that as done which ought to be done fastens upon that property and the contract to assign, if supported by consideration, then becomes a complete transfer The leading case in support of the rule is Tailby v. Official Receiver (4). But surely as said before, a principle of equity must yield to express provisions of a statute and if the contract to assign or the transfer itself is declared by the statute as void the principle that equity considers as done that which ought to be done must be held to be inapplicable to such a transfer. This we gather is the effect of the recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, to which we have already referred, that is Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (1). The precise point was considered by Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Sumsuddin Goolam Husein v. Abdul Husein Kalimuddin (5). In delivering the judgment in that case Jenkins, C. J., said with reference to Cl. (a), S. 6, T. P. Act, 1882 :

"Having regard then to the fact that the chance of an heir-apparent is thus specially excepted from the category of transferable properties I am of opinion that the principle that equity considers that done which ought to be done has no application."

We therefore overrule the first plea taken before us.

The second plea is founded on the recitals contained in the deed of relinquishment dated 28th May 1922. We have already said that the subject-matter of the relinquishment evidenced by this deed is not the share in suit but a differerent share in the village. Into the mouth of Ram Lagan are put the following words in this deed :

"Mangal Singh, uncle of Bindeshri Singh, died after having made in his lifetime a gift of all his property in favour of his nephew, Bindeshri Singh, and Bindeshri Singh had out of his good will got the name of Lakhpati, his aunt, entered into the revenue papers and she was accordingly in possession of the estate. Consequently she has executed a deed of gift in favour of Bindeshri Singh, grandson of Sambhal Singh, brother's son of her deceased husband, and having done this she has made him malik and put him in possession of the property. To this I have no objection. Bindeshri Singh is in proprietary possession of the whole of the estate of his uncle, Mangal Singh."

It is argued that the words " To this I have no objection " conclusively establish a case of consent on the part of the reversioner, Ram Lagan, to the gift made by Mt. Lakhpati in favour of the defendant-appellant and that such a consent validates the alienation. In support of the argument we were pressed hard with the decision of a Full Bench of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini Ramanji (6). In the case before us the question of consent as a question of fact stands on quite a different footing. Both the Courts below have pointed out and we are of opinion that there is a good deal of force in it that Ram Lagan's acquiescence to the gift made by Mt. Lakhpati is based on assumptions which have no foundation in facts. Mangal Singh was not the uncle of Bindeshri Singh nor Bindeshri Singh is the grandson of Mangal Singh's father, Sambhal

Singh. Indeed it is now admitted before us that Bindeshir Singh has no blood relationship with the family of Mangal Singh. The second assumption which is of a very serious nature is that Mangal Singh had made a gift of his entire estate in favour of the appellant, Bindeshri Singh. It seems to us that the consent rests on the assumption that title to the estate of Mangal Singh had already come to be vested in Bindeshri Singh by virtue of a gift from the former to the latter and therefore it is a consent to an act which the widow did not do in her right of a female heiress but by virtue of her bare possession which she held under the good will of the donee of the estate, that is the appellant Bindeshri Singh In the circumstances and having regard to the finding of the lower appellate Court, we are unable to hold that the recital contained in the deed of relinquishment dated 28th May 1922 evidence a consent by a reversioner to an act of transfer of the estate by the female heir.

As a pure proposition of law we are not prepared to state it is broadly as it has been done by the learned Judges of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini Ramanji (6) mentioned above We think as at present advised that we should go no further than what has been expressly decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rangasami Gounden v Nachiappa Gounden (7). Nor are we prepared in this case to take the liberty of making logical deduction from or extension of the principle of that decision. In the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (7) Lord Dunedin in giving the judgment of the Judicial Committee says :

"On the other hand, what a Hindu widow may do has often been authoritatively settled. Here arises that distinction which, as Seshagiri Aiyar, J., most justly observed in the present case, will, if not kept clearly in view, inevitably lead to confusion—the distinction between the power of surrender or renunciation which is the first head of the subject, and the power of alienation for certain purposes, which is the second."

We think that the observation of Lord Dunedin quoted above clearly defines the limits of an act which a Hindu widow may do as such She may do either an act of surrender or an act of alienation We are unable to add a third head of the subject. His Lordship, then, proceeds first to consider the power of surrender. It is not argued that the case before us is a case of surrender but it is a case of alienation. But clearly an alienation by a Hindu widow must be an alienation "for certain specific purposes" as Lord Dunedin says in the passage already quoted. In dealing with the case of alienation his Lordship observes :

"The purposes for which alienation is legitimate may be summarized as religious or charitable purposes, and those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of the husband, or necessity. Now, necessity must be proved, and the mere recital in the deed of alienation is not sufficient proof."—Banga Chandra Dhur v. Jagat Kishore (8). An equitable modification has also been admitted in the case where the alienee has in good faith made proper inquiry and been led to believe that there was a case of true necessity. Thus far the alienation stands alone. But it may be fortified by the consent of reversionary heirs. (We desire to lay emphasis on the use of the word "fortified" in this quotation). The remaining question is what is the effect of such consent ? If the alienation be total, and the reversionary heirs be the nearest, it falls within the first division. But what if it be partial ?"

His Lordship then refers to and quotes a passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of the Collector of Masulipatam v. Venkata Narrainapah (9) which is as follows :

"On the other hand, it may be taken as established that an alienation by her which would not otherwise be legitimate may become so if made with the consent of the husband's kindred. The exception in favour of alienation with consent may be due to a presumption of law that when that consent is given, the purpose for which the alienation is made must be proper."

His Lordship proceeds :

"The opinion which is here only tentatively expressed viz., that consent does not give force per se, but is of evidential value is corroborated by much subsequent authority."

After referring to the case of Raj Lukhee Debea v. Gokool Chunder (10) Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (11) and Debi Prasad v. Golap Bhagat (12) his Lordship refers to the decision of the Privy Council in Bijoy Gopal v. Girindra Nath (13) and says that in that case :

" The consent of reversioners was looked on " as affording evidence that the alienation was under circumstances which rendered it lawful and valid." But, further, if the matter be considered on principle, it seems clear that this must be the true view. Nor, first, if mere consent, as such of the reversioner could validate alienation, then the rule as to total surrender would be an idle rule. And secondly, mere consent could only validate on the theory that the reversioner, together with the widow, represented the whole estate. But that is impossible unless the reversioner has a vested interest, whereas it is settled that he has only a spes successionis. "

His Lordship then proceeds to consider the decision in Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh (14) and finally states the conclusion on the point of consent in the following words .

" When the alienation of the whole or part of the estate is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then if such necessity is not proved aliunde and the alienee does not prove inquiry on his part and honest belief in the necessity, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to dispute the transaction will be held to afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one. "

We do not think that we should pursue this matter any further Our own reading of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa (7), is that there can be no case of an alienation of a Hindu widow unless the alienation is made for legitimate purposes which may be proved either aliunde or by raising a presumption in favour of it, which presumption may, if not rebutted by contrary proof, be passed on the consent of reversioners Obviously a transfer by way of gift in favour of a stranger such as the one we have before us is not an alienation of its being legitimate founded on the consent of the reversioners can be applicable

There is one more case to which reference must be made before we take leave of this appeal. The learned advocate for the appellant cited the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ramgouda Annagouda v Bhausaheb (15) in support of the argument that even a gift by a Hindu widow may be validated by consent of the reversioners. We do not think that the decision lays down the proposition that a pure gift by a Hindu widow of her husband's estate in favour of a stranger can hold good if it is supported with the proof of consent of the reversioners We are clearly of opinion that the consent does not operate proprio vigore and that in the case cited by the learned advocate the gift and the two sales were " inseparably connected " to use the language of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, and that the reversioner had himself acquired a part of the estate out of the three dispositions which constituted one and the same transaction We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs

Criminal Appeal No. 44 of 1929 (Capital Sentence No. 5 of 1929), Decided on 15th February 1929, against order of 1st Addl. Sess Judge, Lucknow, D/- 18th January 1929

(a) Penal Code, S. 300— Person knowing of his wife's murder but making no report to police nor trying to find out murderer— His conduct may lead to conclusion that he was murderer—Evidence Act S. 114.

Where the person admittedly knew that his wife was murdered shortly after midnight and yet he made no report to the police station, nor made any attempt to find out who killed his wife, his conduct was unnatural and may lead to the conclusion that he himself was the murderer. [P 191 C 2]

C., S. 337 (2-A)—Magistrate wrongly committing approver to sessions along with accused — Sessions Judge instead of referring to High Court to get commitment quashed, proceeding with case as if there was no commitment — Sessions Judge's procedure though wrong did not vitiate trial.

Magistrate supposing that Cl. (2-A), S. 337, Criminal P. C., directed him to commit the approver to Sessions, committed him along with the accused to Sessions. The Sessions Judge, instead of referring the matter to the High Court in order to have the commitment quashed proceeded with the case as though there had been no commitment.

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 337 (2-A) — One accused granted pardon —Case against other must be committed to sessions.

Judgment.—Bhagwandin Lohar has been convicted of the murder of his wife Mt Ram Dei. He has been sentenced to death and this sentence is before us for confirmation. He has submitted an appeal from jail and has been represented in this Court by a counsel appointed by the Crown.

There is no question that Mt Ram Dei, wife of Bhagwandin, was murdered with a gandasa in her house on the night of 1st and 2nd October 1928. The murder was reported by the village Chaukidar at 7 a. m. on the 2nd October. In this report he did not give the name of any person as being the murderer, but he stated that he had been sent to make the report by Ajodhia Lohar This Ajodhia Lohar is the uncle of the accused, and has been examined as a witness for the prosecution He stated in Court that he did not tell the Chaukidar that Bhagwandin had murdered his wife, and this would appear to be the reason why Bhagwandin's name did not appear in the first report. There is, however, ample evidence that immediately after the crime was committed that is, in the middle of the night Bhagwandin went to Ajodhia and to his other uncle Santu and told them that he had killed his wife. He subsequently made the same statement to a witness named Lalta who lives in the adjoining house and to the mukhia Ram Jiwan. Another man Mendai also states that he was present when the accused confessed his guilt in the presence of the mukhia and Ajodhia Mendai is by caste a Bhujwa. Lalta is an Ahir Ram Jivan mukhia is a Kurmi and no reason is alleged why any of these persons should have made a false statement as to the confession of Bhagwandin. It is even more unlikely that his two uncles Santu and Ajodhia would make such statements falsely. Apart from this extra-judicial confession there is clear evidence that after the Sub-Inspector came to the village Bhagwandin produced a blood-stained dhoti from the roof of the adjoining house and stated that he had been wearing it at the time of the murder. Another indication of the guilt of this man may be seen in his own conduct. Admittedly he knew that his wife was murdered shortly after midnight, yet he made no report to the police station, and he appears to have made no attempt to find out who killed his wife. Such conduct is unnatural and leads to the conclusion that he himself is the murderer.

Bhagwandin was put upon his trial along with his daughter-in-law Mt Sarjudei. This woman lived in the same house as her father-in-law and she was a widow. She herself says that she had an illicit connexion with her father-in-law and she produced before witnesses certain blood-stained garments which belonged to her and which were worn by her, as she says, at the time of the murder She made a confession before a Magistrate, and she was offered a pardon in the Magistrate's Court In accordance with this pardon she was examined on oath and made a statement which is not entirely in accordance with her first confession, but still is substantially the same on the most important points. She states that Bhagwandin planned the crime with her and asked her to call him in the night It appears that he slept outside the house while the women and children slept inside Apart from the motive arising from their guilty connexion it appears that there were constant disputes between Ram Dei and her daughter-in-law on account of their children. In her statement Sarjudei says that she called Bhagwandin into the house at midnight, and that he killed his wife with the gandasa while she looked on She accounts for the blood stains on her own clothes by saying that she took up the child who was sleeping near her mother in her lap and that the child was stained with blood. Surjudei is an approver and her evidence must be regarded with suspicion. We do not consider that her explanation as to the blood stains on her clothes is satisfactory and it does not agree with the statement that she made in the first instance There she said that Bhagwandin took up the child We have also considered the nature of the injuries inflicted on the deceased. There were many wounds, perhaps as many as fifteen and many of them were only skin deep. It is true that the gandasa which we have seen is very light in weight and not sharp, but even so we can hardly believe that all these injuries were inflicted by a man. It is more probable that Mt. Sarjudei herself inflicted some of them, but she has chosen to conceal this fact in her evidence But apart from the evidence of Sarjudei we consider that the case is proved against Bhagwandin It is proved by his own conduct, in particular by his confessions to his relations and the other villagers, and also by his production of the blood stained dhoti from the adjoining roof. He now wishes to suggest for the first time that the murder was committed by Sarjudei alone, but this was not the case which he wished to set up in the Court below. There he started a case implicating his neighbour Lalta, who according to him had illicit connexion with Sarjudei. He had, however, no evidence of any kind to support this assertion and there is no reason to believe that it was true. It may be remarked that had the crime been committed by Sarjudei alone or by her with the assistance of some stranger there could be no reason for the uncles of the accused coming forward to give evidence against him.

The case, as we have said, is sufficiently proved without the evidence of Sarjudei. We have been obliged to consider very carefully whether the trial was not vitiated by the procedure of the Courts below in dealing with this woman as an approver. The Magistrate misinterpreted S 337, Criminal P. C., and supposed that Cl. (2-A) of that section directed him to commit the approver to Sessions. He accordingly committed her along with Bhagwandin, and the learned Sessions Judge instead of referring the matter to this Court in order to have the commitment quashed proceeded with the case as though there had been no commitment. Undoubtedly the proper procedure for the Sessions Judge to adopt was that which has been adopted on previous occasions when a similar mistake has been made by Magistrates who persisted in misreading this section, but in our opinion the so-called commitment was not really a commitment because Sarjudei was not charged, and was never put upon her defence. In saying that he committed her to sessions the Magistrate merely meant that she was to be put before the Sessions Judge at the time of trial of Bhagwandin. She could not be tried firstly because she had been given a pardon and secondly because she had never been charged. It is evident that she herself knew that she was not being tried, and that she was fully aware of the terms of the pardon which had been offered to her. This being so, although we are of opinion that the procedure of the Sessions Judge was wrong, we do not consider that the irregularity committed was one which vitiates the trial. As a matter of fact the accused was not prejudiced in any way by the technical mistake committed by the Magistrate.

It is not necessary for us to explain S 337 again as this has already been done by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Emperor v. Peru (1) We may briefly state that the meaning of the section which the Magistrate has misinterpreted is simply that where a pardon has been granted to one accused the case against the other accused must be committed to sessions We might also observe that a similar case was brought to the notice of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh by one of us when a Sessions Judge in the year 1924, and a Circular letter was issued to all Magistrates. It is to be regretted that this Circular letter appears to have become dead even although it was supplemented by a ruling reported in the Oudh Law Journal.

We are satisfied that the case has been fully proved against Bhagwandin and the sentence in this case must be one of death. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal, uphold the conviction and sentence and direct that Bhagwandin be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

In the case of transactions with pardanashin women the question of independent advice is not one of vital importance because the advice if given might have been bad advice or the settlor might have insisted on disregarding it. The real point is that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act of the person who makes it and there is a further danger that if this necessity for independent advice is carried too far the legal protection given to the pardanashin lady may be actually transmuted into a legal disability. *A. (c) Mahomedan Law—Limited estate—Shia Law allows existence of number of limited estates.

Shia law admits of the existence of a number of limited estates one after another and consequently the interposition of life estates, before the estate comes as a life estate to third persons, raises no legal difficulty and does not involve the necessity of holding that on the expiry of the life estates the estate in the third persons was an absolute estate. [P 199 C 2]

(d) Words and Phrases—Malik means owner—Addition of other words can qualify the meaning.

The word " malik " means owner in the full sense of the word ; but it is not a term of art and its meaning can always be qualified by the addition of other words which contradict the idea of absolute ownership ; A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 63, Foll. [P 199 C 2]

(e) Family arrangement — Conflicting claims are recognised and settled—Settlement is not transfer within the meaning of Transfer of Property Act, S. 10.

A family settlement is based on the assumption that there is an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is. So a deed of family settlement is not a transfer within the meaning of S. 10, T. P. Act, but is a recognition of conflicting claims. [P 201 C 1]

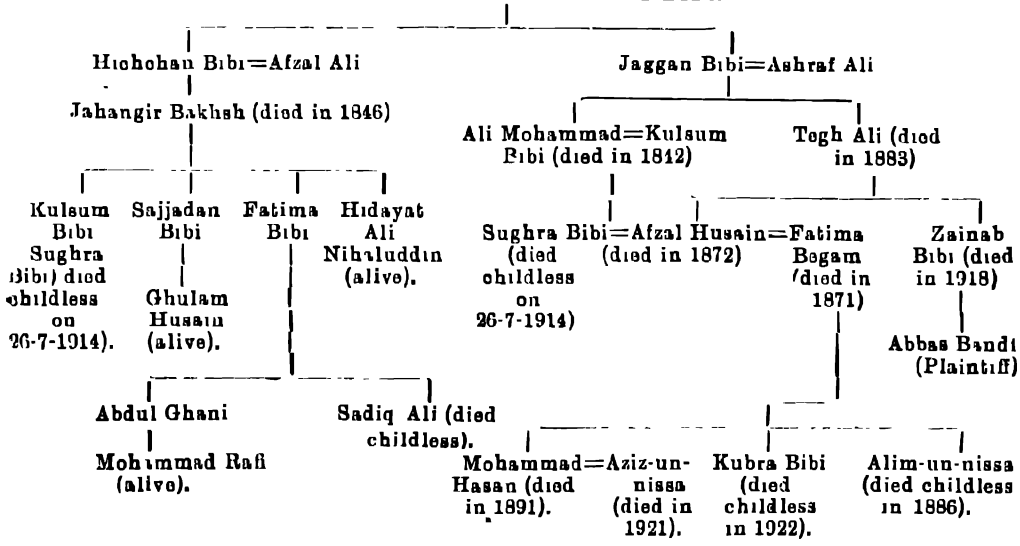
Judgment.—These appeals arise out of two suits brought by Mt. Abbas Bandi Bibi in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad to recover certain property to which she claims title as the heir of 2/3rds of the estate of Mt Sughra Bibi who died, as is now admitted, on 26th July 1914. The first suit was brought on 26th March 1926 and relates to several items of village property which have come by different means into the possession of the various defendants in the suit The second suit has been brought in respect of a single village Daryapur which is in the possession of certain other parties. In both cases the plaintiff depended for success on being able to prove that Mt Sughra Bibi had no right of alienation in respect of the property which came to her under the terms of a deed of compromise executed in the year 1870 between Mt Sughra Bibi herself and Afzal Husain who became her husband after the execution of the compromise. It seems unfortunate that for some reasons unknown to us the two cases were tried simultaneously in different Courts in the same District. The first suit in point of date of the institution was heard by the Subordinate Judge who gave his opinion on a preliminary issue on 26th November 1926. This issue runs as follows :

" Was the restriction placed by the compromise deed dated 19th September 1870, upon Sughra Bibi's power of alienation valid and legally enforceable. "

It was after this decision had been obtained that the issues were framed in both cases, and the evidence was recorded in the first suit until April 1927 and in the second suit until March 1927. On 25th May 1927 the Additional Subordinate Judge pronounced judgment in the suit relating to Daryapur village in favour of the plaintiff, holding that the family settlement of 1870 gave a life estate to Mt. Sughra Bibi and a remainder over to her heirs. This decision is entirely contrary to that of the Subordinate Judge on the same point, and on 30th September 1927 another Subordinate Judge, who relieved his predecessor when almost all the evidence in the case had already been recorded, delivered judgment in the suit dealing with the bulk of the property. This judgment proceeds on the lines of the Subordinate Judge who tried the preliminary issue and is against the plaintiff whose suit was dismissed with regard to the greater part of the property, but she was permitted to obtain three properties which were under mortgage by paying certain sums to the mortgagees. In our opinion it would have been better had both suits been disposed of by one and the same Judge, though as matters now stand we have the advantage of having before us an exposition of each point of view on what is the main issue in the case The pedigree given below shows in detail the relationship between the various persons whose names will appear from time to time in our judgment.

(For pedigee see page 195)



Mt. Sughra Bibi was the daughter of Ali Mohammad and Kulsam Bibi and Afzal Husain was the son of Tegh Ali, the brother of Ali Mohammad. The bulk of the property in suit in both cases belonged to Haji Mohammad Hafiz the maternal grandfather of Tegh Ali and Ali Mohammad. He gifted the property to his wife Mt. Nanhi Bibi and she in her turn gifted it to her grandsons Tegh Ali and Jahangir Bakhsh. The latter was the son of her daughter Hichchan Bibi. Jahangir Bakhsh made certain dispositions of his share which emboldened Mt. Sughra Bibi in the year 1868 to bring certain suits against her cousin Afzal Husain for a half share in the property. It may be mentioned that the property was settled in the name of Afzal Husain at the Second Summary Settlement after the Mutiny although his father Tegh Ali was still alive. It is immaterial whether Mt. Sughra Bibi's suits were well founded or not. At least they resulted in protracted litigation, for it was not until September 1870 that a compromise was arrived at between the parties which we have to interpret.

As a result of this compromise Mt. Sughra Bibi became the wife of Afzal Husain. He had another wife named Fatima Begam and in the compromise the estate which he then held was divided between the two wives some of it immediately and the rest after the death of himself and his father Afzal Husain himself died in 1872, his first wife Fatima Begam having already predeceased him in 1871. There is abundant evidence that the children of Fatima Begam inherited one half share in the property from their mother and that Mt Sughra Bibi was in possession of the other half. There is also no question that Mt. Sughra Bibi herself entered into numerous transactions by which she mortgaged with possession almost the whole of her share in the property. Some of these mortgages were executed jointly with Mohammad Hasan or Husain the son of Afzal Husain by his first wife, and others were executed by Mt. Sughra Bibi alone. The first transaction of which we have knowledge was as far back as 1873 and the last transaction of Mt Sughra Bibi was a sale deed in favour of Mt Imam Bandi Bibi on 31st March 1914. When this transaction was completed Mt Sughra Bibi had either sold or mortgaged with possession the whole of the property which she had obtained in 1870, with the exception of certain sir rights and some houses and a grove, and the sale deed gave a charge over these also to the vendee.

The plaintiff is the daughter of Mt. Zainab Bibi, sister of Afzal Husain and first cousin of Mt. Sughra Bibi. The plaintiff is therefore one of the heirs of Mt. Sughra Bibi and under Shia law she is entitled as is admitted by parties, to two-thirds of her estate. The remaining one-third would devolve upon other descendants of Jahangir Bakhsh who are at the present time Ghulam Husain, Nihaluddin and Mohammad Rafi. These persons have taken no part in the suit and it is consequently only the two-thirds share of the plaintiff Mt. Abbas Bandi Bibi which is being claimed The major part of the evidence in these suits has been recorded in the case before the Subordinate Judge, and when the appeals arising from that suit are decided it will be necessary to add only a little in order to decide the other appeal. We shall therefore commence with appeal No. 2 of 1928 which is the appeal preferred by Mt. Abbas Bandi Bibi against the dismissal of her suit in respect of the properties contained in her original plaint filed by her in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Mt. Abbas Bandi Bibi did not in her plaint make any reference to the sale-deed of 31st March 1914, but when this sale-deed was set up by defendant 1, who is the son-in-law of the ostensible vendee under that sale-deed the plaintiff denied the execution of the document, and we shall decide this point before turning to a consideration of the compromise of 1870. An attempt has been made to show that Mt. Sughra Bibi was unable to understand the document which was executed by her, even if the physical execution itself is admitted. It is also suggested that, even if she could understand the document, she had not the advantage of the advice of those persons who were best able to give it. We have been referred to a series of pronouncements of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee which protect the interests of pardanashin women in India. Mt Sughra Bibi stated her age to be thirty-two in 1870. There is no reason to suppose that she was more. She was therefore 76 when the sale-deed in question was executed Mere age is not a proof of incapacity to act, and though an attempt has been made to show that Mt Sughra Bibi was not only old but almost unconscious owing to illness as well as being mentally deficient, we do not find that any of these facts are established by the evidence. The most reliable witness examined on the part of the plaintiff is Saiyed Liyaqat Husain who is a Deputy Collector and related to the parties. He did not bear out the theory that Mt Sughra Bibi was in any way mentally deficient. He said that she was an ignorant female of ordinary understanding. Another witness for the plaintiff Ghulam Husain who is one of the heirs of Mt. Sughra Bibi, described her as dull witted (motisamajh) but he explained this by saying that she put question after question in order to understand any thing and

" without these scrutinising questions about details she was not satisfied."

In re-examination he gave an example of his meaning :

" Suppose there was a talk of some mortgage she would say ' call such and such a man and if that man advises, then only I can enter into the transaction and not otherwise. . . . . Her servants and employees often defrauded her and so she used to be always very alert that she might not be deceived.' "

Apart from this oral evidence on the plaintiff's own side there is the evidence of Nihaluddin, who was called by the defendant but dissatisfied him so much by his evidence that an attempt was made by counsel to treat him as hostile But the Judge observed in a note that he was of opinion that the witness had shown no animus against either party. Nihaluddin never suggests that Mt. Sughra Bibi was deficient in intelligence, though he says that when the deed was executed she was affected by old age and after she began to be affected by a boil in her mouth she took half an hour to understand what she had formerly been able to understand in five minutes. There is also documentary evidence which shows that Mt. Sughra Bibi entered into numerous business transactions and not only signed her name on documents but made a regular practice of noting in her own hand the nature of the document We have been shown endorsements in which she has written the words Ikrarnama (agreement), Rahinama (mortgage) Tammassukh (bond) and bainama (sale-deed) and in each case she used the word correctly. Her handwriting was not good, but it could be easily deciphered and she cannot, therefore, be classed as an illiterate woman, nor as one of deficient understanding. At the time of her death she was engaged in a law suit against Kamlapat Ram, who is one of the respondents in Appeal No. 2 of 1928 and the Judicial Commissioner's judgment was published in Sughra Bibi v. Kamlapat Ram (1) In that case Mt Sughra Bibi herself attempted to set up a plea that she was unable to understand a deed executed by her in 1905 on the ground of her physical and mental incapacity, and we see from the judgment that she was examined as a witness and impressed the Court with the view that as late as 1912 she was woman of business habits, who thoroughly understood what she was doing In an appeal in a suit decided by the Judicial Commissioner on 7th January 1907 the same plea of incapacity had been raised by her but was found against her and we are not of opinion that the evidence before us justifies us in holding that on 31st March 1914 she had lost her capacity to understand a simple sale-deed. No doubt she was ill at the time, because in December 1913 she had a tooth extracted and as a result she was suffering from some form of ulcer in the mouth, but the evidence which shows that she lived thereafter in a state of semi-consciousness is conflicting as well as absurd. She died four months later, but in the interval we find instructions given in her name and apparently with her knowledge in the case for mutation set up on the basis of this sale-deed, and she also executed a will in favour of Nihaluddin which was set up in Court by Nihaluddin after her death , and as far as we have been able to ascertain, its genuineness was not disproved Thus we have come to the conclusion that Mt. Sughra Bibi was not precluded by age or infirmity, whether mental or physical from making an intelligent execution of the sale-deed in favour of Imam Bandi Bibi

But we have also to consider whether as a matter of fact she did not understand the document. On this point we have been asked to consider first that the document was not sufficiently explicit, secondly that it was against her interest, thirdly that she did not receive the best possible advice, and fourthly that one clause in the document was not explained to her at the time of the execution The document is printed at p. 145 part. 3 of the printed record It is written in very simple language and purports to be a sale of certain property a list of which is given at the bottom, for Rs 65,000 made up of Rs 50,000 which was left in deposit with the vendee for payment of debts which might be found against the property, and Rs. 15,000 in cash. It was also a condition that if more money were found due than Rs. 50,000 the residue of the property of the vendor was to be hypothecated. The details of this property are given at the bottom of the deed. The objection that the deed is not sufficiently explicit is based on the fact that there is no list of the debts and it might be considered that the vendor was unaware of her own liabilities and that she might not have owed so much as Rs 50,000. This objection is really answered by the fact that the vendee actually paid off debts including those due to herself or her son-in-law amounting to Rs 63,000 and there is no reason whatever for supposing that Mt Sughra Bibi was not well aware of the fact that the liabilities on her property could not be satisfied for a less sum than Rs 50,000. As to the second point it is not easy to say what even a very intelligent person may consider to be for his or her benefit. The facts are that Mt. Sughra Bibi's property was mortgaged up to hilt and she was in possession of only a few sir fields. Moreover she was constantly in need of money for litigation By this document she was able to clear off all her debts and get fifteen thousand rupees in cash We cannot form an exact estimate as to the value of the property, but if, as appears to be the case, the purchaser spent over Rs 63,000 in paying off the mortgages on the property, we do not find that Rs. 15,000 was an inadequate sum from the point of view of the vendor.

There have been many cases dealing with illiterate pardanashin women who have denuded themselves of a large proportion of their property without professional or independent advice, and such women have in many cases been permitted to get those transactions set aside, but in the present case we find in the first place that Mt Sughra Bibi was a woman of business capacity, in the second that she was receiving a substantial sum in cash in consideration of the sale of her property and thirdly that she had no near heir whese interest could have weighed with her so that she had only herself to consider and lastly she had surrounding her only surviving stepdaughter Kubra Bibi and two of her heirs Nihaluddin and Sadiq Ali, who appear to have been the persons whom she trusted in most of her dealings The absence of the plaintiff and her husband who were in another district is not a fact which suggests to us that Mt. Sughra Bibi did not receive proper advice It does not appear that she had any interest in the present plaintiff and although the plaintiff's husband had witnessed two deeds on her behalf on previous occasions one of these at least was a deed executed in favour of the Raja in whose service the plaintiff's husband then was. Moreover the question of advice is not one of vital importance. As stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Faridunnisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad (2):

> "Advice if given might have been bad advice or the settlor might have insisted on disregarding it. The real point is that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act of the person who makes it."

And there is a further danger that if this necessity for independent advice is carried too far the legal protection given to the pardanashin lady may be actually transmuted into a legal disability: see Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (3). The last point is whether the whole deed was understood by Mt Sughra Bibi. We find that the deed was executed as well as registered in the presence of the Sub-Registrar and there were numerous witnesses, among them two persons at least Nihaluddin and Sadiq Ali who were themselves interested in the inheritance of Mt. Sughra Bibi's estate. There is no question that the whole document was read out to the executant and received her assent. But the witnesses, examined as as they were thirteen years after the execution of the document, were unable to state what exactly the terms of the deed were, and so they were unable to say in detail which clauses were explained to the lady. This has given an opportuuity to the plaintiff's learned advocate to draw our attention to the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Annoda Mohun Chowdhuri v. Bhuban Mohini Debi (4). In that case a document was read fluently to a pardanashin lady, who merely nodded her head, and it was held that this did not go far to show that she knew what liability she was undertaking. But in that case there was definite evidence that the ladies were not asked whether they had understood what was said about the previous debt Here we do not know that Mt. Sughra Bibi did not have her attention drawn to the clause providing that if the debts due on the mortgages exceeded fifty thousand rupees the vendee should be able to recover the balance by means of a charge on the residue of Mt. Sughra Bibi's estate. All that can be said is that there is no definite evidence that this clause, which has never been acted upon was explained to her. The whole deed is couched in perfectly simple language and we see no reason to suppose that the Sub-Registrar, who is now dead and therefore could not be called as a witness, took no pains to ascertain that the lady understood this clause as well as the rest of the document R 249 of the Registration Manual, which contains rules made by the Inspector-General of Registration under S. 69, Registration Act, provides that :

"In the case of documents executed by pardanashin ladies, registering officers should be careful to obtain an admission of execution from the executant's own lips. The mere statement of the relatives or other persons accompanying her is not sufficient. The lady should be seen and identified by some person acquainted with her appearance and the name and relationship of such person to the executant should be noted in the endorsements. The terms of the document should be explained to the executant, and if, admitting execution, she objects to any of the terms such objection should be noted. The instructions apply to the case of all documents executed by pardanashin ladies, whether registered at the Registration Office or on visit or by commission at the executant's residence."

The Sub-Registrar who had registered the sale-deed in question (Ex A-55) had expressly noted in his endorsement that :

Mt Sughra Bibi had heard and understood that document word by word and admitted it in a loud voice."

The registration is a solemn act to be performed in the presence of a competent official appointed to act as Registrar (or Sub-Registrar) whose duty it is to attend to parties during the registration and see that the proper persons are present and are competent to act and are identified to his satisfaction ; and all things done before him in his official capacity and verified by his signature will be presumed to be done duly and in order : See Gangamoyi Debi v Troloikhya Nath Chowdhry (5)

We are of opinion therefore that the attempt made by the plaintiff-appellant to challenge the execution of the sale-deed of the 31st March 1924, fails and that deed was executed by Mt. Sughra Bibi with full knowledge of what she was doing. On this point we agree with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge.

Three other deeds were challenged also on the question of execution, namely a mortgage in favour of defendant 1 dated 20th February 1914 printed at p 139, a deed of further charge dated 23rd July 1912 printed at p. 134 and a sale-deed executed on the same day which is marked as Ex. B-1 but is not printed We have examined all these documents and the evidence as to their execution We cannot find that the execution of any of them is defective It is true that in the case of the sale deed Ex. B-1 the object of the sale was stated to be to obtain money for the journey to Karbala and this journey was never carried out. But parties may raise money for a certain object, and then find that it is necessary to divert the money to some other object, and this is in itself no sufficient reason for holding that the document was made without the full understanding and will of Mt. Sughra Bibi. As to the other documents there is nothing in the circumstances of their execution which raises any doubt in our mind as to the intention of the vendor

We now turn to the interpretation of the deed of compromise Ex 1 printed at p. 44 of the paper book executed between Afzal Husain and Mt Sughra Bibi in 1870 If this deed conferred an absolute title on Mt. Sughra Bibi to dispose of the property which she obtained under that deed, the plaintiffs's case must fail If on the other hand Mt. Sughra Bibi obtained a limited estate without the power of transferring the property, the plaintiff, subject to the law of limitation can sue for possession of the property either as the heir of Mt. Sughra Bibi or as she styled herself as the remainder man under the deed of compromise As we have stated above this compromise was filed in the settlement Court on 19th September 1870, in order to settle the claims which had been made by Mt. Sughra Bibi to a share in a certain estate The object of the compromise was to settle the question once for all by making Mt Sughra Bibi the wife of Afzal Hussain and dividing the Shadipur property then and there between the two wives and giving the said wives the rest of the property half-and-half after the death of Afzal Husain and his father. It is only by the study of the document as a whole that we can arrive at an opinion as to the nature of the title conferred on the two wives. After a recital of the names of the parties to the compromise the document proceeds as follows:

"Whereas the above mentioned case between the parties, in which a share is claimed has been amicably settled in this manner that the marriage of the plaintiff by nikah shall be performed with the defendant in the following month, therefore in view of a marriage settlement no dispute as to shares may remain, and inasmuch as the defendant has a former wife, daughter of the late Raja Said Abbas Ali, it has been settled that both wives in accordance with this agreement shall in their capacity of wives be declared from now permanent owners (malik mustaqil) of the whole mahal Shadipur half and half, and the names of Mt. Fatima Begam first wife and Mt. Sughra Bibi, plaintiff shall be entered in the Government papers as owner half and half (bil munasfa milkiatan). The said wives shall have no power of transfer over this property to any stranger: but generation after generation line after line the ownership thereof shall devolve upon the legal heirs of the said two wives. and the management and collections of the entire estate of Shadipur shall be in the hands of their husband Said Afzal Husain, in his capacity of husband. If on the part of the husband there is any neglect or estrangement towards either of the wives, then in that case the wife's only remedy will be to have the management of the share which is owned by her performed by the Government through the Court of Wards; but during the lifetime of Afzal Husain neither of the wives shall have the power on her own authority to have the management of the share which is owned by her performed by any member of her fasher's family and if in contravention of this agreement the defendant refuses to marry the plaintiff by way of nikah, that the plaintiff shall in accordance with the terms of this document remain owner of a moiety, and if the plaintiff acts contrary to the stipulation of nikah she shall cease to have any rights whatever. If God forbid contrary to custom the divorce of either of the wives takes place, then even in that case ownership as before shall remain vested in the wives subject to the conditions mentioned above provided that the divorced wife should regard herself as an undivorced wife, and continue to live in the house like a woman without a husband."

These clauses are very important in themselves to indicate the main intention to Afzal Husain at the time, and that was that he was always to have the management of the property as long as he lived, and if for any reason he forfeited his right the management was to go to the Court of Wards and not to any of the relations of the wives on their father's side. After detailing the Shadipur property the compromise proceeds:

"And besides these whatever property there is at present such as Chitoi and Nausanda and Munsha etc., in the pargana of Tanda and Hatimpur and Lodhana and Nathupur in the pargana of Hariharpur etc., or shall be acquired in future shall remain in the possession of myself the defendant during the lifetime of Mir Tegh Ali and myself the defendant and after me this property also shall devolve upon the two wives or their descendants in equal shares."

The position which has been accepted by the Court below in the first case (Appeals Nos 159 of 1927 and 2 of 1928) is that the two ladies were placed in absolute possession of the property and the clause depriving them of rights of transfer to a stranger was therefore void. A further plea has been raised in argument before us, namely that whatever be the nature of the estate conveyed in the first portion of the document the two ladies must be deemed to have been given an absolute estate in the property specified in the latter portion. As to this latter plea we would be slow to accept the suggestion that in the same document two estates of a different nature passed to the same person in respect of different property unless there was a specific statement to that effect. Here there is nothing to show that the estate of the ladies and their children is considered differently in the second portion of the document from the manner in which it has been considered in the first. All that has been done is to establish a life interest before the estate comes into the possession of the ladies. Shia law admits of the existence of a number of limited estates one after another and consequently the interposition of the life-estate of Afzal Husain and his father before the estate came to the ladies, raises no legal difficulty and does not involve the necessity of holding that, on the expiry of that life-estate, the estate vested in the ladies was an absolute estate. We hold, therefore, that the position of the ladies in regard to transfer is the same throughout the document in respect of both portions of the property.

The word "malik" has been construed many times and it has always been held that the word means owner in the full sense of the word. But it is not a term of art and its meaning can always be qualified by the addition of other words which contradict the idea of absolute ownership. As observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mt.

Sasiman Chawdhurian v. Shive Narain Chowdhury (6):

"The term "malik" when used in a will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conveyed."

In the document before us the two wives have been made owners (malik) " in their capacity as wives " whatever these words may mean, and they have been definitely prohibited from making any transfer to a stranger, that is to say, they have not been given full rights of alienation They have also been definitely distinguished from their legal heirs, that is, their heirs under Mahomedan law, for it is to these latter and not to the ladies themselves that the clause vesting the estate " generation after generation and line after line like ancestral property " refers. Quite apart from any interpretation that can be placed upon the words " in their capacity as wives " or the subsequent restrictions as to the management of the property, we are of opinion that the rights given to these ladies are not the rights of absolute owners but limited rights, and the limitation deals with that important and inseparable feature of full ownership the right of alienation It has been argued in support of the judgment in appeal that the word "mustaqil" (permanent) should be regarded as strengthening the word " malik " but in our opinion this word has only a temporal significance, and the conception of permanence in time is quite separate from the conception of absolute ownership. Secondly we have been asked to consider the words " generation after generation and line after line " These words no doubt have an important bearing on the title of those persons to whom they refer. There are numerous authorities on the meaning of these words, and it is sufficient for us to refer to the views expressed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Thakur Harihar Bakhsh v Thakur Uman Prasad (7) but in our opinion the words in this document do not refer to the ladies but to their heirs and it appears to us that the intention of the document is to give a limited ownership without power of alienation to a stranger to the ladies and an absolute right to their heirs under Mahomedan law. We have to consider next whether this intention on the part of the framers of the compromise is one to which effect can be given in law. In our opinion the estate contemplated is one permissible under the Shia law, even if it were held that the permanent estate is vested in persons unborn But it is not the case that all the heirs under Mahomedan law were unborn in 1870; on the contrary Mt. Fatima Begam, who obtained one half of the estate, had three children living and although Mt Sughra Bibi being at the time unmarried had no children living she had heirs under Mahomedan law both in the person of her husband and the mother of the present plaintiff It may very well be that Afzal Husain at that time contemplated the possibility of issue of Mt Sughra Bibi herself and we are not prepared to hold that he cannot have intended to vest the absolute estate in the heirs-at-law of his two wives merely because, had his second wife died immediately, her portion of the estate would have vested partially in a person in whom he had no immediate interest Both the commentators Ameer Ali and Tyabji agree that under Shia law a series of limited interests in succession can be created and that neither creating a perpetuity nor giving the remainder to unborn persons seem to them to be objections invalidating settlements:

"A grant may be made to A for life and then to B absolutely or a grant may be made to A for life and then to A's children absolutely."

There is some difference of opinion as to whether only children living at the time of the grant will take the remainder absolutely or any children born to A after the grant will take also. The approved opinion seems to be that " all children will take whether living at the time of the grant or born afterwards "— Ameer Ali 4th Edn Vol 1 p 179; Tyabji's Principles of Mahomedan law, 2nd Ed para 449 We are, therefore, unable to find either that this was an absolute estate in which a restraint on alienation is invalid, such as the case reported in Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Nilkanth (8), which has been followed by later decisions of Oudh Courts, or that an estate has been created which is contrary to law We consider that it is improper to bring into this case any consideration of the terms of S 10, T P. Act, first because that section does not refer to cases under Mahomedan law, and secondly because it refers to transfers, and this being a deed of family settlement is not a transfer, but is a recognition of conflicting claims. A family settlement

"is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is," : see Khunni Dal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (9)

It would, therefore, serve no good purpose for us to enter into a discussion as to whether the restriction imposed upon the ladies is an absolute or partial restraint on alienation We are aware that Courts have from time to time held that even where S 10, T. P Act, does not apply in set terms the general principles underlying the Act may be applied We do not consider that where an Act itself is inapplicable the principles underlying that Act, except in so far as they are general principles of law, can be applied to a particular case We observe that the Judicial Commissioners in the case of Nageshar Sahai v Mata Prasad (10), after expressing the view that the principles of S 10 may be applied to a transfer when the terms of the section were not strictly applicable, went on to hold that they in no way affected a restraint on alienation embodied in a compromise by way of family settlement and their judgment was upheld by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in their decision which is reported in Mata Prasad v Nageshar Sahai (11). The general principles of law do not prevent limitations of interest even upon those who are held to have an absolute estate, as in the case decided by the House of Lords in 1905 Comiskey v Bowring Hanbury (12) Moreover the document which we are construing is admitted by both sides to be a family settlement and every attempt must be made to give effect to the wishes of the parties to such an agreement. We do not go so far as to say that a family settlement can create an estate which is contrary to law but we can follow at least a decision of a Bench of this Court in Ahmad Azim v Safi Jan (13), in saying that in the case of family settlements conditions may be inserted therein :

"which would not be valid in the case of ordinary deeds under the ordinary law, but such conditions in the deed would be valid and enforceable when forming a part of such family settlements."

We do not think it necessary to discuss at length the nature of the restriction placed upon the ladies or to adopt any unusual interpretation of the word "ghair" which we have translated stranger Unless there is something in the context which would force us to place a strained meaning upon a word we would always hold it to be intended in the sense generally understood by the persons who had executed the deed The word "ghair" is constantly used in connexion with pre-emption cases which are a feature of Oudh Law as meaning first a stranger to the family and then a stranger to the village community. An attempt has been made to suggest that there is some reference to the law of pre-emption here and this view has found favour with the lower Court. We do not consider that there was any intention on the part of Afzal Husain and Mt Sughra Bibi to insert a clause in this agreement directing the ladies not to transgress the law of pre-emption, that is to say not to sell the property to a stranger without giving notice to the near relations and cosharers It is improper to read such words into a document without any necessity We believe that the clause simply means that the ladies are forbidden to transfer to a stranger and if the transactions entered into by Mt Sughra Bibi were entered into with strangers they were in contravention of this compromise and can be challenged by her heirs in whom the ultimate estate was vested by the compromise itself It is not suggested that Imambandi in whose favour the sale deed was executed or the defendants 1 and 2, who are in possession of the bulk of the property, are members of the family of Afzal Husain and Sughra Bibi. The plaintiff is admitted to be the heir to the extent of two-thirds in the estate of Mt Sughra Bibi under Mahomedan Law, and the absolute estate in the property was therefore vested in her along with others according to the terms of the compromise, and she can lawfully sue for possession of the property of Mt. Sughra Bibi which has been transferred in contravention of the deed.

The cross appeal by defendants 1 to 8 raises in particular the question of limitation which has no force in view of our finding that Sughra Bibi had only a limited estate. The second plea deals with those properties which were not transferred by Sughra Bibi herself but by Mohammad Hasan her stepson The defendants contend that there was a partition between Mt Sughra Bibi and the children of Mt. Fatima Begam in the person of Mohammad Hasan in the year 1887, by which several villages fell to the share of Mt. Sughra Bibi alone and certain others to Mohammad Hasan alone The properties with which this suit is concerned are those in the village of Qutubpur, Daudpur and Makundpur all of which were sold by Mohammad Hasan or his heirs, but if there was no partition Mohammad Hasan could only have sold his half share in these properties, and the plaintiff would be able to recover Mt. Sughra Bibi's portion in these villages. It is proved that after the year 1886 Mt. Sughra Bibi and Mohammad Hasan each entered into separate transactions as though they had control of specific shares in certain villages, but the evidence that there was a formal partition is quite unsatisfactory We have been referred to various khewat entries relating particularly to the villages here in dispute, Qutubpur, Daudpur and Makundpur but all we can find is that at some time before 1886 Mohammad Hasan's share was recorded in the name of Mt. Sughra Bibi in addition to her own and that after 1887 that share was recorded again in the name of Mohammad Hasan We are not satisfied that the name of Mt. Sughra Bibi was entirely removed in favour of that of Mohammad Hasan. Moreover the theory rests upon an exchange of villages and the village of Daryapur is said to have been one of those given over entirely to Mohammad Hasan but no entry in the khewat supports this theory. Similarly there appears to be no such entry in favour of Mt. Sughra Bibi in the case of the village Nausanda which is said to have fallen to her lot. The actual evidence as to the partition was not admitted in the lower Court but we have admitted it here. It only shows that an application was made some time in the year 1886 alleging that a partition had been entered into in certain terms between the parties, but we do not find that any effect was given to that application. On the other hand there is a very strong piece of evidence that no partition was completed or even intended between the parties This is the statement of Munshi Mohammad Panah, who was vakil of Mt Sughra Bibi in a case in the Settlement Officer's Court in 1893 He refers to the agreement between the parties dated the 11th December 1886, and he says that by that compromise no partition of land was made, but only a specification of shares was made for the reason that if later on any charge were created by Mohammad Hasan it might affect his share only. It is difficult in view of this statement to find that there had been really a partition either in 1886 or 1887 by which an absolute division was made of the estate between Mt. Sughra Bibi and Mohammad Hasan. Another point has been made against this alleged partition, and that is that the shares which are supposed to have been allotted to Mt. Sughra Bibi and Mohammad Hasan respectively are of grossly unequal value. Lastly as in our view Mt. Sughra Bibi had only a limited estate we are not of opinion that a partition made by her with Mohammad Hasan would have been binding on her heirs.

The last point raised in this cross-appeal is that the appellants should be regarded as purchasers in good faith from an ostensible owner, and that they should be protected by S. 41, T. P Act. We do not consider that this view can be taken in the case of the principal appellants Mohammad Raza and his wife. They were intimately connected with the affairs of Mt. Sughra Bibi during the last 14 years of her life, and they prepared the sale-deed with the assistance of Nihal-ud-din and Sadiq Ali who knew everything that ought to be known about Mt. Sughra Bibi's estate. They must have known therefore that in the year 1887 in proceedings between Mt. Sughra Bibi and Mohammad Hasan both Mohammad Hasan and Mt. Sughra Bibi's general attorney stated that Mt. Sughra Bibi had no power of alienation. The fact that Mohammad Raza defendant-appellant 1 attempted to secure himself by obtaining from Mt. Kubra Bibi, sister of Mohammad Hasan, a deed relinquishing her claim of pre-emption before executing the sale-deed of 31st March 1914, indicates that he felt that there was a good reason why he should secure his title in every possible way, and in our opinion he was well aware that in taking this sale-deed from Mt. Sughra Bibi he was running a risk. He is therefore not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of S. 41, T. P Act, and to recover the money which he has undoubtedly spent in clearing off the liabilities of Mt Sughra Bibi. Had we held otherwise we would have been faced by a difficulty. Mohammad Raza paid off the mortgage due to one Tirloki Nath amounting to a sum of nearly Rs. 30,000 as being a donee by an oral gift from his mother-in-law in whose name the sale-deed was executed He now comes forward and pleads that he himself was the purchaser of the property and that his mother-in-law is entered benami He failed to establish this plea in the Court below and we are satisfied that the learned Judge had very good reasons for disbelieving a plea which is entirely different to that on which he had established his title already We are of opinion that Mohammad Raza cannot succeed on a plea based on equity. Moreover he himself admitted in his evidence at p. 87 of the paper book that he had made no enquiry about Sughra Bibi's title, and the other defendants including Kamlapat Ram produced no evidence to show that they had made any such enquiry All who wish to take advantage of S. 41, T. P. Act, must be able to show that they have made an enquiry of this nature.

We consider that the appeal 159 of 1927 filed on behalf of defendants fails, and it is dismissed with costs The appeal of the plaintiff (2 of 1928) succeeds as against respondents 1 9 and the plaintiff will obtain possession of a two-thirds share in all the properties claimed by her, including the properties Nos. 6 and 8 in List A and 5, 7 and 9 in List A which have been accorded a different treatment by the Court below. On our finding that Sughra Bibi had no right to make any of these transfers, the reasons which led to the order of the lower Court have no longer any weight The plaintiff can obtain possession of properties 6 and 8 in List A without bringing a further suit for redemption, and of properties 5, 7 and 9 in List A without making any payment to the defendants named in the judgment of the lower Court.

As regards the plaintiff's appeal in respect of the property in possession of Kamlapat Ram respondent 10, the lower Court hold that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in the case between Mt. Sughra Bibi and Kamlapat Ram operated as res judicata, but it is admitted before us that if Mt Sughra Bibi had not an absolute estate but only a life estate without power of transfer that judgment could not operate as res judicata As we have shown above the respondent Kamlapat Ram cannot claim the benefit of S. 41, T. P Act, and this property also can be recovered in this suit by the plaintiff without payment.

The plaintiff will receive her costs in appeal No 2 of 1928 as against the defendants-respondents to the extent of the value of their interest in each case.

There remains only the appeal of the defendants in the suit relating to Daryapur village decided in favour of the plaintiff by the Additional Subordinate Judge. This is appeal No 108 of 1927 As we have now found that Mt Sughra Bibi was not an absolute owner and that there was no partition between her and Mohammad Hasan it follows that Mohammad Hasan could not transfer the share of Mt Sughra Bibi in the village of Daryapur and the plaintiff is entitled to recover a two-thirds share in that property as ordered by the Additional Subordinate Judge In this case the appellants cannot take advantage of S 41, T. P Act, because Mohammad Hasan was not even the ostensible owner of eight annas share in Daryapur, which always remained recorded in the revenue papers as being half in the possession of Mt. Sughra Bibi and half in the possession of Mohammad Hasan and his sisters. In our opinion the suit which gives rise to appeal No. 108 of 1927 was rightly decided by the lower Court and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

First Appeal No 152 of 1927, Decided on 1st October 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, D/- 24th August 1927.

(a) Practice — New plea — Plaintiff's pleader making statement at hearing—Case proceeding on that basis—Plaintiffs cannot in appeal raise plea inconsistent with it.

Where the plaintiffs' pleader made a statement just at the threshold of the trial before the defendants started cross-examination of the first witness for the plaintiffs and the whole trial thereafter proceeded on the footing of that statement, the statement must be considered to be explanatory of and supplementary to the pleadings of the plaintiffs and plaintiffs could not in appeal raise any plea inconsistent with it. [P 206 C 2 ; P C 207 1]

(b) Words —" Life estate " as such does not imply power to transfer for necessity.

There is no authority in support of the broad proposition that a life-estate holder as such has the power of making transfers for necessity. [P 207 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 4—Custom.

Ordinarily a party should not be allowed to prove a custom different from that set up by him. [P 208 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 4—Custom set up by party must be taken as a whole and not piecemeal—Pleadings.

Where plaintiffs set up a particular custom and the defendants in terms deny the custom set up by the plaintiffs and go on to plead a different custom, it is not permissible in such a case to split up the custom but the case as regards the custom set up either by the plaintiffs or by the defendants must be taken as a whole and not piecemeal . 6 *Beng. (e) Evidence Act, S. 101—Negative necessary for proving title — Claimant must prove.

The general rule of evidence is that if in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative, the party who avers a title cannot be absolved from proving it 9 W. R. 190, (F. B), Foll. [P 208 C 2]

(f) Custom — Widow succeeding as absolute owner and after her death, undisposed residue to go to husband's heirs— Custom is not unreasonable.

A custom under which the widow succeeds as an absolute owner but on her death any portion of the estate left undisposed of goes not to her heirs but to those of her husband is not unreasonable because the custom only amounts to this that her husband's heirs are regarded as her heirs to the property. [P 208 C 2]

(g) Deed—Construction — Ambiguities — Contemporaneous usages may be looked to.

One of the most settled rules of law for the construction of ambiguities in ancient instruments is that you may resort to contemporaneous usage to ascertain the meaning of the deed . Attorney General v. Drummond, (1842) 1 Dr. and War. 353, Rel. on. [P 210 C 1]

(h) Words—Ba-ikhtiar-malika.

(i) Wajib-ul-arz—Widow given power to adopt—She cannot he held to have no power to transfer—Custom

No inference about the widow's having no power of transfer can be drawn from the fact of her having been given the power of adoption in a Wajib-ul-arz. [P 210 C 1]

(j) Custom — Mahomedan of Ujarion — Widow holds husband's property with absolute power of transfer.

Judgment —This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj at Lucknow, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the deed of gift dated 3rd June 1926 executed by Mt Hurun-nisa defendant 1 in favour of her brother, Khairat Nabi defendant 2 :

" shall be void and unlawful after the death of defendant 1 and shall have no effect on the reversionary rights of the plaintiff. "

The admitted facts are that Dildar Ali, husband of defendant 1 was the owner of the property in suit. He died about 11 or 12 years ago and on his death defendant 1 came in possession of the entire property according to the family custom. Both parties are agreed that succession in the family of Dildar Ali is governed by custom and not by the Mohamedan law. The point of differences between them is the nature of the custom. According to the plaintiffs the widow gets only a life estate and the property on her death passes to the husband's reversioners. The defendants, on the other hand, contend that the widow succeeds as full owner. So the only point which arose for decision in the case was embodied in a single issue which was framed in the following terms.

Whether there is a prevailing custom in the family of the plaintiffs and the defendants under which the widow gets only a life estate on the death of her husband ?

The learned Subordinate Judge after a careful examination of the entire evidence, oral and documentary, produced by the parties has decided the issue against the plaintiffs-appellants Before we enter into a discussion on the merits of the finding it would be convenient to dispose of a few preliminary matters which have been raised in the course of arguments. The learned counsel for the parties have addressed elaborate arguments on the pleadings as regards the family custom The necessity for these arguments arose because the learned counsel for the plaintiffs admitted that he was unable to substantiate the custom in terms of the statetment made by the plaintiffs' pleader in the course of the trial of the suit. He therefore wanted to confine himself to a custom more limited in scope which he claims to have been established on the evidence adduced in the case He also claims that the custom as put forward before us is not inconsistent with the pleading in the trial Court and in any case he has tried to justify the variation sought to be introduced by him by contending that the defendants have also shifted their position The line of argument adopted before us as indicated above made it necessary for us to record the statement of the learned counsel for the parties regarding their respective cases about the custom in question.

Before we refer to those statements it seems necessary to examine the pleadings in some detail The plaintiffs in para 6 of their plaint said :

"that according to the custom obtaining in the family of the parties the widow of a childless person has power to remain in possession and occupation of her husband's property for life only and that after the demise of the widow the nephews and brothers of her husband become the absolute owners of the property irrespective of exclusion from inheritance and nobody is deprived from inheriting on account of being excluded from inheritance (mahjubul-irs). "

The reply given to this by the defendants in the corresponding paragraph of their written statement was :

" Only this much is admitted that according to the family custom in the village, the Mohamedan law is not followed in respect of the exclusion from inheritance. The custom mentioned in this paragraph is not admitted , and the rest of the contents is wrong. "

Paragraphs 10, 11 and 12 of the additional pleas are as follows .

" 10. The custom set up by the plaintiffs is not admitted. It is quite wrong that the widow gets possession of the husband's assets for life only.

"11. According to the family custom of the parties as well as of the village the childless widow becomes the absolute owner of the entire assets of her (deceased) husband and enters into proprietary possession and occupation thereof. "

12. The parties to the suit and the inhabitants of village Ujariou are the descendants of a common ancestor and all the widows who have up to this time got possession of their husbands' assets since the shahe time have been all along in proprietary enjoyment thereof and have been mortgaging and selling their husband's properties. No objection has ever been taken on account of the custom mentioned in para. 11. On the other hand the ancestors of the plaintiffs themselves having admitted the proprietary rights of the widows have got many sale deeds executed in their favour. "

On 19th April 1927 when the issue was framed the counsel for the plaintiffs stated that "the family custom is that the widow gets only life interest in the husband's entire estate. The custom is ancient and immemorial."

This was followed by a statement of the defendants' pleader to the effect that "the only defence of both the defendants is that the family custom is that the widow succeeds as full owner to the entire estate of the husband."

These pleadings show beyond any doubt that the custom set up by the plaintiffs was that the widow succeeds to a life estate on her husband's death and that the defendants traversed this allegation and pleaded that the widow succeeds as full owner. It is worthy of note that beyond the implication contained in the use of the words "life interest" the plaintiffs did not say anything specific about the powers of transfer possessed by the widows Evidently the defendants or the Court felt some misapprehension about the matter and we find that just after the examination in chief of the first witness examined by the plaintiffs had been completed the Court recorded a statement of the pleader for the plaintiffs The pleader stated :

"that the widow cannot make valid transfer whether there be or not any necessity (including what is called legal necessity under the Hindu law)."

The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment stated the case of the parties as placed before him in arguments in the following terms:

"It is common ground between the parties that in the matter of succession they are governed not by the rules of Mahomedan law, but by custom. According to the plaintiffs the widow takes only a life-estate without any right to transfer the property whether with or without what is called legal necessity; while the defendant's case is (1) that the widow becomes the absolute owner and (2) that even if she succeeds to a life-estate, she has full power to transfer the property. In arguments the first position has not been pressed on behalf of the defendants. They take their stand on the alternative case, viz., that though the widow gets a life estate she has full power of transfer and on her death what is left undisposed of goes to the husband's collaterals."

The position taken up by the learned counsel for the parties in the arguments addressed to us will be clear from the statements made by them which we reproduce below

Mr Haider Husain on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants stated:

"that the custom prevailing in the family of Muhammad Hayat to which belonged Dildar Ali with whose estate we are concerned in this case is as follows:

"The widow of a childless person has power to remain in possession and occupation of her husband's property for life only and that after the death of the widow the collaterals of the husband succeed to the property. With regard to the power of transfer possessed by the widow, the custom is that the widow is entitled to make a transfer for purposes justifiable by legal necessity, for instance payment of husband's debts, meeting expenses of marriage of the daughter of the last male holder, if any, her own maintenance and objects of a similar nature. She has under no circumstances power to make a gift or a will or other transfers without necessity."

Mr Wasim, counsel for the defendants respondents stated that:

"according to the family custom the widow succeeds as an absolute owner with full power of enjoyment and transfer. But if she dies without making any transfer or bequest the collaterals will succeed to the property left by the widow instead of the heirs of the widow herself."

It will be apparent from the facts as stated above that the case set up by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs is not only materially different from the case as it was set up in the Court below but is directly contrary to the statements made by the plaintiff's pleader before the commencement of the cross examination of their first witness. It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the only case set up by them in the pleadings was that the widow succeeded to a life interest and "widow succeeds as full owner to the entire estate of the husband." that this should be taken to imply that she can make a transfer in cases of legal necessity. As regards the statement made by the plaintiff's pleader on the date when the evidence began it is said that it cannot be regarded as a part of the pleadings and that in spite of it it is permissible for the plaintiffs to take up the position which they seek to adopt in appeal as at best it amounts to nothing more than their adopting a part of the defendant's case.

We find ourselves unable to accept any of the above arguments. As remarked by Lord Cairns in Browne v. Mc Clintock (1)

"the first object of pleading is to inform the persons against whom the suit is directed, what the charge is that is laid against them."

It is true that "pleading" has been defined in O. 6, R 1, Civil P. C to mean plaint or written statement and therefore the statement made by the plaintiff's pleader cannot be considered to be pleading in the strict sense of the term but O. 6, R 4, of the Code, requires that in cases in which particulars may be necessary they should be stated in the pleading and under O 6, R. 5, the Court can order further and better particulars of any matter to be stated in any pleading. In Milbank v. Milbank (2) at p 385, Vaughan Williams, L J., observed as follows :

"At different times in the history of proceedings at law and in equity particulars have been allowed for different reasons. Sometimes particulars have been allowed in order that there might not be a surprise at the trial. Sometimes they have been allowed as limitations of the claim, whether of the plaintiff or of the defendant, to limit the extent of the evidence to be given at the trial. But under the Judicature Act particulars are allowed for quite a different purpose ; they are really supplemental to the pleadings."

The statement was made by the pleader just at the threshold of the trial before the defendants started cross examination of the first witness for the plaintiffs The whole trial thereafter proceeded on the footing that the plaintiffs did not set up any case about the widow's having any power of transfer in cases of legal necessity. We are therefore of opinion that the statement of the pleader must be considered to be explanatory of and supplementary to the pleadings of the plaintiffs regarding the custom S. 58, Evidence Act, provides that no fact need be proved in any proceedings which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing or which before the hearing they agreed to admit by any writing under their hands or by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings. The object of the statements made by the pleader clearly was to waive controversy as regards the widows having any limited power of transfer in cases of necessity After the statement had been made it became unnecessary for the defendants to question the plaintiffs' witnesses in order to show that no necessity existed in the case of transfers by widows relied upon by them or to examine any witnesses in proof of it It would under the circumstances be most unfair to the defendants to allow the plaintiffs to start this surprise on them in appeal more particularly when they by their express statement lulled them into the belief that they did not mean to take up any such position The unfairness of allowing the plaintiffs to set up this new case has been forcibly brought home to us by the fact that during the review of the entire evidence by the counsel for the parties we have failed to find any evidence one way or the other in respect of legal necessity in any except two out of the 56 instances of transfers by widows which have been sought to be proved by the defendants The plaintiff's counsel seeks to build up his case by asking us to make presumptions of fact and the defendant's counsel in his turn seeks to answer the arguments by invoking the aid of counter presumptions It is obvious that on questions of fact of this nature it would be a most unsatisfactory method to make conjectures and surmises on matters which were fully capable of proof but on which no proof has been given by either party.

It is not correct for the learned counsel for the plaintiffs to say that the plea raised by them about the widow having a life-interest necessarily implies that she has the power to make transfers for legal necessity He has failed to refer us to any authority in support of the broad proposition that a life-estate holder as such has the power of making transfers for necessity. He simply relies upon the analogy of cases of Hindu widows. The present case relates to a Muhammadan family and if the plaintiffs intended to allege that widows in the family have under custom the same powers as those possessed by the Hindu widows it was their duty to set up such a case in explicit terms.

The plaintiffs also cannot derive any help from the alleged change made by the defendants in their case. In the first place it is a truism that two wrongs cannot make a right. Secondly we do not agree with this contention that the defendants have been guilty of shifting their position The plaintiffs have failed to point to any statement by or on behalf of the defendants admitting that the widows succeed to a life estate. They have all along consistently maintained that the widows succeed as absolute owners with power of transfer. When the learned Subordinate Judge says in his judgment that the defendant's case was (1) that the widow becomes the absolute owner and (2) that even if she succeeds to a life-estate she has full power of transfer but that on her death what is left undisposed of goes to the husband's collaterals we think that the second alternative as put by him is only a free paraphrase of the defendant's position as undertook by him. As a matter of fact for all practical purposes there is hardly any difference between a life estate with full powers of transfer and an absolute estate when in either case the undisposed of residue is to go to the husband's reversioners.

Further we are of opinion that the case being one based upon the existence of a custom the party setting it up must be required to adhere to the form of it as set up in the pleadings more rigidly than in a case based on different grounds. We do not mean to lay down that it is impossible to conceive of cases in which it might transpire on the evidence adduced by both parties that the custom which really exists is one more limited in its scope than the one set up and that the Court in such cases if no prejudice is made out cannot give a finding in favour of the limited custom as proved but all that we mean to say is that ordinarily a party should not be allowed to prove a custom different from that set up by him. We are therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs cannot be allowed to resile from the case set up by them in the trial Court and must adhere to the custom as set up in that Court

Next it has been argued that the onus lies on the defendants to prove that the widows possess the power of transfer The argument is that it is common ground between the parties that succession in the family is governed by custom The plaintiff's case is that the widow succeeds for life without power of transfer. It is alleged that the defendant's case, as it was also understood by the learned Subordinate Judge is that they admit the life estate but further plead that she has the full power of transfer So the plea must be taken to be one in confession and avoidance and therefore the defendants must prove the power of transfer. We have already held that the defendants never admitted that the widows succeed only to a life estate But apart from it we have no hesitation in holding that the case is not one of a plea in confession and avoidance but what is technically called an argumentative traverse. The plaintiffs set up a particular custom The defendants in terms deny the custom set up by the plaintiffs and go on to plead a different custom. It is not permissible in such a case to split up the custom as the plaintiffs would wish to do The case as regards the custom set up either by the plaintiffs or by the defendants must be taken as a whole and not piecemeal. In Raja Chandranath Roy v. Ramjai Muzumdar (3), at pp. 307 and 308) their Lordships of the Privy Council remaked as follows :

" Now, it is obvious that this issue, in substance, is this : Is the plaintiff's story, stated in his plaint, true, or is the defendant's story, stated in his answer, true ? It is, of course, a possible thing that neither of the stories may be true, and the question then arises, which of these two alternatives of the issue is the really material one ? Their Lordships think that the really material one is the first part of the issue, viz., is the plaintiff's story true ? It is not as if the defendant's story is true. It is not as if the defendant's defence was, as we should say in the Common Law, a plea in confession and avoidance, a plea which admitted that the plaintiff's story was true, and then avoided it. If that had been the case, and the defendant had failed to prove his case, of course the defendant must have failed, and the plaintiff ought to recover. But it is substantially what at Common Law we should call an argumentative traverse of the truth of the plaintiff's story, for it does not admit that one word of it is true, but sets up certain things perfectly inconsistent with it."

These remarks fully apply to the present case

It has been further contended that the general rule is that onus lies on the party setting up the affirmative. It is said that the defendants' affirmative case is that the widows have the power of transfer and the plaintiffs only deny it So the plaintiffs should not be called upon to prove the negative proposition This argument is fallacious In Poolin Beharee Sein v. R Watson & Co (4) Sir Barnes Peacock C. J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench remarked as follows :

" The general rule of evidence is that if, in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative, the party who avers a title must prove the title."

Therefore assuming that the case as set up by the plaintiffs involves proof of the negative of facts the plaintiffs cannot be absolved, from proving them.

It was also faintly argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the custom relied upon by the defendants, namely, that the widow succeeds as an absolute owner but that on her death any portion of the estate left undisposed of goes not to her heirs but to those of her husband is unreasonable. It is said that under no system of law one absolute estate can be followed by another absolute estate and so the custom being opposed to basic principles of law and being one creating an estate unknown to any system of law must be rejected as being unreasonable The fallacy of this argument lies in its overlooking the fact that the essence of a custom is that it is in derogation of the ordinary law. The custom only amounts to this that the widow succeeds as an absolute owner and that on her death the property held by her as such goes to her husband's heirs, in other words, her husband's heirs are regarded as her heirs to the property We do not consider that such a rule of succession is unreasonable. Some analogy for such a rule can be found in the rule of succession relating to stridhan property under the Hindu Law.

Having disposed of the preliminary points we now proceed to deal with the question of custom on its merits. The evidence in support of the custom consists of : (1) wajib-ul-arz ; (2) judicial decisions; (3) opinions of persons possessed of special means of knowledge and (4) instances. We will discuss each class of evidence in the order given above

1. Wajib-ul-arz.—The plaintiffs rely on two wajib-ul-arz, namely Ex. 3 B-56, the wajib-ul-arz of Ujarion and Ex 4, the wajib-ul-arz of Babu Sarai. The last-mentioned wajib-ul-arz may be disposed shortly. No reliance was placed upon it in the lower Court. In our opinion it is quite irrelevant. The plaintiffs have entirely failed to prove the connexion between the family of the parties and that of the zamindars of Babu Sarai. Reference has been made to the Gazetteer of the Lucknow District, p 267. It is stated there with reference to the first Mussalman invaders who conquered the village from the hands of a Bhar chieftain that after the victory,

"a few days later he was surprised and slain with all his comrades by the brother of the dead chief, while engaged in prayer during the Id festival."

The sole survivor was a woman Ujiali "who was then living with her infant son, Ghiasuddin at her father's house in Bado Sarai of Bara Banki."

There is no evidence to show that the zamindars of Bado Sarai who held the village at the time of the first regular settlement when the wajib-ul-arz was prepared were descended from the same stock as the father of Ujiali but even assuming that they are descendants of the same stock it is obvious that their family is quite different from the family of the zamindars of Ujarion. At best the relation between the two families can be only a very remote one by marriage This wajib-ul-arz must therefore be rejected

The relevant portion of the wajib-ul-arz of Ujarion is a follows :

"In this village the rule of division of inheritance is this. that on the death of a co-sharer his sons become the owners (malik) of heritage in equal shares : daughter shall not get share in presence of son. In case there is no son but there is daughter only then she shall become the owner (malik). In such a case brother and nephew shall not be the owners in presence of daughter i e., in presence of male issue, female issue shall not be the owner (malik) but if there be no male issue and there is a female issue, then the female issue shall get the share. If the deceased co-sharer has got two or several legally wedded wives and there are different numbers of issues from each wife then division of inheritance shall take place in this way that the one son from one wife shall get half share and two sons from the other wife shall get equal share in the other half. In case the deceased co-sharer has left no male issue, then on his death his wife shall come in possession with the power of a proprietor (ba-ikhtiar malikana qabiz hogi) and on her death her daughter shall come in possession of the heritage left by mother as well as that by her father. In case there be not even the female issue then on the death of the widow brother and nephew of the deceased cosharer shall become the owner (malik) subject to the rules of inheritance. The widow has got power to adopt any one she likes."

The plaintiff's contention is that whereas the son, the daughter and the collaterals have been described as malik the language used in the case of the widow is different, she is described as entitled only to possession with the powers of a proprietor (ba-ikhtiar malikana qabiz hogi). Emphasis has also been laid on the fact that on the death of the widow there is reversion in favour of the collaterals and that she has been given a power of adoption It has also been argued that the word "malik" as used in a wajib-ul-arz in Oudh should not be construed in the same sense as it would be when used in a deed or will and that in any case the words "ba-ikhtiar malikana" only imply that she is to remain in exclusive possession like a son but do not mean that she has absolute powers of transfer The learned counsel for the defendant-respondents on the other hand, contends that the words "ba-ikhtiar malikana" are more specific and expressive than the word "malik." In Sartaj Koer v. Mahadeo Bakhsh (5) a Bench of this Court has held that the word "malik" as used in wajib-ul-arz should receive the same interpretation as has been put upon it by their Lordships of the Privy Council in cases where the word had been used in deeds or wills. In the present case it is not necessary for us to commit ourselves to any definite opinion on this point. It is enough to say that while there is room for argument as regards the meaning of the word "malik" as used in the wajib-ul-arz the interpretation of the words "ba-ikhtiar malikana qabiz hogi" is beset with greater difficulties. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the interpretation of the words "qabiz ba-ikhtiar malikana" is by no means free from ambiguity The maxim, contemporanea expositio est

fortissima in lege, will apply to such a case. The rule contained in this maxim has been applied even to the interpretation of statutes: see Norton on Deeds, p 141 There is no reason why the rule should not be invoked in aid of the interpretation of the wajib-ul-arz Lord Sugden in the well-known passage in Attorney-General v. Drummond (6) at p. 368 said :

"One of the most settled rules of law for the construction of ambiguities in ancient instruments is, that you may resort to contemporaneous usage to ascertain the meaning of the deed ; tell me what you have done under such a deed, and I will tell you what that deed means."

Fortunately in this case there is a mass of evidence showing a long course of conduct of the declarants of the wajib-ul-arz and of other cosharers We think that evidence relating to the acts and conduct of these persons is admissible as affording a clue to the intention of the framers of the wajib-ul-arz The wajib-ul-arz was written at the dictation of six cosharers, namely Ahmad Ali, Salar Bakhsh, Najatulla, Rahim Bakhsh, Pir Bakhsh and Ghulam Husain We have no evidence regarding the first two but as regards the others there is considerable evidence showing that they accepted transfers from widows and attested deeds of transfer executed by them in favour of others (The judgment then narrated the several deeds of transfer and proceeded.) In our opinion the conduct of the various persons who dictated the wajib-ul-arz and of other members of the family in freely obtaining deeds of transfer in their favour and in recognizing the transfers made in favour of outsiders leaves no room for doubt that they understood the custom to invest the widows with full power of transfer. In view of this we construe the expression "ba-ikhtiar malika" as including the right of making transfer.

As regards the power of making adoption given to the widows it can in this case amount to nothing more than a power of appointment. It may be superfluous but it cannot be considered inconsistent with the absolute estate. Very often we find provisions in wajib-ul-arz which overlap each other. It would not be reasonable to expect wajib-ul-arz to be drawn up as artistically and carefully as one might expect in the case of a deed or statute. We cannot, therefore, draw any inference about the widow's having no power of transfer from the fact of her having been given the power of adoption. For these reasons we hold that on a proper construction of the wajib-ul-arz as a whole and in the light of the interpretation placed upon it by the declarants and the members of the family the widow possesses absolute powers of transfer (The judgment then discussed the judicial decisions, opinions of persons with special means of knowledge and instances and concludes as follows ) To sum up We find an unbroken record of instances of transfers by widows. These transfers are not only in the shape of mortgages and sales but also gifts and wills. Most of them are in favour of cosharers The documents relating to these transfers show that the widows have throughout been making these transfers as of right. Except in two cases the widows in no other case made any mention of any necessity for making the transfers though recitals of such necessity are very usual in case of transfers made by limited owners. The cosharers and reversioners have always acquiesced in these transfers It is most significant that there is not a single instance of any protest or challenge by any reversioner. In 1890 when in a litigation in Court the widow's was set up it was not only not disputed but the right was admitted The overwhelming evidence furnished by these instances is supported also by the evidence of a number of witnesses who have special means of knowledge and is also fully consistent with the terms of the wajib-ul-arz The instances no doubt are of varying degrees of importance but when we take into consideration the cumulative effect of the entire evidence and the fact that the various lines of evidence all converge to the same point we feel overborne in favour of the view that the widows must be held to possess absolute powers of transfer. We have, therefore, no hesitation in agreeing with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 165 of 1927, Decided on 8th November 1928, against order of Addl. Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 28th September 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3—Pleader confessing judgment on party's behalf — Court passing consent decree thereon must be presumed to have enquired as to his authority to confess—Legal Practitioner.

Where a consent decree is passed by a Court on confession of judgment by a party's pleader it must be assumed that the Court must have satisfied itself before the passing of the consent decree that the pleader confessing judgment had authority on behalf of the party to act in the manner in which he did. The person challenging the authority must prove to the contrary by positive evidence. [P 212 C 2]

Judgment —This is an appeal from a judgment and decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad dated 28th September 1927 dismissing a declaratory suit. The facts of the case are that the respondent Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi obtained a decree for sale from the High Court of Bombay in 1913 against one Dr. Shiam Sabal Sita Ram Misir. The doctor was a resident of the Fyzabad District and was practising in Bombay. He owned a village named Bansgaon in the District of Fyzabad and a share in village Ahmadabad, District Barabanki On 25th October 1911 he executed a mortgage for Rs. 3,000 in favour of the above named Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi On 18th February 1912 he executed another mortgage for Rs. 7,000 in respect of the share in village Ahmadabad in favour of the same person. On 21st August 1913 the mortgagee instituted a suit on the original side of the Bombay High Court for recovery of the money due to him under the aforesaid two deeds of mortgage and a consent decree was passed by the said High Court in his favour on 16th September 1913

Dr. Shiam Sabal died in June 1914 leaving behind his widow Mt. Paran Kuer, the appellant before us, who was the plaintiff in the Court below. The preliminary decree for sale was made absolute on 18th February 1915. The plaintiff mortgagee after having obtained the final decree got his decree transferred to Fyzabad and put it in execution. In the sale held in execution of the decree defendant-respondent 2, Babu Sidh Gopal Singh, purchased the village Bansgaon and has also taken possession of it as auction-purchaser.

The suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was brought by Mt. Paran Kuer, the appellant, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad on the main allegation that she is not bound by the decree for sale passed by the Bombay High Court because it was obtained fraudulently by the defendant-respondent Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi, inasmuch as no notice was served upon her when the decree was made absolute by the Bombay High Court on 18th February 1915 It was alleged that a false affidavit was filed by the clerk of the attorney of the defendant-respondent who was plaintiff decree-holder in the suit brought in the Bombay High Court to the effect that notice had been served upon the plaintiff appellant whereas no such notice has actually been served on her. The validity of the preliminary decree passed against Dr. Shiam Sabal by the High Court on 16th September 1913 was also challenged by the plaintiff-appellant on the ground that the attorney who was engaged by Dr. Shiam Sabal has no authority to confess judgment and it was fraudulent on his part to have instructed the advocate, engaged by the said attorney to represent Dr. Shiam Sabal before the Bombay High Court. to confess the claim In short the validity of both the preliminary decree and the final decree is challenged on the ground of fraud..

It is, therefore, contended by the plaintiff-appellant that the sale held in execution of such a decree is bad in law and confers no title on the defendant-respondent 2. The plaintiff-appellant therefore prays that the aforesaid decrees for sale passed by the Bombay High Court be set aside and so should also the sale held thereunder, and that the plaintiff-appellant should be given possession over the village Bansgaon situate in the District of Fyzabad. The plaintiff, Mt. Paran

Kuar, has sold a portion of her claim to one Permushore Dat Shukul, also a resident of Fyzabad who joined her as plaintiff 2. He died during the pendency of the suit and his sons were brought on the record in his place as plaintiffs 2 to 6.

The defence raised by defendants 1 and 2 is practically the same and is to the effect that the consent decree was a valid decree having been obtained by defendant 1, Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi, against Dr Shiam Sabal on proper confession of judgment by the advocate who represented Dr. Shiam Sabal before the High Court at Bombay. As to the decree absolute it was denied that there was any fraud practised by him (defendant 1). It was contended that the notice of the application for making the decree absolute was sent to Mt. Paran Kuar, the appellant, through the post office and was actually served upon her and consequently the decree was quite valid. The sale held in execution of the decree was, it was urged, quite proper and regular and defendant 2's title could not be assailed

The two main points among other points for trial in the Court below were, firstly, whether the preliminary decree, passed by the High Court at Bombay by consent of the defendant in that suit, was a valid decree or whether it was obtained fraudulently; secondly, whether the final decree for sale was obtained after giving due notice to the appellant Mt. Paran Kuar, or whether it was also obtained fraudulently. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, to whose Court the suit was sent for trial, held that the preliminary decree obtained by consent was a valid decree and could not be challenged, that the final decree for sale was also good and could not be said to have been obtained fraudulently though he held that it was not proved to his satisfaction that the notice of the application to make the said decree absolute had been given to Mt. Paran Kuar. On these findings he held that the sale in favour of defendant 2 was good and could not be challenged and in result he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In appeal both the points have again been contested before us; on behalf of the respondents objection has been taken as to the accuracy of the finding arrived at by the lower Court on the question of service of notice on Mt. Paran Kuar in regard to the application for making the decree absolute. We have, therefore, to decide two points, namely :

(1) Whether the consent decree is valid ; and

(2) Whether notice of the application making the decree absolute was served upon the plaintiff-appellant Paran Kuar ; if not, whether it would make the decree absolute and the sale held thereunder, void and inoperative.

We now proceed to give our decision on both these points As to the first point it has been contended by the learned advocate for the appellant that the summons of the original suit was served upon Dr Shiam Sabal on 6th September 1913 and on 9th September 1913 a warrant was lodged in the Bombay High Court by the said Doctor addressed to the Prothonotary, High Court, Bombay, to the effect that he intended to defend the suit brought by Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi and had appointed Messrs. Dhunji Shah and Batliwalla as attorneys for the purpose (vide plaintiffs' Ex. 13). It is contended that this document proves that Dr. Shiam Sabal intended to contest the suit and he never instructed his attorneys to confess judgment before the High Court at Bombay No evidence has, however, been led on the point The above-named attorneys have not been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs in support of this allegation. The contention put forward on behalf of plaintiffs is merely to the effect that the Doctor could not have instructed his attorneys to confess the judgment since such a position would be against the tenor of Ex 13. It was also urged that the defendants in the present case had given no evidence to prove that the Doctor had ever authorised the attorneys to confess judgment. We are unable to accept this argument. In our opinion there is a presumption attaching to the proceedings of the High Court at Bombay that they were properly and regularly held. It must be assumed that the Court must have satisfied itself before the passing of the consent decree that the person confessing judgment had authority on behalf of the defendant in that case to act in the manner in which he did. We refrain from presuming that the proceedings were irregular. It was in our opinion incumbent on the plaintiff-appellant to prove this by positive evidence if this was fact. No evidence having been led on the point the presumption remains unrepudiated. As to the argument based on Ex. 13 it appears to us sufficient to state that although, on 9th September 1913 Dr Shiam Sabal no doubt declared his intention that he intended to defend the suit yet it is quite possible that subsequently, on advice given to him he changed his mind and might have thought it proper not to defend the suit but to confess judgment. We, therefore, hold that the preliminary decree passed by the High Court at Bombay on 16th September 1913 is a valid decree and the plaintiffs-appellants have failed to establish that it is vitiated by fraud

As to the second point we have heard the parties at great length and gone through the entire evidence on the record, both documentary and oral. We regret to observe that on a consideration of the entire evidence on the record we have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. In our opinion the service of the notice of the application, to make the decree absolute, on Mt. Paran Kuar, has been established and no question of the invalidity of that decree on the ground of its being a fraudulent decree can possibly be maintained. The original postal acknowledgment purporting to bear the signature of Mt Paran Kuar has been filed in the case. It is Ex. A 8 and formed part of Ex. B15 on the record of the original suit brought in the Bombay High Court. This document is proved by the evidence of the defendant Manni Lal Nanha Lal Gandhi who was examined in the case as D. W 6 and swears on oath that this was the acknowledgment which was received by him through the post office According to him the acknowledgment was in regard to a notice of the application, filed by him in the High Court at Bombay for the passing of the final decree, which was served upon her and other defendants in the case.

Two objections have been urged against the genuineness of this postal acknowledgment. One is to the effect that it does not bear the postal mark of Fyzabad and consequently it cannot be said that it has reached the appellant, Mt. Paran Kuar, who is resident of the District of Fyzabad. The other objection is to the effect that this acknowledgment does not bear her signature since it appears to be written as " Paran Kor " and not " Paran Kuar " which is her actual name. We have considered both these objections and it appears to us that none of them has any substance

As to the first objection it would be enough to observe that sometimes postal acknowledgments do not bear the seal of the post office of delivery, although as a rule they do. (The judgment discussed evidence as to these two objections and concluding against appellant in respect of both proceeded) We might state that in our opinion there is a presumption under S 114, Evidence Act, that the letter which was posted at Bombay, which fact is established by the evidence of D W. 6, and which contained a notice to Mt. Paran Kuar of the application to make the decree absolute must have in the ordinary course of business reached her, until shown to the contrary. We also feel that the proceedings of the Bombay High Court must also be presumed to have been held in a regular way. The High Court must have satisfied itself that the notice of the application was really served upon the appellant Paran Kuar It is no doubt open to her to show that she never received such notice. The attempt was made by her but we must say she has hopelessly failed in the attempt.

We, therefore, hold that the notice of the application to make the decree absolute which was sent to Mt. Paran Kuar by the attorneys of defendant 1 was served upon her and that the decree absolute dated 18th February 1915 is valid and binding upon her. No question of fraud under the circumstances arises in the case We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs

 Penal Code, S. 411—Circumstances convincing of stolen nature of property are necessary for S. 411—Word "believe" therein is stronger than "suspect."

The word "believe" in S. 411 is stronger than the word "suspect" and involves the necessity of showing that the accused must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing was a stolen property. Mere carelessness, or omission to inquire, or existence of reasons to suspect are not sufficient grounds to accuse him. 6 Bom. 402, Foll.

Judgment—This is an application in criminal revision A bullock belonging to one Chhotey Lal was found missing on 15th February 1928 It was traced on 21st February 1928 in the Rawalpur bazar in the possession of one Sher Khan Banjara Sher Khan's case was that he had purchased the bullock from Tika Ram of Laknor. The matter was reported to the police and the result was that Tika Ram and Suraj Prasad were sent up for trial Tika Ram was charged under S. 411, I P. C, and Suraj Prasad under S. 414, I. P C. The defence of Tika Ram was that he had purchased the bullock from one Ram Lal under a receipt His defence was not accepted by trial Court His appeal also was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi. The defence of Suraj Prasad was that he knew Tika Ram and so he identified him (Tika Ram) at the time the bullock was sold to Sher Khan He said that he did not know that the bullock belonged to Chhotey Lal or that it was stolen property He stated further that the bullock was in the possession of Tika Ram and that he had simply identified Tika Ram the vendor at the time of sale. His defence also was not accepted by the trial Court His appeal was also dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi on 8th December 1928

He filed the present application for revision in this Court on 20th December 1928 I think this application should be accepted. So far as I see, there is no reliable evidence on the record to prove that Suraj Prasad applicant knew or had reason to believe that the bullock was stolen property. Jan Mohammad (P.W. 4) and Sher Khan (P W 6) are the only witnesses with respect to Suraj Prasad's case. The charge is not made out against Suraj Prasad on their evidence There is nothing in their evidence to show that Suraj Prasad knew or had reason to believe that the bullock was stolen property. As pointed out in the case of Empress v. Rango Timaji (1), the word "believe" in S 411, I P C, is much stronger than the word "suspect" and involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing was stolen property It is not sufficient in such a case to show that the accused person was careless, or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been dishonestly (honestly ?) acquired As there is nothing to show that Suraj Prasad knew or had reason to believe that the bullock was stolen property, he cannot be legally convicted under S 414, I. P. C, Hence I accept the application, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that Suraj Prasad be acquitted. He is on bail. The bail bond will be discharged.

Second Appeal No 158 of 1928, Decided on 2nd October 1928, against decree of Addl Dist, Judge, Gonda, D/- 20th January 1928

Transfer of Property Act, S. 60—Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Mortgagor executing two successive mortgage-deeds—Intention to pay both debts together—Mortgagor suing for redemption on first deed only—Mortgagee contending that redemption should not be allowed until other debt also paid—Court holding that two debts were not consolidated and decreeing redemption—Decision was binding on parties and time against second deed accrued when debt became payable and not when redemption money on first deed was paid—Lim. Act, Art. 132.

A mortgagor executed two successive mortgage-deeds in favour of the mortgagee, and it was intended that both the debts should be paid together. Mortgagor sued for redemption on the first deed only. Mortgagee contended that the redemption should not be granted until the debt on the other deed also was paid. The Court held that the two mortgages had not been consolidated and decreed the redemption. In his suit on second deed the mortgagee contended that time accrued for his second deed only when redemption money on first deed was paid.

Held: that the decision of the Court in that suit was binding on the parties and as regards the other mortgage-deed time began to run only when the debt became payable according to the terms of the deed and not when money was paid in the redemption suit on the first deed. [P 215 C 1]

Radha Krishna—for Appellants.

Kashi Prasad—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The mortgagors executed two deeds One was dated 9th June 1882. It was a deed of usufructuary mortgage mortgaging certain land with possession. The second was a deed of simple mortgage with which we are now concerned. It is dated 23rd December 1886. Under this deed the mortgagors agreed to repay the principal and interest within 15 years and six months. The reason for fixing this particular period was that under the terms of the first deed redemption could not take place till 9th June 1902 and it was the intention of the parties that both deeds should be paid off together. The mortgagors brought a suit for redemption of the first deed only, and in that suit the present plaintiffs-appellants who are the mortgagees put forward a claim that redemption should not be permitted until the amount due on the present deed was also paid off. That contention was, however, repelled by the Courts and it was finally decided by Mr. Dalal, Judicial Commissioner, in Buniyad Singh v. Naubat Singh (1), that the mortgagors could redeem the first deed without paying up the amount due on the second The learned Judicial Commissioner found that there had been no consolidation The parties are bound by that decision. The case for the appellants here is that as the money was paid in the redemption suit on the first deed in the year 1926, the period for limitation in the present suit did not arise till 1926. We are unable to accept this view. To us it is clear that the period of limitation for the present deed accrued on 23rd June 1902, and the suit is thus time barred. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeals Nos. 141 and 142 of 1927, Decided on 5th September 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 8th August 1928.

(a) Hindu Law—Widow—Her possession is not adverse to reversioners nor that of person in possession with her consent.

The possession of a Hindu widow for her life is a possession to which she is entitled by virtue of law, and it cannot be deemed to be adverse against the reversioners in the sense that it might extinguish their rights. Similarly if any person during the lifetime of the widow comes into possession of the property with the consent of the widow, his or her possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to them. [P 219 C 2]

 (b) Hindu Law—Widow in possession of property which she is not entitled to inherit—Possession is adverse unless she declares herself a life-tenant or holds with reversioner's consent.

It is a settled rule of law that the possession of a Hindu female, in respect of the property to which she has come into possession, but is not entitled to it by way of inheritance under the Hindu law, must be deemed to be adverse to the reversioners and cannot be considered to be that of a mere life-estate holder, unless an arrangement or an agreement to that effect is proved to have been arrived at between her and the reversioners or unless she has herself declared that she held only as a limited owner possessed of a life-estate 22 Cal. 445 (P. C.), 23 Cal. 661 (P. C.); A. I. R. 1919 P. C. 60 and A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 138, Foll. [P 221 C 1]

But the mere fact that a Hindu female declares that she is in possession of such property by way of inheritance does not show that she declares herself to be in possession as a limited owner. The real view in such a case would be that she not being entitled to possession by way of inheritance, her possession must be deemed to be that of a trespasser and consequently adverse against the reversioners, unless they prove that it was with their consent. [P 222 C 1]

 (c) Adverse possession—Equity of redemption is capable of adverse possession—Transfer of Property Act, S. 60.

It cannot be maintained as a wide proposition that an equity of redemption can never be considered as capable of adverse possession. It must be held on the facts established in each case whether they would amount to be the cogent evidence of adverse possession of the equity of redemption: 32 Cal. 296 (P. C.); 27 Bom. 43, A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 40, 38 All. 411, Rel. on. [P 223 C 1]

 (d) Adverse possession—Nankar allowance not received by a person for some years—Right to receive it is not barred by adverse possession—Denial of the right and continuous receipt thereof by the holder must be proved.

The mere fact that a person has not received his nankar allowance for some years would not destroy his right to the said allowance. It is a recurring right and in order to establish adverse possession in respect of such a right it must be clearly established by cogent evidence that the right to receive the nankar was clearly and openly denied to the claimant's knowledge, and that after such denial, the person setting up adverse possession had been continually in receipt thereof by virtue of such an asserted right. [P 224 C 2]

A P. Sen, M. H Qidwai and B. N. Ray—for Appellants.

M. Wasim and Khaliquzzaman—for Respondents.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise out of a suit for possession and mesne profits from the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 8th August 1927. The attached pedigree* will show the relationship between the parties and will also indicate the respective dates of the deaths of various persons, which are for the decision of this case relevant. The facts of the case are rather complicated and will have to be stated in detail

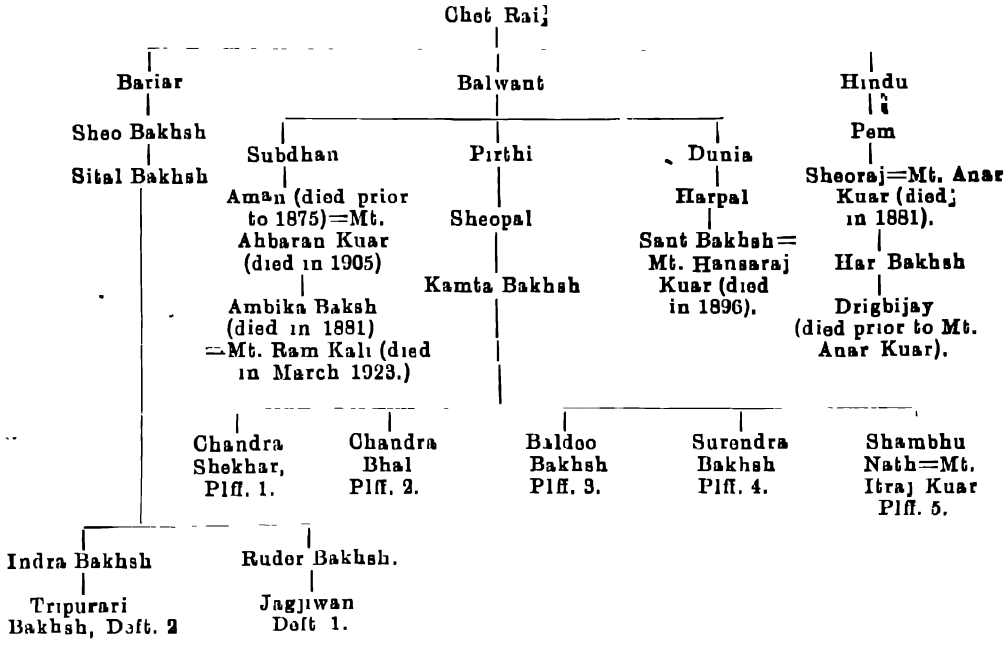
As will appear from the pedigree the plaintiffs in this case are the sons and grandsons of one Kamta Bakhsh, son of Sheo Pal Singh and the defendants are the grandsons of one Sitla Bakhsh shown in the pedigree The property in suit consists of the zamindari property entered in list B attached to the plaint, the right to recover nankar allowance from the Ajudhia estate, and certain specific plots of land The plaintiffs also prayed for recovery of possession of a house together with a well and for mesne profits as well as for a certain sum on account of costs of the material of that house and for damages. We may at once state that we are not in any way concerned in this appeal with the house, or the mesne profits or the cost of material of the house or damages. The enquiry into these matters has been postponed by the lower Court till after the decision of the suit.

It is necessary to state that the property consists of underproprietary (zamindari) property in villages Khandarkha, Debai, Khunnipur and Bodaipur, district Fyzabad. The superior proprietor of all these villages is the Ajudhia estate. The nankar allowance in dispute consists of Rs 198-0-9 out of a larger sum, which is received by the members of the family from the Ajudhia estate. The specific plots of land consist of four plots Nos 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1719, situate in village Debai, named above.

In order to understand the case of the plaintiffs it is necessary to classify the property entered in list B attached to the plaint into three classes mentioned below :

Class I—consists of the property which belonged to Ambika Bakhsh, the husband of Mt. Ramkali, and which after his death passed on to Mt. Ramkali, his widow. This property consists of shares in villages Kandarkha, Khunnipur and Bodaipur.

Class II—consists of the property which belonged to Sant Bakhsh, son of Harpal Singh, and after his death came into possession of his widow Mt. Hans Raj Kuar and after her death a moiety of it came in the possession of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar, mother of Ambika Bakhsh, and widow of Aman Singh, and after her death in the possession of Mt. Ramkali. This property is also situate in villages Kandarkha, Debai and Khunnipur.



Class III—consists of the property, which once belonged to Dirigbijai Singh and after his death came into possession of Mt. Anar Kuar, and after her death 1/6th share of the same came into possession of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar, mother of Ambika Bakhsh and after her death into the possession of Mt. Ramkali,

The four plots of land as mentioned above situate in village Debai are those which fall into the share of Mt. Ramkali by virtue of a partition of the revenue Court held in the year 1923. In order to understand the plaintiff's case, we think it also necessary to mention here the dates of the deaths of various persons mentioned above, which are relevant for the purposes of this case and about which except in one case there is no further dispute between the parties.

Aman Singh, father of Ambika Bakhsh Singh died prior to 1875 whereas Ambika Bakhsh Singh died in 1881. The defendants, however, do not admit this but allege that both died in 1881, Ambika having, died a few days prior to Aman Mt. Anar Kuar, mother of Drigbijai Singh and widow of Sheoraj Singh, died in 1881. Mt Hans Raj Kuar, widow of Sant Bakhsh, died in 1896. Mt. Ahbaran Kuar, mother of Ambika Bakhsh Singh, died in 1905 Mt Ramkali, widow of Ambika Bakhsh Singh, died in March

* For pedigree see p. 217.

1923. We may also mention that the present suit was brought in March 1926. The plaintiffs' case regarding the property mentioned in Class I is that it belonged to Ambika Bakhsh Singh, and after his death went to his widow Mt Ramkali, who was then of tender years (in age) and was helped in the management of the same by her mother-in-law, Mt. Ahbaran Kuar. Mt Ramkali was in possession of the said estate as a Hindu widow, and she having died in 1923, the plaintiffs are entitled to the said property as next reversioners of her husband, the defendants having no title to it in the presence of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs' case regarding the property mentioned in Class II is that after the death of Mt. Hans Raj Kuar in 1896, Kamta Bakhsh Singh, their predecessor-in-title, became entitled to the whole of it, but he got mutation effected in respect of a moiety thereof in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar giving her a life-estate with no power of alienation, and that after the death of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar, Mt. Ramkali also entered into possession of the said property as a Hindu widow and now after her death in 1923, the plaintiffs are entitled to that property as well.

The plaintiffs' case regarding the property mentioned in Class III is that after the death of Mt. Anar Kuar in 1881 half the property went to the branch of Sital Bakhsh Singh, the ancestor of the defendants, and half the property was divided among three branches, each taking 1/6th. One of the said branch was that of Sant Bakhsh, the other being that of Kamta Bakhsh, ancestor of the plaintiffs, and the third being that of Aman Singh. This share was in patti Sheo Raj Singh, named after the husband of Mt Anar Kuar. The plaintiffs' case is that the share which Mt. Ahbaran Kuar got in the said property was also that of a life-estate without power of alienation with the consent of their ancestor Kamta Bakhsh Singh, and consequently she possessed only a widow's estate in the said property, and Mt Ramkali who came into possesssion thereof after the death of Ahbaran Kuar was also in possession as a life-estate holder, and after her death the plaintiffs as the next reversioners of her husband are entitled to the said property

In this Court the plaintiffs applied to us for the amendment of their plaint to the effect that if all these properties be held to be absolute properties of Mt. Ramkali and as such her streedhan, they being the nearer heirs of her husband are the heirs of her streedhan property also, there being no other preferential heirs in existence. The amendment was not opposed by the defendants and we have allowed it. It was also admitted on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiffs are the streedhan heirs of Mt. Ramkali.

It will thus appear from what we have stated above that the case of the plaintiffs is that Mt Ramkali was in possession of all the various properties in suit as a Hindu widow and that they as the next reversioners of her husband are now entitled to it In the alternative their case is that if any item of the property in suit be held to be the absolute property of Mt. Ramkali, they are also entitled to it, being the streedhan heirs of the said lady

The defendants contend that the possession of Mt Ramkali in respect of none of the property in suit was that of a Hindu widow. As to the property mentioned in Class I their case is that Ambika Singh died during the lifetime of his father Aman Singh and consequently Mt. Ramkali had no right to inherit the property in suit, and that if she remained in possession, her possession must be deemed adverse They also denied that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was in possession of the property as a life-estate holder and that Mt Ramkali succeeded her in the same capacity. Their contention is that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was in possession without any title and thus her possession must be deemed to be adverse and if Mt Ramkali came into possession of the said property whether in her lifetime or after her death her possession must also be deemed to be adverse.

As to the nankar allowance they also denied the plaintiffs' title and set up the adverse possession of Mt Ramkali in respect thereof. They also contended that the effect of the revenue partition was that Mt Ramkali should be deemed to be the absolute owner of the four above mentioned plots in the village Debai, and that plaintiffs could not claim those plots.

With regard to these various kinds of the property they set up a deed of gift of 6th November 1922, executed in their favour by Mt. Ramkali and also a lease for thirty years executed in their favour by her on the same date.

The plaintiffs denied the validity of the deed of gift and of the lease and urged that in any case they were entitled to the lessor's interest at present and to the actual possession of the property after thirty years since they were the heirs of Mt. Ramkali.

We might also mention one more point and it is regarding the share in the village Khunnipur. The plaintiffs alleged that apart from the above allegations neither Mt. Ahbaran Kuar nor Mt. Ramkali was in possession of the said share, but that it had been in possession of the mortgagees one after another and that the plaintiffs had redeemed that property from the last mortgagee and were now in possession of the same Their case, therefore, in regard to this property is that there could be no adverse possession of Mt. Ramkali in respect of the same.

From the pleadings stated above it will appear that the principal points for trial in the case were as follows :

(1) Whether Ambika Bakhsh had survived his father Aman Singh ?

(2) Whether Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was in possession as a life-estate holder with the permission of the plaintiffs or whether her possession was adverse ?

(3) Whether the possession of Mt. Ramkali was in respect of any of the property in suit that of a Hindu widow of whether her possession was also adverse ?

(4) Whether the share in village Khunnipur had been in possession of mortgagees one after another and whether the plaintiffs had redeemed the last mortgagee and whether under these circumstances either Mt. Ahbaran Kuar or Mt. Ramkali could be deemed to have been in adverse possession of the same ?

(5) Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the nankar allowance, claimed by them ?

(6) Whether Mt. Ramkali was the absolute owner of the four plots of land in village Debai, which had fallen to her share at the time of the partition.

A number of issues were framed in the trial Court but the principal points covered by them have been mentioned by us above. The learned Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad found that Ambika Bakhsh Singh survived Aman Singh ; that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was in possession as life-estate holder with the permission of the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs; that Mt Ramkali's possession in regard to the property mentioned in Class I was that of a Hindu widow and that her possession with regard to the property mentioned in Classes II and III was adverse. He also found that the possession of the mortgagees over the share in the village Khunnipur had not been established, nor the fact of the redemption by the plaintiffs of the said property. He, however, held that the plaintiffs' right to the nankar allowance in suit was established but they were not entitled to claim the four plots of land, since they were the absolute property of Mt. Ramkali As to the property regarding which the learned Subordinate Judge held that Mt Ramkali was absolute owner by virtue of her adverse possession or partition, he upheld the deed of gift and the lease dated 6th November 1922. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in respect of those items of the property and decreed it in respect of the rest

Both parties have now appealed to this Court against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs appeal being First Civil Appeal No. 141 of 1927, and the defendants' appeal being First Civil Appeal No. 142 of 1927 The result of these two appeals is that all the points, which were decided by the learned Subordinate Judge, now require a decision from us, and the whole case has, therefore, been argued in respect of each of the point on both sides We therefore, now proceed to give our findings in respect of each of the points stated above as the main points for trial in the Court below

As to point No 1

Whether Ambika Bakhsh Singh had survived his father Aman Singh. (The judgment discussed the evidence and concluded as follows). We are, therefore, of opinion that it has been satisfactorily eslablished that Ambika Bakhsh survived his father Aman Singh. The first point, is, therefore, decided against the defendents and in favour of the plaintiffs

As to point No 2.

Whether Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was in possession as a life-estate holder with the permission of the plaintiffs or whether her possession was adverse ?

We may state that this point is covered by issues 3, 5 and 8 and has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiffs. It is clear from the evidence on the record that Mt. Ramkali and Mt Ahbaran Kuar both lived together, and that the relations between the daughter-in-law and the mother-in-law were quite good. That fact shows that both of them maintained themselves out of the income of the same property and under these circumstances it cannot be said that the possession of the mother-in-law was in any way adverse to the daughter-in-law. As to whether it was adverse to the plaintiffs we find it established from the evidence on the record that it was not so. Regarding the property which came to Mt Ramkali as heir to her husband Ambika Bakhsh Singh it is evident that the possession of Ahbaran Kuar could not be deemed to be adverse to the plaintiff as long as Mt Ramkali lived. Their right to possession of the said property would accrue only after the death of Mt. Ramkali and if any other person with the consent of Mt. Ramkali was in possession during her lifetime her possession could not be deemed to be adverse against them The possession of a Hindu widow for her life is a possession to which she is entitled by virtue of law, and it cannot be deemed to be adverse against the reversioners in the sense that it might extinguish their rights. Similarly if any person during the lifetime of the widow comes into possession of the property with the consent of the widow, his or her possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to them As to the property which was left by Mt Anar Kuar, mother of Drigbijai Singh, and by Mt Hansraj Kuar, widow of Sant Bakhsh Singh, we find that Mt Ahbaran Kuar was not entitled to get any share out of those properties since her husband Aman Singh had died before the death of Anar Kuar or the death of Mt Hansraj Kuar, when the succession should be deemed to have opened.

As to the property held by Anar Kuar it is clear that after her death in 1881 it was divided between the two branches, one consisting of the defendants and the other consisting of Bakhsh Singh, Kamta Bakhsh and Ambika Bakhsh, all descendants of Balwant Singh. After the death of Mt. Hansraj Kuar in 1896 Mt. Ahbaran Kuar applied for mutation of names and the plaintiffs filed objections and ultimately a compromise was arrived at to the effect that half the property should be recorded in the name of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar for her life only without the power of alienation and that the other half should be recorded in the name of the objectors. This would appear from Ex. 45, which is printed on P. R. 36, part 3. The compromise was filed in the mutation case relating to village Kandarkha and is dated 27th August 1896 The compromise purports to have been signed by Chandra Shekhar Singh the plaintiff and Mt. Ahbaran Kuar. The revenue Court ordered the mutation of names to be effected in accordance with the compromise on 21st November 1896. It appears from the record that in regard to village Debai the name of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar was entered by virtue of the order of the same date: vide Ex 39 This shows that it was by virtue of the same compromise that mutation was effected in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar in respect of that village also. It is in evidence of P. W. 8 that mutation in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar in respect of all the villages was by virtue of the said compromise. The witness has been believed by the learned Subordinate Judge and we do not see any reason why his testimony should be rejected. It is also proved by the khewat of the village Khunnipur (Ex. 40 printed on P. R. 8) that the mutation was effected in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar in the same proportion as the two other villages. The learned Subordinate Judge says that this fact indicates that the mutation must have been effected in respect of this village also in pursuance of the compromise mentioned above. We agree with him In a case decided by this Court and reported in Ram Abhilakh v. Mt Chaurasi (1), it was held that in similar circumstances it may be presumed that possession in regard to the entire property was by virtue of a compromise. We adhere to the view of law taken in that case It appears to us to be therefore clearly established that the mutation in favour of Mt Ahbaran Kuar in respect of all the villages was made in pursuance of a compromise between her and the plaintiffs, which was to the effect that she was to remain in possession of the share given to her for her life and without any power of alienation Indeed this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge was not assailed by the learned counsel on behalf of the defendants-respondents during the course of the arguments in appeal We therefore find that Mt. Abharan Kuar was in possession of property entered in her name with the consent of the plaintiffs and that her possession in respect thereof could not be deemed to be adverse

As to point No 3.

Whether the possession of Mt. Ramkali was in respect of any of the property in suit that of a Hindu widow or whether her possession was also adverse — This point is embodied in issue 6. This is one of the most important points in the case. The question which we have to deal with under this head relates to the nature of possession of Mt. Ramkali in respect of different classes of property, of which she was in possession. As to the property of Class 1, which belonged to Ambika Bakhsh and was mutated in favour of his widow Mt Ramkali after his death, there is no difficulty. The only point urged by the defendants in that connexion was that Ambika Bakhsh had died during the lifetime of his father Aman Singh and consequently Mt. Ramkali had not succeeded to that property as a Hindu widow. We have already dealt with this question under the first point. We have agreed with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point that Ambika Bakhsh survived Aman Singh. In that view of the case there can be no doubt that Mt Ramkali succeeded to that property as a Hindu widow and the plaintiffs are now entitled to it as the next reversioners of her husband. It is in regard to this property that the claim of the plaintiffs has been decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge. We, therefore, maintain that part of the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that Mt Ramkali could not be considered to be in adverse possession of that property

The question of adverse possession only arises in respect of the property which was in possession of Mt Ahbaran Kuar, the mother of Ambika Bakhsh, and after her death it came into the possession of Mt Ramkali To be strictly accurate the mutation of name in respect of the property situate in Debai was with the consent of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar effected in favour of Mt Ramkali during her lifetime. The question whether she obtained possession of that property during the lifetime of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar, or after her death is in our opinion immaterial because it is admitted that except the share in village Khunnipur, which is alleged by the plaintiffs to have been in the possession of the mortgagees and in their possession after redemption, she remained in possession of the entire property, which was originally mutated in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar for more than 12 years after her death. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar died somewhere in 1895 and it is admitted that Mt Ramkali died in 1923.

In order to determine the nature of possession of Mt Ramkali in respect of the property which came to her possession either during the lifetime of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar or after her death we have to see what the law on the subject is.

It is a settled rule of law that the possession of a Hindu female, in respect of the property to which she has come into possession, but is not entitled to it by way of inheritance under the Hindu law, must be deemed to be adverse to the reversioners and cannot be considered to be that of a mere life-estate holder, unless an arrangement or an agreement to that effect is proved to have been arrived at between her and the reversioners or unless she has herself declared that she held only as a limited owner possessed of a life-estate. This rule of law will be found to be laid down in two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, one reported in Mt. Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (2) and the other reported in Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (3). In the former case it was laid down by their Lordships that where a Hindu female made a clear declaration either at the time when she took possession or subsequently that she took the property as a Hindu widow, her possession could not be deemed to be adverse to the reversioners, who would be entitled to the property after her death This proposition is based upon the elementary principle of law that no man can acquire by adverse possession a right higher than what he declares to be in possession of. In the latter case it was laid down by their Lordships that if a Hindu female be shown to have come into possession of a property, to which she was not entitled by way of inheritance, as a result of arrangement with the reversionary heirs, her possession cannot be deemed to be adverse against them, and they would be entitled to recover the property after her death. This proposition is based upon another elementary principle of law which is to the effect that a person's possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to another when he enters upon it with his consent.

The rule of law stated by us in regard to the possession of a Hindu female as enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the two cases quoted above was again affirmed by their Lordships in a subsequent case reported in Satgur Prasadh v. Kishore Lal (4). It was recently followed by a Bench of this Court in Raj Bahadur Singh v. Kadhaiya Bakhsh Singh (5), to which one of us was party. We have, therefore, to see whether Mt. Ramkali's possession in respect of the property which was in possession of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar could after her death be deemed to be ascribable to any one of the two principles laid down by the Privy Council. As to village Kandarkha we find that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar got mutation of name effected in favour of Mt Ramkali in her own life time. This would appear from Ex 49, which will be found printed on P. R. 43 of part 3, which is an extract from mutation register in respect of pukhtadari haciyat in village Kandarkha. It shows that Mt. Ramkali's name was entered in place of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar by virtue of inheritance due to old age. The actual words used in the vernacular are " Wirasat alam zaifi "

It is difficult to follow the legal significance of this expression because a right of inheritance cannot be deemed to accrue during the lifetime of a person, who is old. Such right can only accrue after his death. What appears to us to be the real meaning of this is that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar had got old and therefore she put Mt. Ramkali in possession of the property and because the revenue Courts would only recognize possession obtained either by inheritance or transfer, it was thought proper in this case to describe her coming into possession of the property by virtue of inheritance. The order is dated 28th July 1904 and the entry was made by the patwari in the village registers on the 8th October 1904 The learned Subordinate Judge has found that Mt Ahbaran Kuar died in 1905, with which finding we quite agree, and consequently it is proved clearly from this document that the mutation of names was effected in favour of Mt. Ramkali in respect of the property situate in village Kandarkha during the lifetime of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar. No proof has been given on behalf of the plaintiffs to prove that the mutation of names in respect of this village was effected in favour of Mt Ramkali as a result of an arrangement with them The only contention put forward before us by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants was that as mutation of names has been effected in favour of Mt Ramkali by way of inheritance it must be deemed that she took the property only as a life-estate holder The contention was that she could not take more than what was possessed by Mt. Ahbaran Kuar. We do not think this contention is a sound one It may be that during Mt. Ahbaran Kuar's life the possession of Mt. Ramkali may be deemed to be of some character as that of Mt. Abharan Kuar, since she took possession with her consent, but it appears to us to be clear that after the death of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar the plaintiffs could have taken possession of the property from Mt Ramkali, and unless it be proved that she continued in possession with the consent of the plaintiffs, her possession after the death of Mt Ahbaran Kuar cannot be considered to be in the same capacity as that of Ahbaran Kuar. The mere fact that a Hindu female declares that she is in possession of the property by way of inheritance does not show that she declares herself to be in possession as a limited owner. The real view in such a case would be that she not being entitled to possession by way of inheritance, her possession must be deemed to be that of a trespasser and consequently adverse against the reversioners, unless they prove that it was with their consent

We are, therefore, of opinion that the possession of Mt. Ramkali in respect of the property situate in village Kandarkha must be deemed to be adverse to the plaintiffs. We must make it clear that this is only in respect of the property which she got as an heir to her husband Ambika Bakhsh Singh. (The judgment then discussed the evidence in respect of the remaining items and concluded) The result of our finding on this point is that we maintain the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in respect of the shares which stood mutated in favour of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar in regard to two villages Kandarkha and Debai, and set it aside in respect of the village Khunnipur.

As to point No. 4.—Whether the share in village Khunnipur had been in possession of mortgagees one after another and whether the plaintiffs had redeemed the last mortgagee and under these circumstances either Mt Ahbaran Kuar or Mt. Ramkali could be deemed to have been in adverse possession of the same?

The next point with which we have to deal is the alleged adverse possession of Mt. Ahbaran Kuar or Mt Ramkali in respect of the property situate in village Khunnipur, which, the plaintiffs alleged, had been in actual possession of the mortgagees and which after redemption in 1917 had come into their possession. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs took up two positions with regard to this property The first position was that he challenged the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that the possession of the mortgagees over this property had not been established, nor had the alleged subsequent redemption of the said property by the plaintiffs and their possession over the same been proved The second position was that the property being in possession of the mortgagees and after redemption that of the plaintiff there could be no adverse possession in regard to the equity of redemption. We now proceed to deal with each of these positions. (The judgment discussed evidence as to the first position and concluded) Our finding therefore on this point is that the property in village Khunnipur was never in possession of either Mt. Ahbaran Kuar or Mt Ramkali, but it was at first in the possession of Jagdatt and then in the possession of Raghunath and Sheo Sahai as mortgagees of the said property and after the redemption of 1917 it came to the possession of the plaintiffs, who remained in possession thereof till the death of Mt. Ramkali.

As to the second position we may observe that we have already held while dealing with point No. 3 that the mutation of names effected in favour of Mt. Ramkali in the year 1910 in respect of the property situate in village Khunnipur was by virtue of an arrangement with the plaintiffs. That alone would show that Mt. Ramkali's adverse possession in regard to this property could not be held to have been established. But apart from this we are also of opinion that the mere fact that the name of Mt. Ramkali was entered in the khewat in respect of this property cannot be held to be a sufficient proof that she was in adverse possession of the equity of redemption, and and we say so for two reasons: firstly, that the property was in possession of the mortgagees and secondly that the mutation of names was effected in her favour, with the consent of the plaintiffs. We are not prepared to hold that mutation effected under such circumstances could be any evidence of adverse possession of Mt Ramkali in respect of the equity of redemption The learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants argued that an equity of redemption could never be considered as capable of adverse possession In face of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khairajmal v. Daim (6) such a wide proposition cannot be maintained It would appear from the judgment of their Lordships (p. 32) that if certain facts had been established in that case they would have been considered by them as sufficient evidence of adverse possession of the equity of redemption. We are, therefore, of opinion that it must be held on the facts established in each case whether they would amount to be the cogent evidence of adverse possession of the equity of redemption. The same view was taken in a well-known judgment of the Bombay High Court reported in Tarubai v Venkatarao (7) Batty, J, considered this question in a most learned and exhaustive manner and observed as follows on p. 66 :

"The result is, as above indicated, if there has been no ouster or "open and notorious act of taking possession," then the person relying on his possession to defeat title, must show that it was of such a nature, and involved the exercise of rights so irreconcilable with those claimable by the plaintiff, as to give the plaintiff occasion to dispute that possession (or, in other words, that it was such as to give a cause of action or right to sue for possession) throughout the twelve years next preceding the suit. The mere existence of the claim without possession, actual or constructive, will not suffice as a bar to a title proved or admitted. Secy. of State v. Krishnanomi Gupta (8). And even where there is possession, if it has commenced without any act of dispossession, and is susceptible of explanation by reference to a title not inconsistent with the rights of the person against whom it is set up, or of one holding on behalf of such person or temporarily entitled to exercise his rights, there can be no necessity to call that possession in question, unless and until interference with the right of the person against whom it is alleged has been manifested by acts affecting his existing right, or has otherwise been brought to his knowledge."

The same principle was followed in the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in a recent case where this subject was discussed exhaustively by Mr. Dalal, A J C, (now Mr. Justice Dalal), vide Jai Govind Singh v Abhairaj Singh (9), We are in entire agreement with the view of law taken in that case

The facts that have been established in the case before us are that the property was in possession of the mortgagee and the persons in whom the equity of redemption vested allowed the mutation of names to be effected in favour of Mt Ramkali under circumstances which show that mutation was to be made in her favour as an heir to another lady, which meant that mutation was allowed only for her lifetime, with no power of alienation In such a case we are unable to hold that adverse possession of the equity of redemption has been established We are supported in this view by a recent decision of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court reported in Kuar Sen v Darbari Lal (10) In that case a mortgagee was in possession of certain property under an usufructuary mortgage and certain persons had succeeded in getting their names recorded in the revenue papers in place of the mortgagor against his consent and it was held that they could not on that basis acquire adverse possession of the right to redeem. We must point out that for the purpose of our case it is not necessary to go to the extent to which their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court went in that case. In the case before us the mutation was effected in favour of Mt. Ramkali with the consent of Chandra Shekhar, the plaintiff, while in the case before the Allahabad High Court the mutation had been effected in spite of the resistance offered by the person actually entitled to the property. At any rate it is clear that in the circumstances proved in this case it is not possible for us to hold that Mt. Ramkali acquired adverse possession to the equity of redemption on the basis of the mutation effected in her favour in respect thereof in the year 1910.

Our finding, therefore is that Mt. Ramkali's possession in respect of the equity of redemption cannot be held to be adverse and the plaintiffs are entitled to claim this property of their suit which is within 12 years from the date of her death in 1923.

As to point No. 5.

Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the nankar allowance claimed by them ?

The point under this head relates to the plaintiffs' claim in respect of nankar allowance and forms the subject-matter of issues 11 and 12.

The learned Subordinate Judge has gone into this matter in great detail as will be found from his finding on issue 11, and has held that Mt. Ramkali's share in the entire nankar payable to the family comes to Rs. 109-0-9 This account is admitted by both the parties Indeed no arguments were addressed to us by any side in regard to this question. The plaintiffs have claimed a declaration with respect to Rs. 108-0-9, because this is the sum entered in the deed of gift executed by Mt. Ramkali in favour of the defendants

The only point which was argued during the course of the arguments in this Court was the point, whether the fact that Mt. Ahbaran Kuar had received the nankar of the shares of Ambika and Harpal and whether by such receipt her adverse possession could be made out. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that although Mt Ahbaran Kuar enjoyed the nankar allowance of Harpal and Ambika's shares, she acquired no rights in them, for regarding the latter's share she could not have any adverse possession during the lifetime of Mt Ramkali and also because she was in possession of the whole property with the consent of Mt Ramkali. Regarding Harpal's share the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the adverse possession of Mt. Ahba-Kuar regarding these rights could not be held to have been established, because she was in possession of all the property with the permission of the plaintiffs, and apart from this she had been in possession only for nine years. We are in entire agreement with this view of the learned Subordinate Judge. Nothing was shown in argument to show that this finding of the learned Judge is wrong We may state as a general principle relating to the nankar allowance that the mere fact that the plaintiffs have not received their allowance for some years would not destroy the right to the said allowance It is a recurring right and in order to establish adverse possession in respect of such a right it must be clearly established by cogent evidence that the right of the plaintiffs to receive the nankar was clearly and openly denied to their knowledge, and that after such denial, the person setting up adverse possession had been continually in receipt thereof by virtue of such an asserted right. We have looked into the record to find evidence of this character, but we have not been able to discover any evidence led by the defendants, which could the considered to be of the nature indicated by us above. Under these circumstances we are compelled to hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration prayed for by them in respect of the nankar allowance and that their right to it has not bee extinguished by the alleged adverse possession.

As to point No. 6.

Whether Mt. Ramkali was the absolute owner of the four plots of land in villag Debai, which had fallen to her share at the time of partion ?

This point relates to the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of plots Nos 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1719 situate in village Debai, and forms the subject of issues 9 and 10 (The judgment discussed evidence in respect of this point and held that in respect of these plots of land the plaintiffs are entitled to a half share by virtue of the partition in their own right; they are also entitled to 1/3rd out of half allotted to Mt. Ramkali of which she must be deemed to have been in possession as the widow of Ambika Bakhsh Singh. The plaintiffs' claim must, therefore, be decreed in respect of half plus 1/3rd, i e 5/6th in the entire four plots mentioned above, which constitute the proprietors' grove. The plaintiffs' claim regarding one-sixth must be dismissed. The deed of gift executed by Mt. Ramkali in favour of the defendants can, therefore, be deemed to be valid only to the extent of 1/6th of those plots, which consitute the property of Mt. Ramkali Kuar by adverse possession. The judgment then proceeded). As to point No. 7. There is one more point, which is not covered by the six points which we have stated in the earlier portion of our judgment. This is the point relating to the plaintiffs' right to claim the lessor's right in respect of the land regarding which Mt. Ramkali executed the lease in favour of the defendants for a period of thirty years. This lease was executed by her on 6th November 1922, the same date on which the gift in favour of the defendants was executed by her. It is Ex. B 89 and will be found to be printed on P. R. 65. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs argued that even if Mt. Ramkali be considered to be the full owner of the property covered by the lease, they would be entitled to the lessors' right and to actual possession after the expiration of the period for which lease had been executed as heirs of Mt. Ramkali. The defendants objected that this claim of the plaintiffs could not be entertained, since they had not put it forward in their plaint as amended in the Court below This is undoubtedly so, but an application was made before us during the course of arguments on behalf of the plaintiffs asking our permission to amend the plaint so as to include this claim of the plaintiffs as well In order to meet the ends of justice we have allowed this amendment. Indeed the defendant's counsel did not press any objection to such amendment. The amendment, was, therefore, allowed. After having allowed the amendment we called upon the defendant's counsel to state whether Chandra Sekhar, Chandra Bhal, Baldeo and Surendra Bakhsh, plaintiffs 1 to 4 and the husband of plaintiff 5 were entitled to this property as streedhan heirs to Mt. Ramkali. The defendants' counsel admitted this to be the case. In view of this admission we hold that so far as the property covered by the lease dated 6th November 1922 (Ex. B 89) is concerned, the plaintiffs are entitled at present to the rights of Mt. Ramkali as a lessor and to actual possession after the expiration of the period of 30 years fixed in the lease.

The result of all these findings is that the plaintiffs' claim with regard to all the properties in regard to which their claim was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge will be maintained They will be given also a decree in respect of the property situate in village Debai in regard to which we have held that Mt Ramkali's adverse possession is not established and in respect of four plots of land mentioned above to the extent of 5/6ths. The plaintiffs will also be entitled to the house and the well provided they are found to stand on the property decreed to the plaintiffs as decided by the lower Court The question of mesne profits and damages will also be subsequently decided in accordance with the findings given by us above. We, therefore, allow the appeal of the plaintiffs (F C A 141 of 1927) to this extent that they will, besides the property decreed to them by the Court below, also get a decree in respect of the share situate in village Debai, District Fyzabad, the mutation of which stood in the name of Mt. Ramkali at the time of her death, and in respect of 5/6ths share in plots Nos 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1719 situate in patti Chandra Sekhar, mahal Gaya Prasad, of the aforesaid village Debai They will also be entitled to the lessor's interest in respect of the property covered by the lease dated 6th November 1922 (Ex. B 89). We dismiss the appeal of the defendants (F. C. A 142 of 1927). As to costs our order is that the plaintiffs will get costs of both the Courts in proportion to the property decreed to them, whereas the defendants-respondents will pay their own costs in both the Courts.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 43 of 1928, Decided on 27th February 1929, from order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 3rd September 1928.

 (a) Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920), S. 3—Wakf for benefit of specified person or class of persons such as kindreds, dependants and others is not a trust for a public purpose.

The signification of "charity" is very wide in the Mahomedan law generally and it is wider in the Imamia law. Provision for the maintenance of one's kindred, dependants, servants and persons occupying similar position in relation to the wakf is "charity" in the eyes of the Mahomedan law and a wakf made in favour of any such person or class of persons is a valid wakf. But it cannot be said according to the same law that every wakf made for the benefit of a specified person or class of persons including persons and class of persons of the character described above is a trust for a "public purpose." [P 227 C1,2]

(b) Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920) — Scope and applicability—Mussalman Wakf Act, (42 of 1923).

A trust covered by the provisions of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act of 1920, is not to be so wide in its purpose as a wakf under the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923. The Act of 1923 deals with a trust by a person professing the Mussalman faith whatever its purpose public or private or partly public and partly private. On the other hand, the Act of 1920 covers such trusts only as are created or exist for a public purpose only. [P 228 C 1]

(c) Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920), S. 3—Interpretation of words "public purpose"—Real substance and primary intention of creator must be looked at.

The words "public purpose" in S. 3 of the Act of 1920 should not be interpreted in such a sense as to allow a trust which is created or exists for a public purpose in its substance and essence though supplemented by an illusory or wholly trifling provision, the purpose of which may not be public or may be even private to be taken out of the provisions of the Act of 1920. The real substance of the trust and the primary intention of the creator of the trust must be looked at in every case. [P 228 C 1]

(d) Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920)—Applicability.

The Act of 1920 applies only to those cases where the entire benefit "under the wakf or trust is allotted for public purposes:" A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 253, Appl. [P 229 C 1]

(e) Mussalman Wakf Act (42 of 1923), S. 4—Trust partly private and partly public—Interested person can apply under S. 4—Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, S. 3, is not applicable.

Where a trust is of a public nature any person having an interest in the said trust is entitled to make the application contemplated by S. 3, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act of 1920, but he is not so entitled if the purpose of the trust created by a Mahomedan is partly public and partly private. In the latter case his remedy lies to make an application under S. 4 of the Act of 1923. [P 229 C 1]

(f) Mussalman Wakf Act (42 of 1923)—Definition of wakf.

Per Rafa, J.—"Wakf" as defined in the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923, includes wakfs of all kinds except such wakf as is described in S. 3, Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913, under which any benefit is for the time being claimable for himself by the person by whom the wakf was created or by any of his family or descendants. ## Opinion

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C. J.—(18*th February* 1929), This reference has arisen out of proceedings taken under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act of 1920, in the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow. Facts material to the reference are few and simple. The applicant Saiyid Shabbir Husain purporting to act under the Mussalman Wakf Act 1923 furnished particulars required by S 3 of that Act to the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow in respect of certain immovable property which he holds in the character of a mutwalli. Following on the heels of this act of Saiyid Shabbir Husain, the respondent Sheikh Ashiq Husain made an application, purporting to fall within the provisions of S. 3, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act 1920, to obtain an order embodying ceatain directions to be issued to Saiyed Shabbir Husain for compliance. Amongst others two objections were raised by the applicant to the last mentioned application:(1) that the Act of 1920 did not apply to the trust of which Saiyid Shabbir Husain was the mutwalli and (2) that Sheikh Ashiq Husain was not a "person having an interest" in the said trust. The learned District Judge rejected the objections and issued certain directions which he thought necessary in the circumstances of the case to be complied with by the applicant Saiyid Shabbir Husain in relation to the trust of which he was the trustee. As against this exercise of jurisdiction by the learned District Judge an application in revision under S 115, Civil P C was preferred to this Court. That application came for hearing in due course before a Bench consisting of my learned brothers G N Misra and M. Raza. Having regard to the importance of the questions involved in the case the learned Judges who constituted the Division Bench referred the following questions for decision by a Full Bench:

1. Whether the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920) applies to the cases of mixed wakfs or trusts where a portion of the benefit is allotted for private purposes and a portion for public purposes so far as the latter portion is concerned or whether it applies only to those cases where the entire benefit under the wakf or trust is allotted for public purposes ?

2. Whether a person interested in a public religious or charitable wakf is entitled to make an application under S. 3, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920), when the trustee of the said wakf has already furnished to the Court all the particulars and accounts relating to the wakf under Ss.3 and 5, Mussalman Wakf Act (42 of 1923) ?

The questions raised in the reference clearly involve the task of interpreting the provisions of the Act of 1920 and also of the Act of 1923 This in itself is a difficult task and the difficulty is enhanced by the fact that there is no precedent before us to which we can turn for help or guidance In the circumstances I must proceed to determine the interpretation required of us by the aid of general principles. The first principle to which I should resort is that we should so construe these Acts as to avoid overlapping of or conflict between the provisions contained therein The second principle to which also appeal may legitimately be made for the purpose before us is to take aid from accepted interpretation of provisions of law enacted for purposes akin or similar to the purposes of the Acts with which we are concerned, but the primary principle of interpretation to which all other principles must yield is to construe the provisions in accordance with the natural and obvious meaning of the words used therein.

That part of S. 3 of the Act of 1920, which is relevant for the purposes of the reference is as follows:

"Any person having an interest in any express or constructive trust created or existing for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature may apply."

To answer the first question we must assume that the trust in question is neither a trust for a "public purpose" nor for a private purpose, but it is a trust partly for a public purpose and partly for a private purpose, if I may be permitted to use the last mentioned phrase. There is no dispute before us that the whole of the trust in question is of a charitable if not also of a religious nature Even if there were any dispute in this behalf, as I understood the Mahomedan law, I should have no hesitation in holding that the nature of the present trust is certainly charitable. The signification of "charity" is very wide in the Mahomedan law generally and it is wider in the Imamia law Provision for the maintenance of one's kindred, dependants, servants and persons occupying similar position in relation to the wakf is "charity" in the eyes of the Mahomedan law and a wakf made in favour of any such person or class of persons is a valid wakf. But can it be said according to the same law that every wakf made for the benefit of a specified person or class of persons including persons and class of persons of the character described above is a trust for a "public purpose" ? My answer is in the negative Mahomedan law includes the Imamia law, and this is the particular law with which we are concerned in the present case, clearly recognizes a distinction between a public trust and a trust in which specified persons or class of persons are the immediate objects of the bounty of the author of the trust. When realizing and appreciating the difference between the two trusts just now mentioned it is essential to bear in mind the doctrine of cypres also. It may be that when the persons or the class of persons for the maintenance of whom the trust provides become extinct in course of time, the doctrine of cypres comes into operation in administering the trust.

In the deed of trust in the present case I can find no trace of a dedication of a specified sum of money for the purpose of being spent on the poor and the needy in general. Indeed there are no words of dedication at all. Specified sums of money are allotted for the benefit of specified individuals and this allotment consumes the bulk of the trust property. The balance is left in the hands of the trustee for being utilized according to his direction on objects of charity at large and it is with reference to this balance that the learned Judges of the Division Bench from which this reference has come speak of the settlement as a wakf for a public purpose.

We must assume that the legislature in enacting the provisions of the two Acts mentioned above was aware of the distinction which exists in law between a trust for a public purpose and a trust for a private purpose, yet we find that in enacting S. 3 of the Act of 1920 the words used by the legislature are "trust for a public purpose" and that it has not used the words "or partly public and partly private purpose." But what is still more significant is that the legislature has not used the word "wakf" either in S. 3 or in any other section of the Act of 1920. When we come to the Act of 1923, we find that the Act exclusively deals with "wakf" made by a person professing the Mussalman faith. In the Act of 1920 no definition of the word "trust" is given. On the other hand the word "wakf" is defined in Cl (e) S 2 of the Act of 1923 and the definition is as follows :

"Wakf means the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for any purpose recognized by the Mussalman law as religious, pious or charitable. . . . . ."

We have seen that in S. 3 of the former Act the words used are "for a public purpose," but the words in the section of the later Act are "for any purpose" It follows that a trust covered by the provisions of the Act of 1920 is not to be so wide in its purpose as a wakf under the Act of 1923 The conclusion which we draw, therefore, is that the Act of 1923 deals with a trust by a person professing the Mussalman faith whatever its purpose public or private or partly public and partly private On the other hand, the Act of 1920 covers such trusts only as are created or exist for a public purpose only. As we are dealing with the case of a trust created by a person professing the Mussalman faith my observations, therefore, should be read as relevant to the case of that nature alone. The legislature has not thought fit so far to enact a law on the lines of the Act of 1923 with respect to a trust created by a person professing any other faith than the Mussalman faith

Clearly when interpreting the words "public purpose" in S. 3 of the Act of 1920 we should not interpret them in such a sense as to allow a trust which is created or exists for a public purpose in its substance and essence though supplemented by an illusory or wholly trifling provision, the purpose of which may be not public or may be even private to be taken out of the provisions of the Act of 1920. We must look to the real substance of the trust and the primary intention of the creator of the trust in every case.

If the argument advanced by the learned Judge of the Court below and repeated before us by the learned advocate for the respondent to the effect that the words "public purpose" include purposes which are partly public and partly private were accepted, the result in so far as the Mussalmans are concerned will be that the substantial provisions of the two Acts will overlap each other, and some of the provisions will come into a clash. Indeed to my mind the later Act of 1923 will become mostly superfluous Every purpose aimed at and object intended to be secured by the Act of 1923 in so far as the Mussalmans are concerned shall have been amply fulfilled and realized under the provisions of the earlier Act of 1920 Such a result we should obviously avoid to reach

Section 12 of the Act of 1923 says that nothing in that Act shall affect any other enactment for the time being in force in British India providing for the control or supervision of religious or charitable endowments. This provision clearly shows that the later Act of 1923 was not intended to have the effect of superseding the earlier Act of 1920 in so far as the Mussalmans were concerned. The law under the two Acts, therefore, must be administered simultaneously, and if both the Acts are held to cover the same subject-matter qua the Mussalmans, we may find contradictory orders passed by Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction. I am, therefore, of opinion that the trust in the present case not being a trust for a public purpose only as the order of reference assumes that it is not, the provisions of the Act of 1920 are inapplicable are the same in both the sections The decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Gopal Lal v. Purna Chandra (1) on the construction of the words "public purpose" in S. 539 of the former Civil P. C is therefore relevant In that case the trustee was directed to spend money out of the income of the trust property on the worship of certain family idols. Such a trust was held to he a private trust and therefore not falling within the purview of S. 539 of the old Civil P. C.

The enactments in S. 3 of the Act of 1920 and in S 92, Civil P. C , 1908, are clearly pari materia and the words :

"express or constructive trust created for public purpose of a charitable or religious nature"

My answer to the first question therefore is that the Act of 1920

"applies only to those cases where the entire benefit under the wakf or trust is allotted for public purposes."

My answer to the second question is that where a trust is of a public nature any person having an interest in the said trust is entitled to make the application contemplated by S 3 of the Act of 1920, but that he is not so entitled if the purpose of the trust is partly public and partly private. In the latter case his remedy lies to make an application under S. 4 of the Act of 1923. The defaulting mutwalli is liable to be penalized under the provisions of S. 10 of the same Act.

Misra, J (18th February 1929).—I would also answer the two questions referred by the Division Bench in the same way as answered by the learned Acting Chief Judge. It appears to me to be clear on referring to the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Act (Act 42 of 1923) that the cases of mixed wakfs or trusts where a portion of the benefit is allotted for private purposes and a portion for public purposes must be governed by the provisions of the said Act Where, however, the entire benefit under the wakf or trust was allotted for public purposes the case would fall under the provisions of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (Act 14 of 1920) One difficulty in taking up this position was, however; pointed out by the learned advocate for the respondent that the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923 applied only to cases where the wakf was admitted and that in cases where it was denied that such a wakf did exist there was no remedy open to a person interested in the said wakf to take action under the provisions of the said Act On reading the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Act (Act 42 of 1923), it appears to me that under S 3 of that Act an obligation has been laid upon every mutwalli of a wakf covered by the said Act to furnish to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property of the wakf of which he is the mutwalli is situated, a statement containing the particulars relating to the wakf property and other matters mentioned in the said section. Where no such statement is filed by a mutwalli or when an incorrect statement has been filed by him or where he has omitted to enter in the statement matters mentioned in the said section, an application can be made to the Court of the District Judge seeking relief in regard to these matters and the Court is directed to make an inquiry into the matter in order to enable it to pass a suitable order in connexion therewith. The Court has also been given power by the legislature to inflict penalty upon the person found to be guilty of having not complied with the provisions of the Act. This will be clear from S. 10 of the said Act. If, therefore, a mutwalli of a wakf which is a mixed wakf, that is, where a portion of the benefit is allotted for private purposes and a portion for public purposes has not chosen to file a statement on the ground that he does not admit the wakf of which he happens to be a mutwalli to be a wakf at all, an interested person can seek the assistance of the Court, and if the mutwalli does not satisfy the Court after due proof that the trust of which he happens to be a mutwalli is not a wakf within the provisions of the Mahomedan law, he will be liable to punishment under S. 10 of the said Act. The provisions of that section also declare that he will have to show a reasonable cause for his default This reasonable cause can only be determined after inquiry has been made by the Court.

If on inquiry he is found that he was a mutwalli of a wakf as defined in the said Act and, therefore, bound to file a statement as required by S. 3 of the said Act, he will be liable to be punished under the said section. I may also point out that under S 11, Mussalman Wakf Acts, 1923, the Local Government has been given power to frame rules to carry into effect the purposes of the said Act. The mere fact, therefore, that there is no express provision in the Act itself for a regular procedure in respect of an inquiry to be made into an alleged reasonable cause under S. 10 is no ground for holding that there can be no inquiry It was also urged that there is no provision in the Act for any appeal. To that the obvious reply is that the legislature might have intended that a person who is punished under S. 10 shall not be given any further remedy. The intention may well have been to treat the inquiry as purely a summary inquiry, and not one open to appeal. I am, therefore, of opinion that the objection of the learned advocate for the respondent cannot be sustained.

I am also in agreement with the learned Acting Chief Judge that in determining the question whether a trust is one intended purely for a public purpose, the substance of the trust and the real intention of the author of the trust have to be looked into In cases where substantial portion of the property is dedicated for a private purpose, it cannot be said that the dedication is one for public purpose simply because a portion of the property is given for public purposes.

As regards the second question I am also of the same opinion as the learned Acting Chief Judge that a person who is interested in a public, religious or charitable wakf is entitled to make an application under S 3 of the Charitable and Religious Trust Act (Act 14 of 1920) and that his right to apply is not taken away simply because the trustee has filed particulars and accounts relating to the wakf under Ss 3 and 5, Mussalman Wakf Act (Act 42 of 1923) It would be open to the Court in such a case to direct the applicant to refer to and inspect the statement and the accounts already filed by the trustee under the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923.

Raza, J. (18*th February* 1929)—I would also answer the two questions which have been referred to the Full Bench for decision in the way in which they have been answered by the Hon'ble Acting Chief Judge. I have very few words to add to the judgments that have been already delivered in this case. I think " wakf " as defined in the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923 includes wakfs of all kinds except such wakf as is described in S 3 of the Mussalman wakf Validating Act of 1913 under which any benefit is for the time being claimable for himself by the person by whom the wakf was created or by any of his family or descendants. Act 14 of 1920 was enacted to provide facilities for the obtaining of information regarding trusts created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. In my opinion Act 14 of 1920 does not apply to a wakf which is partly a private endowment and partly a public endowment The Act which applies to such a wakf is Act 42 of 1923. In this case the wakf is not denied. The mutwalli admits the wakf and he has duly complied with the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923. It need not be decided in this case whether under the Musalman Wakf Act of 1923 the "Court" has power to determine as to whether any property which is denied to be wakf property, is wakf property within the meaning of the Act. That question does not arise in this case and may be left out of consideration

By Court (18*th February* 1929).—The reference is returned to the Bench concerned with the judgments of the members of the Full Bench.

Misra and Raza, JJ. (27*th February* 1929.)—The facts of the case are given at length in our referring order dated 8th January 1929 The following questions were referred to the Full Bench for decision .

1. " Whether the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (Act 14 of 1920) applies to the cases of mixed wakfs or trusts, where a portion of the benefit is allotted for private purposes and a portion for public purposes, so far as the latter portion is concerned, or, whether it applies only to those cases where the entire benefit under the wakf or trust is allotted for public purposes ?"

2. " Whether a person interested in a public, religious or charitable wakf is entitled to make an application under S. 3, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (Act 14 of 1920), when the trustee of the said wakf has already furnished to the Court all the particulars and accounts, relating to the wakf under Ss. 3 and 5, Mussalman Wakf Act (Act 42 of 1923)?"

The Full Bench has answered the questions thus :

(1) The Act of 1920 applies only to those cases where the entire benefit under the wakf or trust is allotted for public purposes."

(2) " Where a trust is of a public nature any person having an interest in the said trust is entitled to make the application contemplated by S. 3 of the Act of 1920, but that he is not so entitled if the purpose of the trust is partly public and partly private. In the latter case his remedy lies to make an application under S. 4 of the Act of 1923."

The result is that the application filed by Sheikh Ashiq Husain in the Court of the District Judge, Lucknow, is not maintainable. We, therefore, accept this application for revision and dismiss the application of Ashiq Husain with costs in both the Courts.

Where the judgment-debtor is proved to have paid money due from him under a decree passed by the Court to the receiver appointed by the Court for realizing sums of money and making payment to the decree-holder, and the receiver is found subsequently to have misappropriated the money, the judgment-debtor should be absolved from his liability and the loss should not fall upon him. If the property which came into the hands of a receiver appointed by the Court and which was to be sold by him for the purpose of making payments awarded to the different decree-holders, has been misappropriated by him, the loss must be borne rateably by the decree-holders in proportion to the amount of their decrees. It is a well accepted maxim of interpretation that an enactment includes all the incidents or consequences necessarily resulting from it. Thus when money payable under a decree is paid by a judgment-debtor in accordance with the direction of the Court which made the decree the act of payment must involve, to save itself from utter futility, the necessary consequence of freedom of the judgment debtor from his liability under the decree : (1894) *A. ### Opinion

Misra, J.—(8th December 1928). The question which has been referred to the Full Bench for decision is as follows :

"Where the judgment-debtor is proved to have paid money due from him under a decree passed by the Court, to the receiver appointed by the Court for realizing certain sums of money and making payments to the decree-holder or decree-holders, or other money or property is proved to have come to his hands and the receiver is found to have misappropriated the money and the property on whom should the loss fall ? Should the loss fall on the judgment-debtor or on the judgment-creditor ?"

The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the order of reference. For our purposes it is only necessary to state that in an administration suit brought by the respondent, Mt. Brij Indra Kunwar, it was decided that she, along with certain other persons, was entitled to a particular sum as annuity as provided in the will of her father, Thakur Rajendra Bahadur Singh and a decree for the amount due to her was passed. Certain property moveable and immovable, was held liable for the payment of these annuities The moveable property consisted of cash, Government securities and certain debts The immovable property consisted of certain villages situate in the Kheri District The first Court directed the sale of the Government securities as well as of the immovable property and also the realization of the debts the proceeds whereof was to be spent in paying the annuities both past and future. It also appointed a receiver authorizing him to realize the debts and to sell the properties if necessary and to pay therefrom to the annuitants their past arrears as well as the sums that were to accrue due in future.

On appeal the Court of the late Judicial Commissioner modified the decree only to this extent that it held that if the defendant judgment-debtor deposited a certain amount of money the immovable property should not be sold. It calculated the amount of money which the judgment-debtor should deposit in order to prevent the sale of the immovable property We may also indicate that the annuitants were only to enjoy the amounts of their annuities for their lives and the property moveable and immovable which was charged with the payment of the said annuities was to go to the judgment-debtor to the extent of what remained available after the payment of the said annuities.

The receiver appointed by the first Court did not furnish any security. He, however, realized certain debts and the Government securities were also handed over to him. Besides, the judgment-debtor paid to him certain sums of money which he was liable to pay to the various annuitants of whom the plaintiff respondent was one. The receiver has misappropriated the securities and has also embezzled the sums of money paid to him by the judgment-debtor as well as realized by him on account of debts, He has absconded and no trace of him can now be found

The question which has now been referred to us is regarding the sums paid to the receiver by the judgment-debtor or realized by him, and the securities that came into his hands and which he has either embezzled or misappropriated. As to the sums of money paid to the receiver by the judgment-debtor or realized by him I am of opinion that the judgment-debtor must be considered as absolved from the liability of the payment of the said sum and I proceed to give my reasons for arriving at this conclusion.

Under O. 21, R. 2, it is provided that all money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows namely:

(a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree ; or,

(b) out of Court to the decree-holder; or,

(c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs.

The rule further provides that where any payment is made under Cl. (a), sub-R. 1, notice of such payment shall be given to the decree-holder. It appears to me to be clear from the above provisions that where a judgment-debtor pays money either into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree or in a manner directed by the Court, the payment is considered to be as good a payment as one made by the judgment-debtor out of Court to the decree-holder himself. Where the payment is made in accordance with the direction of the Court it is not necessary to give any notice of such payment to the decree-holder The judgment-debtor if he makes such payment is absolved from his liability. To illustrate my meaning I would take the case where a warrant of attachment of the property of a judgment-debtor is issued and handed over for execution to the bailiff of the Court under the provisions of O 21, R 30, Civil P. C., or where a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor is similarly handed over to the bailiff for execution under the provisions of O. 21, R 38 of the Code. The form of the warrant of attachment will be found on No 8 of Appendix B attached to the Civil Procedure Code and the form of the warrant for arrest in execution will be found on No. 13 of the same Appendix It will appear from those two forms of warrant that the execution is deemed complete when the amount of money entered in the warrant is paid by the judgment-debtor to the bailiff of the Court. On the payment of the said sum by the judgment-debtor, the bailiff is to return the warrant with a report that it has been carried into effect If then the money paid by the judgment-debtor to the bailiff is embezzled by the latter the judgment-debtor cannot be considered to be liable to pay the said sum a second time. The bailiff of the Court is an officer of the Court and the payment to him is in accordance with the direction of the Court entered in the warrant The conclusion therefore to which I have arrived is that if the money is paid by the judgment-debtor either into the hands of the decree-holder or to an officer of the Court in accordance with the directions of the Court he must be deemed to be absolved from all future liability of making another payment.

It is clear from the facts stated in the order of reference that the Court of the Second Additional District Judge of Lucknow gave to the receiver appointed in this case directions to realize the money both from the judgment-debtor and from other sources mentioned in the judgment. If the judgment-debtor therefore made payments to the receiver his payments will be considered to have been made to an officer of the Court in accordance with the directions of the Court and the payments so made must be considered to be good so far as he (the judgment-debtor) is concerned.

As remarked in the order of reference there are not many cases on the subject The matter seems to have come up before the Madras High Court in a case reported in Orr v Muthia Chetti (1) and in an appeal from that very decision which will be found reported in Muthia Chetti v. Orr (2). This was a case in which a receiver had been appointed at the instance of the judgment-creditor under S 503, Civil P. C., 1882, for the purpose of realizing money due to the judgment-debtor from certain tenants The money was collected by the receiver but was subsequently misappropriated by him. The question for decision was whether the collection of the amount by the receiver had discharged the judgmeut-debtor from his liability. Muttusami Ayyar J., held that the receiver though appointed at the instance of the decree-holder could not be considered to be his agent but must be deemed to be a custodian of the property on behalf of the parties to the case, and such being the case if there occurred a loss from the default of the receiver, the estate must bear the loss. In the appellate Court the case was heard by a Bench of two Judges consisting of Shephard and Davies, JJ , Shephard, J , took the same view as had been taken by Muthusami Ayyar, J. Davies, J , however, took a different view His opinion was that when a judgment-debtor paid the money into Court or otherwise as directed by the Court the judgment-debtor must be considered as having discharged the decretal debt He was of opinion that a receiver ought to be considered as an officer of the Court and any payment made to such officer should be treated as effectual as a payment made directly into Court. I am in entire agreement with the opinion of Davies, J., and the analysis of O. 21, R. 1, given in the earlier portion of this judgment satisfies me that the view taken by Davies, J., is correct.

The same conclusion appears to me to be deducible if we look at the case from another aspect. Reading Rr. 1 and 2, O. 21, together it would appear that where a payment is made out of Court to a decree-holder it is necessary that such payment should be certified to the Court in order that the judgment-debtor may be exonerated from the liability of making the payment again The payment may be certified either on the application of the judgment-debtor or that of the decree-holder. No such certification is provided for in the case where the money is paid into Court or where the money is paid according to the direction of the Court. Where money is paid into Court under Cl (a), sub-R. (1) or according to the direction of the Court under Cl (c), sub-R (1) the obvious reason for not requiring certification in these cases is that the payment is considered to be effective. I would therefore answer the first portion of the reference in this way that where the judgment-debtor is proved to have paid money due from him under a decree passed by the Court to the receiver appointed by the Court for realizing sums of money and making payment to the decree-holder and the receiver is found subsequently to have misappropriated the money, the judgment-debtor should be absolved from his liability and the loss should not fall upon him The loss in such a case must fall on the judgment-creditor to whom it would be open to sue the receiver or to take such other remedy as he may be advised to take but he cannot be allowed to recover the said money again from the judgment-debtor

As to the property which is proved to have come to the hands of the receiver and which he has misappropriated, my answer would similarly be that if the property which came into the hands of the receiver and was to be sold by him for the purpose of making payments awarded to the different decree-holders, the loss must be borne rateably by the decree-holders, in proportion to the amount of their decrees The loss must fall on all the judgment-creditors and not upon one of them I am clear in my mind that the Government securities, which were to go into the hands of the receiver and which actually did come into his hands but were subsequently misappropriated by him, were directed by the Court to be sold and the sale proceeds were to be appropriated in making payments to the different annuitants including the plaintiff-respondent in whose favour the decrees had been passed in the administration suit

The judgment-debtor for the reason stated above cannot be made to suffer the loss since the property which had to come into the hands of the receiver did actually reach his hands. My answer to the second part of the reference therefore is that in such a case the loss should not fall on the judgment-debtor but should fall on all the judgment-creditors rateably in proportion to the amount of their decrees.

(1) [1894] 17 Mad. 501.
(2) [1897] 20 Mad. 224 (F. B.).

With these two answers I would return the record to the Bench concerned

Raza, J—(17th December 1928). I am in entire agreement with the opinion expressed by my learned brother Gokaran Nath Misra, J In my opinion also the receiver should be considered to be an officer of the Court and any payments made to such officer should be treated as effectual as payments made directly into Court I see no reason why should the judgment-debtor suffer when he paid the money into Court or out of the Court to the decree-holder or otherwise as directed by the Court I would also answer the question referred to the Full Bench for decision in the manner in which it has been answered by my learned brother Gokaran Nath Misra, J

Wazir Hssan, Ag C. J.—(22nd December 1928). This is a reference to the Full Bench for decision of the following question :

" Where the judgment-debtor is proved to have paid money, due from him under a decree passed by the Court, to the receiver appointed by the Court for realizing certain sums of money and making payments to the decree-holder or decree-holders, or other money or property is proved to have come to his hands and the receiver is found to have misappropriated the money and the property, on whom should the loss fall ? Should the loss fall on the judgment-debtor or on the judgment-creditor ? "

The question stated above clearly assumes the fact that a judgment-debtor has in satisfaction of a decree and a claim against him paid money or delivered property but that he has done so not directly to the decree-holder but to a receiver appointed by the Court. On that fact it must be held that the act of the judgment-debtor is accepted as referable only to his liability under the decree and to the other claim of the same decree-holder and to no other liability It is admitted that the judgment-debtor's discharge of the liability under the decree or the claim would have been complete had he paid the money or delivered the property to the decree-holder. The controversy, therefore, centres round the question as to whether the payment of the money or the delivery of property not to the decree-holder but to the receiver gives in law the same result or not. This brings me at once to the consideration of the circumstances in which and the objects for which the receiver was appointed by the Court in this particular case. According to the order of reference the receiver was appointed by the same Court which had passed the decree and which was seised with a suit for the administration of the judgment-debtor's assets and was appointed for the purpose of realizing debts that might be due to the estate of the judgment-debtor and also to sell his properties, if necessary, with directions as to the ultimate destination of the proceeds and that was to pay the decree-holder in satisfaction of the decree and also in satisfaction of a future claim of annuity If such were the directions and the object of the Court in making the appointment of the receiver it follows that he had the authority of the Court to receive the judgment-debtor's money and property in satisfaction of the decree and the claim of the annuitants That the Court could in exercise of its powers with which it is invested by law prescribe a mode for satisfaction of the decree by the judgment-debter is beyond doubt—see Cl (c), sub-R 1, R 1, O. 21, Civil P C In this particular case the mode prescribed was payment to the receiver I hold, therefore, that when the judgment-debtor paid money to the receiver with the object of satisfying the decree or the claim against him and also delivered property to him for the same object his act in doing so was an act in accordance with the directions of the Court and, therefore, valid. The same conclusion is reached by considering the effect of the provisions of S. 51, Civil P. C. Those provisions authorize the Court to order execution of the decree :

(a) by delivery of any property specifically decreed,
(b) .....
(c) .....
(d) by appointing a receiver,
(e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require.

In arriving at the result mentioned above I have not felt much difficulty but my difficulty arises now. R. 1, O. 21, Civil P. C , says that all money payable under a decree shall be paid in any of the three ways mentioned in Cls. (a), (b) and sub-R (1) respectively. The rule does not proceed to state that if money is paid in accordance with any of the three modes the decree shall stand satisfied and the judgment-debtor absolved of his liability under the decree in its entirety or proportionately as the case may be. But if this is not so expressed in words can it be said that the same is not intended by necessary implication? I think not. In my opinion that rule must mean two things: (1) The mode in which a judgment-debtor must pay money under a decree and that he shall not pay in any other mode and (2) that if he has so paid he has discharged his liability under the decree.

Perhaps the implication is clearer in cases where the Court is to certify payment or adjustment of a decree and the certificate has been recorded. On the circumstances it must be held that the present case is not a case of that nature. The payment or an act done in accordance with the rule will become wholly illusory unless it be held that the rule impliedly includes all the incidents or consequences strictly resulting from it When money payable under a decree is paid by a judgment-debtor in accordance with the direction of the Court which made the decree the act of payment must involve to save itself from utter futility the necessary consequence of freedom of the judgment-debtor from his liability under the decree. It is a well accepted maxim of interpretation that an enactment includes all the incidents or consequences necessarily resulting from it. An illustration of this maxim will be found in the case of West India Improvement Co v Attorney-General of Jamaica and Fraser (3). On these grounds my answer to the question is the same as given by my learned brother Misra, J.

By Court —(22*nd December* 1928), The answer to the question is that the loss should fall on the judgment-creditor

Although under R. 70 the provisions of Rr. 66 to 69 are inapplicable to a case in which the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector still the same rule having been made by the Local Government in exercise of its powers under S. 70, a sale in execution of a decree so transferred after the same was postponed sine die is irregular if no fresh proclamation was issued. Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, dated 25th February 1928.

The facts are as follows: Shyam Lal, respondent 1 and others held a decree passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad for a sum of Rs. 16,600 and odd against one B Sitaput Ram, now deceased. Under the provisions of S. 68, Civil P C, proceedings in relation of the execution of this decree were transmitted to the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad and on 27th October 1925 the property in suit was purchased by the respondent Lala Shyam Behari Lal, respondent 4 for a sum of Rs 8,000 at a public auction held by the Deputy Commissioner. B Sitapat Ram died on 3rd November 1925 and on 4th December 1925 the Deputy Commissioner confirmed the sale The appellant is the son of B. Sitapat Ram and the object of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen is to avoid the sale of 27th October 1925 The suit has been dismissed by the Court below as we have already said In support of the prayer for the declaration that the sale was void several grounds were urged before the lower Court, but at the hearing of the appeal before us only such of the grounds were reiterated as we shall state in this judgment.

The property in suit previous to its devolution upon B. Sitapat Ram belonged to Rai Bahadur B Sri Ram, C. I. E., who made a testamentary disposition in respect thereof on 22nd May 1912. On the death of the testator this property together with other properties passed to B. Sitapat Ram under the provisions of the said will and the first ground of the claim is that under those provisions B Sitapat Ram had only a life interest and the remainder came to be vested in the appellant. The learned Subordinate Judge has interpreted the will in question and come to the conclusion that the property in suit devolved on B. Sitapat Ram in absolute estate We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. A Bench of this Court consisting of one of us and Raza, J., had, in a previous case, an occasion to decide this question of the interpretation of the will of Rai Bahadur B Sri Ram. The Bench decided that B. Sitapat Ram acquired proprietary interest under the provisions of Cl. 4 of that will in the properties mentioned in Sch. 4 of the schedule attached to the will. Admittedly the property now in suit is entered in the said schedule. A copy of the judgment dated 9th March 1928, Kamakhya Dat Ram v. Khushal Chand (1), will be attached to this judgment. The will was similarly interpreted in another judgment of this Court dated 9th November 1926, a copy of which is filed on the record of this case (Ex. A-1).

The second argument in support of the appeal is that the sale in question was held in spite of an injunction issued by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares. The facts bearing on this part of the case are that a brother of the appellant, namely, Viddyadat Ram, had filed a suit for partition of the family property including the property now in suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares To this suit his father Sitapat Ram and his brother, the present appellant and other members of the family were made party defendants. Viddyadat Ram during the pendency of the partition suit moved the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares for issue of an injunction to restrain the sale which was being held at Fyzabad in execution of the decree held by respondents 1 to 3 The Subordinate Judge of Benares ordered the desired injunction to issue on 2nd October 1925 (Ex. 11) after due service of notice on the decree-holders, and a copy of the order was also transmitted by means of a letter dated 21st October 1925 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad (Ex. 10) as also to the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad (Ex 21). The last-mentioned letter with a copy of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Benares on 2nd October 1925 reached the hands of the officer in charge of the sale on 26th October 1925 Thereupon the said officer passed the following order

"After a perusal of the said letter and the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner of this District it is ordered that this sale be postponed till further order and the case be laid before this Court tomorrow (Ex 2)."

On the following day, that is 27th October 1925 the sale officer recorded the following order

"This case came up today. As no order for postponement of the sale has been passed by the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, it is ordered that the order dated 26th October 1925 be cancelled and the sale proceedings be resumed."

The result was that the sale was held and concluded on 27th October 1925 as already stated It is not necessary to decide as to whether Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares had jurisdiction to issue the injunction which he had issued We will assume that he had The execution proceedings having gone into the hands of the Deputy Commissioner, of the District the issue of an injunction to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad which had passed the decree originally, was obviously futile. There can be no doubt, however, as the facts stand that the sale was held in teeth of the injunction. The question, therefore is as to whether the sale is void for that reason. We are of opinion that it is not. The matter is wholly covered by two decisions of the Allahabad High Court: The Delhi & London Bank, Ltd. v. Ram Narain (2), Manoher Das v. Ram Autar Pande (3), one decision of the High Court at Madras : Puzhakkal Edom v. Mahadeva Pattar (4), and one decision of the High Court at Lahore: Beli Ram v Ram Lal (5) We are in entire agreement with those decisions. We therefore reject this ground also

The third ground of attack is that the auction sale of 27th October 1925 was confirmed by the Deputy Commissioner on 4th December 1925 without bringing the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor B Sitapat Ram on the record of the execution case and without notice to them and that therefore the sale is void In agreement with the Court below we are unable to accept this argument. The sale had taken place in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor and there are no provisions in the Civil Procedure Code which require legal rspresentatives of a judgment-debtor, who has died after the sale, to be brought on the record for the purposes of confirmation. The case may be different if a judgment-debtor dies before the date of the sale and the sale takes place behind the back of his representatives, but we express no opinion on that point. It may be mentioned that the Deputy Commissioner had directed the issue of notice to the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor under his order dated 11th November 1925 (Ex. 6). Unfortunately notice was not served This fact, however, does not affect the validity of the confirmation.

Another objection urged upon us against the vaidity of the sale is that the defendant-respondent, Lala Shyam Behari Lal, being a pleader of the Court, was prohibited by law from purchasing the property in suit at a public auction. B. Shyam Behari Lal was the pleader in the case both of the decree-holders, Lala Shyam Lal and others and also of his father Lala Gopal Das who was also a decree-holder in whose favour an order for rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale had been made. He was never a pleader of the judgment-debtor. On these facts alone we are not prepared to hold that the sale in question is void. It may be that the pleader in question by purchasing property at an auction sale in execution of a decree in which he was professionally engaged on behalf of the decree-holders, has infringed certain rules of conduct, for instance Rule No 275 of the Oudh Civil Digest. But this cannot be given the effect of invalidating the sale. Our attention was drawn to R. 73, O 21, Civil P. C , in this connexion. We are of opinion that that rule has no application to this case Accordingly, we reject this argument also.

It is contended that the sale in question was conducted with material irregularity which has resulted in substantial injury to the judgment-debtor. This argument is founded on the following facts The sale was originally fixed to be held on 20th October 1925. On that date the officer-in-charge of the sale postponed it for 22nd October 1925 on the ground that no bidders had come (Ex. 13). The proceedings were again placed before the said officer on 26th October 1925 and having regard to the injunction issued by the Subordinate Judge of Benares the said officer passed the following order :

"This sale be postponed till further order and the case be laid before this Court tomorrow" (Ex. 2).

To this order we have already referred. On the following day, that is, on 27th October the sale was resumed and concluded (Ex. 3). It is argued that by the order of 26th October 1925 the sale having been postponed sine die it could not be held on the day following and a fresh proclamation of sale became necessary In support of this argument reliance is placed upon the provisions of O. 21, R 69, Civil P. C.

We accept the argument in so far that the order passed on 26th October 1925 had the effect of postponing the sale sine die ; but under R. 70 the provisions of Rr. 66 to 69 are inapplicable to a case in which the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector and the present case is one in which such a transfer had taken place. This, however, is not conclusive because the same rule has been made by the Local Government in exercise of its powers under S. 70, Civil

(2) [1887] 9 All. 497=(1887) A. W. N. 107.

(5) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 644=6 Lah. 380.

P. C. The rule is R. 986, Government Rule Manual We therefore hold that there was a material irregularity in publishing the sale. But we are not satisfied that the appellant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such an irregularity. An elaborate calculation of the value of the ten items of immovable property sold was made by the learned counsel for the appellant in the course of his argument before us and it was pointed out as against the opinion of the Court below that though portions of the property sold were subject to an encumbrance of over Rs 23,000 every item of the property sold was not so encumbered. But the result of elimination of the unencumbered portions of the property sold leads us to the conclusion that, having regard to the total value of the property sold, appellant might have suffered a loss of Rs. 3,000 on the whole This is a very strict test for judging injury It might be that the property could have fetched Rs. 3,000 more had it been sold privately after prolonged negotiation. In the circumstances we cannot hold that the irregularity has caused any substantial injury.

This disposes of the grounds on which the suit, out of which this appeal arises, is found We will now notice but not decide a plea raised in defence to the effect that the suit was barred by S. 47, Civil P. C. As we are going to dismiss the appeal on merits we refrain from deciding the point raised by this plea.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

E. A Wylie—Petitioner.

v.

R. S. Wylie—Respondent.

Divorce Case No. 1 of 1929, Decided on 15th February 1929.

Divorce Act, S. 19 (1)—Incurable syphilis amounts to impotence—But where woman is discharged from hospital as cured with negative blood test the syphilis is not incurable and her marriage cannot be dissolved.

Incurable syphilis is equivalent to impotence, and that a decree of nullity can be granted to a petitioner who proves that the husband or wife, as the case may be, was suffering from such a disease at the time of marriage, even though the disease is not an absolute bar to copulation. Where a woman is discharged from hospital as cured and her blood test was negative it is much more likely that she was suffering from some curable form of venereal disease than that she was suffering from an incurable form. Syphilis in its early stage is not incurable and, therefore, it cannot be said that she is impotent and that her marriage cannot be set aside on that account 48 Cal. 283, Rel. on [P 239 C 1, 2]

R. I. Waheed—for Applicant.

Moti Lal Saksena—for Respondent.

Judgment —This is a petition brought by Earnest Arthur Wylie who described himself as an Anglo-Indian, in the alternative either for the nullity of his marriage under S 19, Divorce Act, or for dissolution of the same marriage under S. 10 of the same Act The respondent is his wife Mrs. Ruth Shanti Wylie, and it is admitted that the marriage took place on 9th July 1928 in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Lucknow. The petition is contested and there is no question of collusion

In the petition the case set up was that after the respondent came to live with the petitioner the latter discovered that she was suffering from venereal disease, that he did his best to have her treated but in vain and that about the middle of October 1928 she left his house for the hospital and has ever since lived separate from the petitioner. The ground on which the petitioner based his claim for nullity was that the girl was suffering from venereal disease at the time of marriage whereas she and her people had fraudulently given the petitioner to understand that she was "a virgin and healthy and clean," and the petitioner must therefore be held to rely on S 19, Cl. (1), Divorce Act, read with the proviso relating to fraud contained in the same section. It was nowhere alleged in the petition that the petitioner had never cohabited with his wife, nor was this point raised at the time when the issues were framed when the respondent by her written statement had given notice to the petitioner that she herself pleaded continuous cohabitation and suggested that the petitioner himself was suffering from some form of venereal disease.

When the petitioner came into Court he then for the first time stated that immediately after marriage he found in his bride's box a small phial containing pills bearing a label "For Syphilis" and also a bottle of ointment. He at once informed his father who informed his wife, and the girl was taken to one Dr. Padam Singh for examination. The petitioner has stated on oath that owing to the suspicion raised by the finding of the pills and also by the opinion expressd by Dr. Padam Singh he never had any connexion with his wife, although he lived with her in the same room, if not in his father's house, at any rate in a house of which they were the only occupants during the month of September. Naturally there can be no evidence to corroborate either the statement of the petitioner or the respondent on this point. But in my opinion the mere fact that the parties left the petitioner's father's house and went to live together in a house of their own in the city, and stayed there alone for a month renders the petitioner's story incredible. In my opinion this is a mere afterthought based upon a ruling of the Calcutta High Court to which I shall refer later. It is no part of the petitioner's original case and it is untrue (His Lordship then discussed evidence and after concluding that the respondent was suffering from veneral disease and that the same was not purposely concealed from her husband proceeded.) I have now to consider to what relief, if any, the petitioner is entitled. He cannot obtain a divorce because the evidence of adultery is quite unsatisfactory, and that part of his case is not proved.

The question is whether he can obtain a decree of nullity either on the ground that his wife is impotent or on the ground that she was married to him fraudulently. The only ruling of Indian Courts to which I have been referred is that reported in Birendra Kumar v. Hemlata Kumar (1). It is not a judgment which definitely decides any question because the case was remanded in order to ascertain whether the condition of the respondent amounted to impotence There are some observations in the judgment which indicate that in the opinion of the Judges syphilis, at any rate incurable syphilis, amounts to impotence because it is a bar to sexual intercourse This opinion is based upon grounds of public policy and in my opinion it would be proper to hold that incurable syphilis is equivalent to impotence, and that a decree of nullity can be granted to a petitioner who proves that the husband or wife, as the case may be, was suffering from such a disease at the time of marriage, even though the disease is not an absolute bar to copulation. The judgment relies almost exclusively on American rulings and it is not shown that there is any ruling of English Courts which would support the proposition that syphilis is tantamount to impotence, but on this point I am prepared to follow the Calcutta authority which has been brought to my notice. On the other hand I cannot find that the respondent is suffering from an incurable form of syphilis She was discharged from hospital as cured her blood test was negative, and it is much more likely that she was suffering from some curable form of venereal disease than that she was suffering from an incurable form. Indeed it is now not generally supposed that syphilis in its early stage is incurable, though this may not have been known in the year 1920 when the Calcutta Court decided the case of Birendra Kumar v. Hemlata Kumar (1) but it is a fact which must be taken into consideration now. I am therefore not prepared to say that the respondent is impotent and that her marriage can be set aside on that account. As to the allegation of fraud this would depend on proof. The fraud alleged in the petition is that the respondent and her parents gave out that ths girl was "a virgin, healthy and clean." There is no evidence that they did so, although it must be presumed that the petitioner was under the impression that the girl was not diseased when he married her. Something more than this is required to prove a fraud As I have stated above, there is no reason to suppose that the girl's parents had any idea that she was suffering from any venereal disease and she herself may very well have been ignorant as to what her symptoms denoted I cannot therefore find either that the respondent is impotent or that her marriage with the petitioner was obtained by means of fraud, and I am therefore unable, as the law stands, to pass a decree of nullity of marriage I therefore dismiss the suit with costs.

Criminal Revn. No 79 of 1928, Decided on 18th October 1928, against order of Magistrate, 1st Class, Sultanpur, D/- 16th June 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 439—Power of revision is discretionary and should not be used on trifling occasions.

Where accused were bound under Criminal P. C., S. 562, for an offence under S, 323, and where revision was sought for a retrial,

Held . that the revisional powers were discretionary and not meant to be exercised on trifling occasions. [P 240 C 2]

Ghulam Hasan—for Applicant.

Judgment.—In this case the applicants in revision were convicted of causing simple hurt on the following evidence : It was found on the facts that they were accompanying a cart loaded with bones and that some of the bones fell out of the cart They thereupon directed the complainant to help to pick up the bones. He refused to do so. Sattar Khan then seized him and Abdul Hamid Khan and Mohammad Ali Khan beat him with the effect that in addition to other injuries, his nose began to bleed There was evidence of two witnesses to support this story and those witnesses were believed by the Bench of Magistrates On the other side the accused persons told a counter story that the complainant was to blame. Abdul Hamid Khan admitted that he was present. The other two men stated that they were not present. The Bench of Magistrates, who heard the evidence, believed the evidence for the prosecution and disbelieved the evidence for the defence. The Bench convicted these persons but dealt with them only under the provisions of S 560, Criminal P. C. and bound them over to be of good behaviour. They appealed to a Magistrate who dismissed their appeal. The appeal was dismissed on 16th June 1928. The applicants took no further action until 11th October 1928, when they applied to this Court in revision. The revision application requested this Court to re-examine the evidence, to reject the evidence for the prosecution and to accept the evidence for the defence ; in other words to retry this elementary case. I am not of opinion that the revisional powers of this Court are intended to be used in this manner. If they are to be used in this manner it would appear to follow as a logical consequence that every trivial case heard by every Magistrate in which a conviction has taken place should be reheard by the Chief Court. I see no reason to believe that the Bench of Magistrates arrived at a wrong conclusion and I reject this application.

Khaliq-uz-zaman—for Appellant.

H. Husain and Ali Jawad—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession brought by the plaintiff appellant against the defendants-respondents.

The facts of the case are that one Amir, brother of the plaintiff-appellant, was possessed of a 6-pies share in mahal mafi and a 2-annas share in mahal Chhangur, both these mahals being situate in village Baizpur, District Gonda, and a residential house situate in the same village. Amir died in 1912 and according to the custom of the family was succeeded by his widow Mt. Dilasi who died in November 1926. Among the defendants, defendant 1 is the son of one of the brothers of Amir named Wazir who predeceased him, defendants 3, 4 and 5 are his grandnephews being the sons of his nephew Sultan who also predeceased Amir. After the death of Mt Dilasi the revenue Courts ordered mutation in favour of the plaintiff in respect of one-eighth share in the property of Amir and ordered mutation in favour of the defendants to the extent of seven-eighth share in the property in dispute. The present suit has been brought by the plaintiff-appellant for recovery of this seven-eighth share in respect of which the mutation has been made by the revenue Court in favour of the defendants-respondents. The plaintiff-appellant's case is that under the Mahomedan law he, being the brother of Amir, is solely entitled to the entire property left by the deceased and the defendants are not entitled to succeed to it in preference to him.

The only defence that was put forward by the defendants was that under a family and local custom the defendants were entitled to succeed to the property left by Amir along with the plaintiff, the custom set up being that according to it nephews succeed along with the brothers. It was, however, admitted by the defendants that under the Mahomedan law plaintiff would be entitled to the entire property left by Amir.

The sole point for decision before the trial Court, the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, was, therefore, one of custom. The defendants produced both oral and documentary evidence in support of the custom but the learned Subordinate Judge decided the issue against them and held that the custom was not established and on this finding he gave a decree to the plaintiff for seven eighth share in the property left by Amir regarding which mutation had been effected by the revenue Courts in favour of the defendants.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda came to a different conclusion and though he did not believe the oral evidence yet on the interpretation of the documentary evidence in the case decided the question of custom in favour of the defendants and in that view of the case he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff-appellant has now appealed to this Court and the sole contention urged on his behalf before us is that the finding of the learned Additional District Judge that the custom is established cannot be maintained.

We have heard the arguments in this case at great length and we have also gone through the oral and documentary evidence produced by the defendants and have come to the conclusion that the decree of the learned Additional District Judge cannot be maintained and that this appeal must be allowed. We now proceed to give our reasons for the said conclusion. The defendants-respondents produced the village wajib-ul-arz (Ex A-9) and several khewats (Exs A-1 to A-7) in proof of the alleged custom They also examined five witnesses in support of the custom We might also mention that the defendants-respondents filed a long pedigree, attached along with their written statement, showing those members of the family on whose deaths succession had occurred according to the custom alleged.

We first proceed to discuss the documentary evidence The wazib-ul-arz (Ex A-9, recites that if a brother died childless leaving a widow, she would be entitled to succeed to the entire property for her lifetime without any power of alienation and on her death the brothers and nephews of her husband would succeed to the said property (bad wafat uske bhai bhatija uske shohar ke malik honge) The learned Additional District Judge had interpreted this document to mean that the brothers and nephews would succeed together We are unable to accept this interpretation. In our opinion the words "bhai bhatija" used in the wajib-ul-arz mean only collaterals of the deceased They indicate only a class of persons, that is, the collaterals of the husband who were to succeed after the death of the widow. They do not mean that brothers and nephews would succeed together. In our opinion the interpretation put upon this document by the learned Subordinate Judge is a correct one. According to him these words do not mean that brothers and nephews would inherit together and that no regard should be paid to the nearness of degree According to this view the words only mean that brothers and nephews, whoever might be in existence, would succeed and that these words colloquially mean near relations of the deceased. We are in entire agreement with that interpretation It appears to us, as remarked by the learned Subordinate Judge, that if the intention of the framers of the wajib-ul-arz had been that brothers and nephews should inherit together it would have been clearly stated in the wajib-ul-arz that brothers and nephews would inherit together. (bhai bhatije eksath malik honge) In the absence of any such express and definite provision, the clause in the wajib-ul-arz cannot, in our opinion be interpreted as one in support of the alleged custom.

In a case which went up to the Lordships of the Privy Council from this very Province and which will be found reported as Chandika Bakhsh v. Muna Kunwar (1) wajib-ul-araiz of a similar character were produced in support of a similar custom The learned Judges of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh held that the interpretation which was attempted to be put on those documents, and which was of the same character as now put upon Ex. A-9 by the learned Additional District Judge could not be justified According to them this would be a forced construction vide p 276 They were of opinion that such language only denotes that brothers, and in default nephews, were to succeed We are in entire agreement with the interpretation put upon these words by the learned Judges of the said Court. The matter is not, however, discussed anywhere in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council and we have not been able to follow the statement of either the learned Additional District Judge or of the Subordinate Judge that the Privy Council put any interpretation whatever upon the said documents. We only find on p 280 the remark of their Lordships that the wajib ul-arz on examination were found to prove nothing This might have been held by the Courts below to mean that their Lordships accepted the interpretation put upon the wajib-ul-araiz on examination were found to prove nothing. This might have been held by the Courts below to mean that their Lordships accepted the interpretation put upon the wajib-ul-araiz by the Court of appeal. Be that as it may, we are clearly of opinion that the interpretation put upon the wajib-ul-arz (Ex A-9) by the Additional District Judge cannot be supported. (The judgment then discussed other evidence and after holding that the defendants had failed to prove the custom proceeded) The learned counsel who appeared on behalf of the defendants-respondents argued that the finding as to custom being one of fact could not be set aside by this Court in second appeal. We regret we are unable to accept this contention. The learned Additional District Judge gave his finding in support of the custom not upon the oral evidence produced by the defendants-respondents but upon the wajib-ul-arz as interpreted by him As to the oral evidence he has not anywhere stated in his judgment that he is in a position to believe it. Indeed he has clearly stated in his judgment that the instances attempted to be proved by the defendants-respondents as to the succession of sons along with grandsons were irrelevant to prove the custom alleged in the present case He has also remarked in his judgment that on the strength of the two instances which we have discussed above in detail he was not prepared to hold the custom established. He has only relied on these instances in support of the interpretation which he has placed on the wajib-ul-arz filed in the case Regarding that, we may observe that the learned Additional District Judge was not justified in relying on those instances when they had not been satisfactorily established We have also differed from the learned Judge in respect of the interpretation which he has chosen to put on the wajib-ul-arz Under those circumstances the finding of the learned Judge, which is chiefly based upon the interpretation of the wajib-ul-arz cannot be maintained. It is a finding based upon a wrong interpretation of a document and cannot be considered to be one which may be held to be binding on us in second appeal.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Additional District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs in this Court and in the Courts below. The plaintiff's suit will stand decreed with costs in all the three Courts.

The High Court may be able to certify, in exceptional circumstances, under O. 45, R. 3 appeals from its final decision which are of value less than Rs. 10,000. But in an ordinary case of redemption involving a question of no general principle, as to whether certain terms of a mortgage-deed constituted a clog on the equity of redemption a certificate cannot be granted there being no exceptional circumstances to justify it. Judgment—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decision of a Bench of this Court dated 13th September 1928. The application is based upon two alternative pleas. The first is that the suit was one which involves a claim for over Rs. 10,000 as required by S 110, Civil P C., and the second is that even if the valuation is held to be less than Rs 10,000, the appeal might be certified under S 109, Cl (c), Civil P. C. The suit was one brought for redemption of a mortgage for Rs 1,600 executed on 14th October 1925 and the suit was valued at Rs 1,600. The property mortgaged is admitted by the applicants to be not worth more than Rs 2,000, and the only way in which it is possible to find a valuation of upwards of Rs. 10,000 is to assess it on the value of the property at the time of redemption. One of the conditions of the mortgage was that it should not be redeemed for 35 years and six months and undoubtedly if the mortgagor consistently fails to pay interest during that period, he will not be able to redeem on the expiry of the period fixed without paying a very large sum of money But that does not affect the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit either in the Court of first instance or at the present time Even now if the mortgagor is able to redeem, he will be able to do so on payment of a sum much less than Rs. 10,000 and we are unable to find for the purposes of S 110, Civil P C., either that the subject-matter of the property is Rs 10,000 or that the decree or final order must involve a claim to or question relating to a property of a like amount

It does not appear to us that in ordinary circumstances an appeal which prima facie falls under S 109 (a), Civil P. C., can be converted into one under

S. 109, (c) of the same Code merely because it fails to reach the money value required by S. 110. It may be that in special cases this Court may be able to certify under O. 45, R. 3 appeals from its own final decision which are of value less than Rs. 10,000, but clearly such exceptional procedure could only be justified by exceptional circumstances This is an ordinary case of redemption, and the only question is whether the terms of the mortgage-deed constitute a clog on the equity of redemption. It is a question which has been frequently decided and is not one which involves any general principle. In our opinion this is not a fit case to certify, and we therefore dismiss the application with costs.

Where the Court arrives at a finding that the price fixed in the deed has not been fixed in good faith it is its duty to determine what is the fair market value of the property sold. No doubt in many cases the price actually paid is a very good indication for determining the fair market value of the property sold, and that it is an element which the Courts must consider in determining the market value but the Court must not treat the money actually paid as conclusive evidence of the market value. Ghulam Hasan—for Appellant.

Wasim—for Respondent.

Judgment. — This judgment will govern the two appeals Nos. 260 and 261 of 1928. The two appeals arise out of a pre-emption suit. One Abdul Ghafoor sold one-third of his share in khata khewat No. 10 amounting to 4-pies and 24-decimals share and situate in village Tiari Machrouli, District Sultanpur. The sale-deed was executed on 9th November 1926, in favour of the defendant-respondent, Khan Bahadur Ali Husain for a sum of Rs. 4,000. On 1st June 1927, the appellant, Zahir-ud-din, brought a suit for pre-emption in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur against the defendant-respondent on the ground that he was a cosharer in this khata, being the own brother of the vendor, and was, therefore, entitled to pre-empt the property sold, against the defendant-respondent who was a stranger to the said village. He also alleged that the price entered in the deed was fictitious, that the money actually paid consisted of Rs. 3,000 which was also the market value of the property sold He, therefore, asked for pre-emption decree on the payment of Rs. 3,000.

The defendant-respondent admitted that he was a stranger to the village. but denied that the price entered in the deed was fictitious and alleged that it was the market value of the property sold. He contended that the price entered in the deed was the genuine price, for which he had purchased the property and asserted that it was also the market value thereof.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, to whose Court the suit had been transferred for trial, came to the findings that the price entered in the deed was fictitious and that the market value of the property sold was Rs. 3,572-8-0. He, therefore, passed a decree for pre-emption in favour of the plaintiff-appellant directing him to deposit in Court within three months from the date of the decree the said sum of Rs. 3,572-8-0.

On appeal the learned District Judge of Fyzabad affirmed the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of the fictitious nature of the price entered in the sale-deed, but held that the market value of the property sold was Rs. 4,000, and he, therefore, directed the plaintiff-appellant to pay the said sum instead of that fixed by the first Court.

In second appeal two points were urged before us, firstly that the Courts below having found that the price entered in the sale-deed was fictitious and having further found that the price actually paid was Rs. 3,000, it was not open to them to declare any sum more than Rs. 3,000 as the market value of the property sold and secondly, that the market value determined by the learned District Judge was not correct.

We are of opinion that none of these points can be sustained.

As to the first point it appears to us that the law is quite clear on the question. It is provided in S 13, Oudh Laws Act, 1876, that if in the case of a sale the Court finds that the price was not fixed in good faith, the Court shall fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market value of the property sold. On the language of the section, therefore, there can be no doubt that where the Court arrives at a finding that the price fixed in the deed has not been fixed in good faith it is its duty to determine what is the fair market value of the property sold Indeed this point was conceded in arguments by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant. The main point which he argued was to the effect that because in the present case it had been found by both the Courts that the price actually paid was Rs 3,000 it was not open to the Courts below to find any other sum as the market value of the property sold. We regret we cannot accept this contention It may be that the market value that the Court may determine in a particular case may be less than the price actually paid or may be more than the price so paid We are fully aware that in many cases the price actually paid is a very good indication for determing the fair market value of the property sold, and that it is an element which the Courts must consider in determining the market value. We are, however, unable to lay down a broad rule like the one contended for by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant that in all cases the Court in determining the market value of the property sold must treat the money actually paid as conclusive evidence of the market value If there is no evidence given by the parties during the trial of the case which may enable the Court to determine the market value of the property sold it would be perfectly open in such a case to the Court to consider the price paid as a far indication of the market value.

We must point out that this view has been consistently followed in Oudh and would mention the case reported in Mt. Wazir Begam v. Mohammad Ishaq (1). The case was decided by a Bench of two Judges of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, they being Messrs. Scott and Spankie Mr Spankie observed on p. 162 that in his opinion if the plaintiff in a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption under the Oudh Laws Act succeeds in showing that the price stated in the sale-deed is fictitious he is not entitled to acquire the property for the price actually paid, but must pay for it a price equivalent to the fair market value We are in entire agreement with the above observation of the learned Judge of the late Court, though we must further add that the market value so determined should not exceed the sale price mentioned in the deed. The same view was taken by Mr Dalal, J. C (now Mr. Justice Dalal) in a case reported in Har Pershad v. Sheo Shankar (2)

In the Punjab Chief Court the same view has been taken S. 17, Act 4 of 1872 laid down a similar rule that in case the Court was of opinion that the price had not been fixed in good faith, it should make a decree directing the defendant to sell such property to the plaintiff on such a price as appeared to it to be the fair market value of the property sold. The same rule exists in the pre-emption law, which is now in force in the Punjab, it being S. 26 of Act 1 of 1913. The matter came up for decision before the Chief Court of the Punjab in a case reported in Mehtab Khan v. Mustafa Beg (3) The case was decided by a Bench of the said Court consisting of Plowden and Roe, JJ. We should like to quote the following passage from their judgment:

"To come to plaintiff's appeal, the contention that the sum actually paid can alone be taken as the basis of a pre-emption decree is quite untenable. What is to be the basis is settled beyond doubt by S. 16 (17), Act 4 of 1872. No doubt the legislature might, if it had thought fit, have directed the Courts merely to look to the price actually paid or intended to be paid, and to decree pre-emption on payment of this sum. But it has not done so; it has most clearly laid down that where the price entered in the deed, or otherwise alleged by

(1) [1901] 4 O. C 158.
(2) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 68.
(3) [1887] 101 P. R. 1887.

the parties, has been found not to have been fixed in good faith, the price at which the plaintiff can claim pre-emption is the fair market value alone. No doubt the price actually paid is always an important fact to be duly considered in forming an estimate of the market value, but it must be considered in connexion with other facts."

We are entirely in agreement with the above observations. Our finding, therefore, on the first point is that the action of the Courts below in determining the market value of the property sold was in this case perfectly justified.

As to the second question of market value we must point out that it is a question of fact and unless the learned advocate for the appellant succeeded in pointing out to us an error of law in determining the market value the finding of the lower appellate Court could not be disturbed. The contention of the learned advocate who appeared for the plaintiff-appellant was that the finding of the learned District Judge on this point was not binding on this Court because in determining the market value the learned Judge relied principally on a sale-deed of a plot of land situate in this very village, which had been executed by one Hakimmuddin Ahmed in favour of Sheikh Saadat Ali on 19th May 1927 (Ex A-3), and that he was not justified in doing so because there was no proof on record to show that the lands covered by the said sale deed were of the same quality as the lands in dispute. There is no doubt that this contention is true The learned counsel for the respondent has not been able to point to us any evidence on the record to show that the two kinds of lands are the same. We feel that without that evidence the relevancy of Ex. A-3 would not be established We must, however, point out that if we look at the amount of profits arising out of the land sold under Ex A-3 and the price entered therein, we would get a fair indication of the rate on which the property is sold in this village at the present time.

The profits of the land covered by the sale-deed Ex. A-3 on our calculation come to about Rs 5-8-0 and the profits of the share in dispute come to about Rs. 75. The price at which the property was sold under Ex A-3 was Rs 300. According to this rate the market value of the property in dispute would come to a little over Rs. 4,000. Under these circumstances we hold that the market value fixed by the learned District Judge was correct and must be maintained.

We, therefore, dismiss these appeals with costs.

Second Appeal No 403 of 1927, Decided on 26th September 1928, against decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 8th November 1927.

Religious endowment — Judgment-debtor dedicating property after it was attached by the decree-holder — Conduct inconsistent with intention to dedicate—Dedication was not genuine.

A judgment-debtor made a dedication of attached property along with other property, in favour of an idol. No mutation of the property was effected in favour of the idol. There was no evidence showing that the income of the property was spent for the expenses of the idols or to show that the installation of the idol took place as provided for in the deed of endowment. Further the judgment-debtor subsequent to the execution of the endowment deed mortgaged the property to another without making any mention in the mortgage deed of the previous endowment deed.

Held that the transaction evidenced by the deed of endowment was not a genuine transaction. [P 247 C 2]

Judgment—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff-appellant Sri Thakur Ram Janki, an idol installed in a temple situate in Ajudhia, is the proprietor of certain Chowkis on the banks of the river Sarju and that the said property is not liable to sale in execution of the decree obtained by the respondent Mohan Lal against one Ganpat Prasad. The facts of the case are given in the order of reference and shortly stated they are that the Chowkis in suit originally belonged to one Ganpat Prasad who owned a temple in Ajudhia. Ganpat Prasad executed a deed of trust dated 3rd August 1920 in favour of the plaintiff appellant, Sri Thakur Ram Janki, making an endowment of the property in suit as well as other property. It is on the basis of this deed of trust that the plaintiff-appellant has brought the present declaratory suit. The relief claimed by him in the plaint is to the effect that a declaratory decree be passed in his favour against the defendant to the effect that the property in suit attached in execution of decree is the property of the plaintiff and that it is not legally liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant against the aforesaid Ganpat Prasad We may also state that the suit has been instituted by the plaintiff through Ganpat Prasad, who is said to be trustee of the endowment alleged to have been created on 3rd August 1920.

The suit was contested by the defendant on two main grounds: firstly, that the deed of endowment dated 3rd August 1920 was a ficititious transaction and did not create any bona fide waqf in favour of the plaintiff and secondly that the property which had been attached by the defendant was alienable and could be sold in execution of the decree

The trial Court decreed the suit, but the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal took a different view. He held that the waqf was not a genuine transaction and consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit He also held that the Chowkis in Ajudhia could be attached and sold in execution of the decree. The plaintiff-appellant has now come to this Court in second appeal. The appeal was originally set down for hearing before one of us but as it appeared to involve an important question of law it was referred to a Bench of two Judges.

On behalf of the appellant it has been contended that the property in suit is merely a personal right of service and is exempted from attachment and sale under S. 60, Cl. (f), Civil P C. It is further contended that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge as to the genuineness of the deed of waqf dated 3rd August 1920 should not be accepted because it was based purely on conjectures and surmises and not on any evidence on the record

We have heard the parties at great length and have come to the conclusion that in view of our decision which we are going to mention presently, it is not necessary for us to enter into the important question of law which had necessitated the reference of this case to a Bench of two Judges. We find from the facts on the record that on 25th November 1919 a decree was passed for Rs. 344 and odd plus costs in favour of Kashmiri Bank against Ganpat Prasad. We also find that this decree was put into execution on 29th January 1920. It will appear from Ex. 15, which is a certified copy of the application for execution, that the bank had applied for attachment of a kacchha chabutra and the courtyard of a house situate in Mohalla Saragaddwar city Ajudhia. We further find that the deed of waqf was executed by Ganpat Prasad on 3rd August 1920 in which the property attached by the bank was made the subject of endowment along with other property including the property in suit in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. These facts speak for themselves. We also find that the mutation of the property in suit has not been effected in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. We further find that no evidence was given in the trial Court that the income of the property, which was the subject of the deed of endowment dated 3rd August 1920, was actually spent towards the expenses of the temple in which the plaintiff-appellant, the idol was to be installed as provided by the deed We further find that there is no evidence on the record showing that the asthapana ceremony (installation ceremony) of the idol was duly performed as provided in the deed of endowment. We further find that on 25th April 1923 a deed of possessory mortgage was executed in favour of the respondent Mohan Lal by Ganpat Prasad himself in respect of one of the Chowkis in suit No. 350 In this deed of mortgage Ganpat Prasad does not make any mention of deed of endowment dated 3rd August 1920 previously executed by him but transfers the property as full owner. All these circumstance indicate clearly that the transaction evidenced by the deed of endowment dated 3rd August 1920 is not a genuine transaction and that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on thi points must be maintained

We are therefore driven to this conclusion that the plaintiff-appellant is not the owner of the property in suit and is not, therefore, in a position to maintain the present suit. The obvious difficulty in our way is how to pass a decree in favour of a person who has been found to have no title In this view of the case it is not necessary for us to decide the other question which has been argued before us namely, whether the Chowkis in suit are liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree. It would be open to Ganpat Prasad to take this objection, if he be so advised, in execution of the decree in the manner provided by law In these circumstances we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 58 of 1929, Decided on 22nd February 1929, against order of First Addl. Sess Judge, Lucknow, D/- 12th January 1929

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Witnesses altering statements in Sessions Court to fit evidence in Magistrate's Court — Evidence must be carefully scrutinized.

Where witnesses alter their statements in the Court of Session in order to make them fit in with the medical or other evidence which has been brought forward in the Magistrate's Court, their statements must receive very careful scrutiny. [P 250 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Medical evidence, if merely opinion of expert and capable of two explanations, is not of first importance—But if it is merely statement of facts it is entitled to great weight even as against eyewitnesses.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that medical evidence is of less value than the evidence of eyewitnesses. No doubt where the medical evidence is merely an opinion of an expert on a question which may admit of two explanations it is not always of first importance. But that is not correct when what the doctor has done is to lay before the Court certain definite facts. When the doctor states what he saw as to the contents of the stomach and the food regurgitated into the larynx, it requires no expert to draw conclusions from those facts. The Judge himself can in such case draw those conclusions as well as the doctor as to the cause of death.

Judgment — The seven appellants were convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow at Bara Banki of the offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C, and were sentenced to transportation for life They have also been convicted and sentenced on a charge of riot. The person who was killed was a young Bania named Baboo, aged 17 years. His death was reported by his uncle Ram Dhani, who had, as he says, brought the youth up from childhood, after 7 a. m on 18th July. The story told in the first report is that shortly before sunrise Baboo went to ease himself according to his daily practice. Shortly afterwards Jeo Ram Lonia raised an alarm saying:

"Run up, Baboo is shouting that he is being killed."

Thereupon Ram Dhani, his brother Ram Sarup, his nephew Gur Dayal, a relation named Bihari and a Kalwar named Raghubar ran up to the grove which lies close to the village tank and there, according to Ram Dhani's report, they saw the seven accused persons striking Baboo In the report it is not said how they were striking Baboo but it is clearly stated that on seeing the witnesses they all made off leaving Baboo lying on the ground The only injury mentioned in the report is a wound on the neck which was thought to have been inflicted by a knife or a spear. The police investigation obtained the necessary evidence to bear out the first report and it was also ascertained that the accused persons had some previous enmity with Ram Dhani, and it was supposed that on account of this enmity and in order to annoy Ram Dhani they had combined to kill Baboo.

The body was sent for post-mortem examination and as the result of that examination some remarkable facts came to light In the first place the doctor gave as the probable time since death 30 or 36 hours He made his examination at 11 15 on 19th July. Consequently the time of death must have been between 11 15 on the night of the 17th and 5 15 on the morning of the 18th. When the period after death is so short the medical evidence can be relied upon to be accurate with a few hours The doctor found that the cause of death was suffocation due to injury to the wind-pipe and pressure over the chest He did not find that the wound on the neck had caused death, but that some pressure on the chest was the actual cause This pressure must have been very heavy, for the third, fourth and fifth ribs on the right side and the third, fourth, fifth and sixth ribs on the left side were separated from their cartileges. The larynx was found full of food-stuff, rice and vegetables, and the stomach contained six chhataks of undigested food, rice and dal. The doctor made the necessary deduction that death ensued a very short time after the deceased ate his last meal We do not say that there have not been strange cases where the digestive process has been unduly delayed, and that these cases are not more common in India than in western countries ; but as a general rule we must assume, failing evidence to the contrary, that the murdered person was a normal person, and we consider that the deduction made by the doctor was justified by the facts which he observed. We then turn to the injury report

The only injury which the body received was the knife wound on the neck We cannot class as injuries the large number of small abrasions which were also found. It is possible that an abrasion can be caused by a blow, but when we find that there were two dozen abrasions in front of the right wrist and forearm, seven abrasions in front of the left wrist and seven more in an area of $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1''$ in front of the left elbow, two dozen abrasions on the outer side of the left thigh, 15 abrasions in front of the left thigh, five abrasions on the outer side of the left leg, other unnumbered abrasions just below the left knee, six abrasions on the left knee and six abrasions just below the right knee (these being the only marks on the body apart from the knife wound on the neck) we conclude without any hesitation that all these injuries were caused by the deceased being dragged along the ground. It would appear that he was dragged by some one holding his feet and possibly by somebody else holding his body from the ground. We do not consider that there is any other manner in which these abrasions can have been caused. Thus we conclude from the medical evidence, quite apart from any of the depositions made by the witnesses, that Baboo met his death owing to the pressure of a heavy weight on his chest. He was then possibly stabbed in the neck, as this injury was effected during his life, and he was then dragged to the place where he was found, namely a heap of rubbish near a village tank. It is obvious that this does not coincide in any way with the story told by Ram Dhani and his witnesses all of whom produced identical statements. The man was not kicked and he was not hit. We need not enlarge on the absurdities of the prosecution story which intends us to believe that seven persons armed with lathis lay in wait for a youth just outside a village at the time when he and all the members of the village were certain to go out to relieve nature, close to the village tank, and then laying aside their lathis sat upon him or in some other way caused his death by pressure, and then kicked and struck him in the presence of the witnesses in such a manner that they left no marks The story is so incredible in itself that even apart from the medical evidence we think it strange that the learned Sessions Judge believed it.

Again much stress was laid by Ram Dhani and his friends on the motive. These persons, one of whom is a Kalwar, two are Jolahas and four Behnas are said to have banded together to kill Baboo because of their enmity against his uncle No doubt Ram Dhani had given evidence against one of these men in a Badmashi case ten years before, and he had some trouble with four others shortly before the murder, but we cannot find that there was any direct enmity on the part of either Ehsan or his son Bashir, though they were related to the other two Behnas. But even supposing the enmity to be proved we are unable to see why these men selected Baboo for their attack No doubt Ram Dhani may have liked Baboo, but since the birth of his own son a year ago he had a much nearer interest in the latter; and any one wishing to hurt him would surely have killed the child and not the nephew. Possibly seeing this difficulty Ram Dhani pretended that he took the advice of Baboo aged 17 in all his affairs, and in particular in the purchase of a decree against one of the accused Dwarka Kalwar.

There is also much in the statements of the prosecution witnesses in the Sessions Court which might have given the learned Judge pause in believing their statements It will be seen that in the first report nothing was said about the dragging of the body. This story came into existence when the police found the marks of dragging in the grove and the separate stains of blood. When he appeared in the Sessions Court Ram Dhani was evidently cognizant of the medical evidence, and for the first time there he stated that he saw the accused pressing Baboo down and inventing an entirely new story to account for the presence of undigested food in his stomach. In this story he was borne out by his brother Ram Sarup, who, after definitely stating in the Court below that he had dinner on the night before the murder at 10 o'clock, and that probably his brother had his between 8 and 10, suddenly remembered that they had all been to a Katha or religious reading on that night and got home very late. Ram Sarup says that he had his dinner as late as 2 a. m , but Ram Dhani would not go so far. According to his statement Baboo must have had his dinner at about 1 o'clock. Where witnesses alter their statements in the Court of Session in order to make them fit in with the medical or other evidence which has been brought forward in the Magistrate's Court, their statements must receive very careful scrutiny, and here we have a case where the witnesses have boldly altered their statements to suit the medical evidence, have told a story, which is on the face of it improbable, and have given an account of an assault which they say they saw which is entirely different to the true manner in which the deceased met his death.

All the assessors found all the accused not guilty, but the learned Judge has thought fit by adopting some special pleading to disagree with them. He makes much of the fact that the defence witnesses were not produced before him, though he examined two of them under S. 540, Criminal P. C We have read the statements of these witnesses. One of them was a village chaukidar who was obviously afraid to go against the police, and the other was Kesho, the father-in-law of Baboo. This man does not go as far perhaps as the accused might have wished in his statement, but he brings to light two curious facts One is that he himself went to the village on the day of the murder and stayed there the whole night, but he denies that he ever learnt during that time that the accused had committed the crime He also says that his daughter was forcibly detained in the village for two months by her father-in-law, and he could only recover her by making an application to the Magistrate. Different explanations may perhaps be given as to why the girl was detained in this manner, but the obvious one is that she was not prepared to agree in the story told as to her husband's death, and moreover there was a danger that she would not keep silent. It is significant that her father-in-law Ram Sarup in his evidence says that he thought it proper to detain her till the end of the case. We consider that the evidence of Kesho is a strong indication that there was something not straightforward in the preparation of this case, in fact that the accused persons have been named to save some one else. They are persons who are disliked by Ram Dhani and, therefore, by his brother and nephew, and the other three eyewitnesses have all some reason for being hostile to one or other of them Raghubar is the partner with Ram Dhani in purchasing the decree against Dwarka, and both the others have suspected one or other of the Muhammadan accused of theft. In fact these accused persons are men of bad character who are unpopular in the village and they have been chosen as scapegoats in this affair.

We feel that we must pass some comments on the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the medical evidence. He considers that medical evidence is of less value than the evidence of eyewitnesses. Apart from the criticisms which we have already passed on the alleged eyewitnesses in the case we would find difficulty in agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge in this view of his as to medical evidence as a general proposition. Where the medical evidence is merely an opinion of an expert on a question which may admit of two explanations it is not always of first importance But, here all that the doctor has done is to lay before the Court certain definite facts. There is no question that the doctor's report as to the nature of the injuries is correct He must be right as to the cause of death and he has stated what he saw as to the contents of the stomach and the food regurgitated into the larynx. It requires no expert to draw conclusions from those facts. The Judge himself was able to draw those conclusions as well as the doctor Therefore, this is not a case where the Judge has had on the one side the reliable evidence of uncontradicted eyewitnesses, and on the other medical theories. It appears to us that he has had on the one side facts and on the other mere words. We do not know why Baboo may have been killed ; we do not know where he was killed and we do not know what reason the witnesses for the prosecution may have had before attempting to saddle the accused with the crime ; but we are certain that the guilt of the accused has not been proved. Even it would appear that the Judge himself had some little doubt in this matter ; otherwise it is difficult to see how he could have failed to pass a sentence of death on the seven persons who waylaid a youth of 17 and deliberately murdered him in order to spite his uncle We allow these appeals, set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the appellants be acquitted and forthwith released

" When a joint Hindu family consists of a father and sons but is possessed of no family property, is the widow of one of the sons, who died in the lifetime of his father and brother, entitled to maintenance as against the property which the father had acquired after the death of her husband, and which on the death of the father came into the possession and enjoyment of the surviving son and the son of the latter, when such possession was (a) in the right of an heir and (b) in the right of a survivor ?

After a consideration of the original texts of the Hindu law and of the case law on the subject I have come to the conclusion that the question referred to us must be answered in the affirmative.

In Smritis the Hindu jurists have always considered it a duty to maintain the female members of the family Manu in Chap 8, Sloka 389, lays down that a mother, a father, a wife and a son shall not be forsaken. He who forsakes either of them, unless guilty of a deadly sin, shall pay 600 panas to the king. The word " forsakes " means " does not maintain. " Narada says :

" A husband who abandons an affectionate wife, or her who speaks not harshly, who is sensible, constant, and fruitful, shall be brought to his duty by the king with a severe chastisement. "

Yajnyavalkya similarly says :

" He who forsakes a wife, though obedient to his commands, diligent in household management, mother of an excellent son, and speaking kindly, shall be compelled to pay the third part of his wealth , or if poor, to provide a maintenance for that wife. "

It will thus appear that the Hindu lawyers have made it a duty to support one's wife. This is not only found in Hindu law but in all systems of civilized law in the world.

Regarding the females of the family at large Manu lays down in Chap. 3, Slokas 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59 as follows :

" 55. Married women must be honoured and adorned by their fathers and brethren, by their husbands and by the brethren of their husbands, if they seek abundant prosperity. "

" 56. Where females are honoured, there the deities are pleased ; but where they are dishonoured, there all religious acts become fruitless. "

" 57. Where female relations are made miserable, the family of him who makes them so very soon wholly perishes ; but where they are not unhappy, the family always increases. "

" 58. On whatever houses the women of a family, not being duly honoured, pronounce an imprecation, those houses, with all that belong to them, utterly perish, as if destroyed by a sacrifice for the death of an enemy. "

" 59. Let these women, therefore, be continually supplied with ornaments, apparel, and food, at festivals and at jubilees, by men desirous of wealth. "

In another part of his Smriti Manu says that ample support of those who are entitled to maintenance is rewarded with bliss in heaven; but hell is the portion of that man whose family is afflicted with pain by his neglect; therefore, "let him maintain his family with the utmost care."

Yajnyavalkya says:

"Females must be honoured by their husbands, brothers, fathers, and paternal kinsmen; by the fathers, mothers, and brethren of their husbands; and by all kinsmen; with gifts of ornaments, apparel and food."

From the above texts it will be clear that in a Hindu family it is incumbent upon the male members of that family to support the females. Dr. Guru Das Banerjee in the Tagore Law Lectures, 1878, observes on. p. 213 as follows:

"Considering the constitution of Hindu society, considering the extremely helpless condition of the Hindu widow, and considering that the obligation of the father-in-law or other near relation to give her food and raiment if she resides in his house, is not only enjoined by precepts, but is also confirmed by invariable usage."

It has, however, been ruled that in some cases it amounts to a legal duty while in other it only amounts to a moral duty, for instance, in the case of a husband it is his legal duty to support and maintain his wife, while in the case of a father-in-law possessed of no ancestral property it is only a moral duty. In the case of a joint family, however, which is possessed of a joint property in which every member of that family has an interest it is the legal duty of the family to support the wife of a member of that family. It has also been held that in the case of a joint family although the husband of a particular woman may die, a legal duty is cast upon the other members of the family to maintain her, and the reason is assigned that those who take the husband's share by survivorship must support after his death his wife

The leading case on the subject in the United Provinces is a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Janki v. Nand Ram (1) decided by Sir John Edge, Kt., Chief Justice, Tyrell, and Mahmood, JJ. The whole law on the subject has been so exhaustively dealt with in that case by Mahmood, J., that one feels it unnecessary to quote other authorities. The several propositions laid down by Mahmood, J., in that case are that though a widowed daughter-in-law has no legal right to claim maintenance from her father-in-law, who has only self-acquired properties in his hands and though the obligation to maintain her out of such property is merely moral, yet the obligation becomes a legal obligation when the property possessed by the father is inherited by his sons. The reason why a moral obligation becomes a legal obligation is pointed out by Mahmood, J., on p. 208 of the report, it being that those who inherit the self-acquired property of the father take that property subject to such moral obligations as are conducive to the spiritual benefit of the father. This is quite in accordance with the spirit of the Hindu law. It is for instance the moral duty of the Hindu father to marry his daughter and to give her a suitable dowry at the time of the marriage If the father dies and the property goes to his sons it becomes the legal duty of the sons who take the property of the father to provide for a suitable dowry for their sister out of the estate of the father inherited by them The whole thing is discussed so clearly and dealt with so lucidly in that judgment that I need not repeat the same arguments It is needless for me to say that I entirely agree with those observations

This case has been followed by almost all the High Courts in India as would appear from the decisions which are quoted below.

In the Calcutta High Court this decision was followed in Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pode Mondle (2), Devi Persad v Gunwanti Koer (3) and Siddessury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (4).

In Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pode Mondle (2) it was held that the principle that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is, therefore, under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support, had ample basis in the Hindu law of the Bengal School and that it was immaterial whether the property so inherited was moveable or immovable. It was further held in this case by Banerjee J., that the above principle was applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband's brothers, who had inherited her father-in-law's property her own husband having predeceased his father. The case of Janki v. Nand Ram (1) was followed in that case. This case was decided by Guru Das Banerjee, J

In Devi Persad v. Gunwanti Koer (3) it was decided by Macpherson, J , and Guru Das Banerjee, J . that in the case of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law where a family was possessed of an ancestral property and a member of that family died there could be no question that his wife was entitled to being maintained out of the said property. It was pointed out that the reason for this was that since the husband of the lady had a vested interest in the ancestral property, and could have, even during his father's lifetime, enforced partition of that property, and since the Hindu law provided that the surviving coparceners should maintain the widow of a deceased coparcener, the plaintiff (lady) was entitled to maintenance. The case of Janki v Nand Ram (1) was referred to with approval in that case

In Siddessury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (4), a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of Sir Francis Maclean, K.C.I.E. C.J , Prinsep and Hill, JJ., held that by the fact that a widowed daughter in-law had taken up her residence apart from relations of her husband, she did not forfeit her right to a separate maintenance out of the property inherited from her father-in-law by reason of such non residence with the family of her deceased husband unless such non-residence be for unchaste or immoral purpose The case of Janki v. Nand Ram (1), was again quoted with approval.

Referring to the Bombay High Court we find that the question of maintenance was considered by Farran, J., in an original case decided by him and which will be found to be reported in Adhibai v Gursandas Nathu (5). On p 209 he quoted a passage from Khetramani Dasi v. Kashinath Das (6) that the obligation of an heir to provide, out of an estate which descends to him, maintenance for certain persons, whom the ancestor was legally or morally bound to maintain was a legal as well as a moral obligation, for the estate was inherited subject to the obligation of providing such maintenance. The learned Judge observed that the authorities justified him in holding that the defendant in that case was legally bound to provide the plaintiff, who was the widow of a deceased member of the family, with maintenance out of the property which he had inherited from his father. He further held that in such a case the widow would be entitled to a separate maintenance and that the defendant could not insist upon her living with him in the same house.

In Yamunabai v. Manubai (7), decided by Parsons and Ranade, JJ., it was held that the widow of a predeceased son, who lived in union with his father, had a legal right to maintenance from her mother-in-law out of the self-acquired property of father-in-law to which his widow had succeeded as his heir. It was pointed out that although a son's widow had no legal claim for maintenance against the self-acquired property in the hands of her father-in-law, but when such property devolved upon his heirs the daughter-in law had a claim against it in their hands for maintenance if her husband had lived in union with his father. I would like to quote the following passage from the decision of Ranade, J., with which I am in entire agreement:

> " The principle that a son's widow has no legal claim for maintenance against the self-acquired property in the hands of her father in-law, has been affirmed in a series of decisions by this Court, as also by the other High Courts of Bengal, Madras and Allahabad: Savitribai v. Luxmibai (8), Khetramani Dasi v. Kashinath Das (6); Ganga Bai v. Sita Ram (9), Janki v. Nand Ram (1) and Kalu v. Kashibai (10). The obligation to maintain the widowed daughter-in law in such cases has been held to be only a moral and imperfect obligation, not enforceable in law. As against the father-in-law the right of the son's widow to be maintained rests, not on her husband being a co-member of a joint family, but on being a joint owner of ancestral property with his father: Mt. Hema Koeree v. Ajodhya Pershad (11); Savitribai v. Luxmibai (8); Mt. Lalti Kuar v. Ganga Bishan (12) and Devi Pershad v. Gunwanti Koer (3).

father-in-law has been thus clearly defined, a distinction has been recognized by the High Courts of Bengal and Allahabad between the position of the father-in-law and those who succeed him as heir to his separate or self-acquired estate. The moral obligation of the father-in-law is held to be converted into a legal obligation when his self-acquired property devolves upon his heirs. Under certain circumstances and in the hands of such heirs, such property is held liable to provide maintenance to the widow of a predeceased son of the person who acquired the property when such son lived in union with him. This principle was first laid down in Bengal, and has been more recently affirmed by the Allahabad High Court Rajjomoney Dossee v. Sibchunder Mullick (13), Janki v Nand Ram (1); Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pode Mondle (2); Devi Persad v. Gunwanti Koer (3). The same distinction was recognized and given effect to in this Court in Adhibai v. Cursandas (5), where it was held that the self-acquired property of the father, when it descended to one of his surviving sons, was to be regarded as ancestral property, and as such subject to the obligations of ancestral property to provide maintenance to the widow of a predeceased son living in union with his father. The Allahabad High Court in Janki v. Nand Ram (1), declined to subscribe to the view that such self-acquired property became ancestral in the hands of the original owner's heir, but rested the liability on the ground that the heir in such cases took the property for the spiritual benefit of the deceased owner, and so taking it, the old moral obligation was turned into a legal obligation which could be enforced. The Calcutta High Court rested this distinction on the ground that the heir in such cases is under a legal obligation to provide, out of the estate which descends to him, maintenance for the persons whom the ancestor was bound legally or morally to maintain, and the heir takes the estate, not for his benefit, but for the spiritual benefit of his ancestor. Khetramani Dasi v. Kashinath Das (6); Devi Persad v. Gunwanti Koer (3); Kamini Dassee v Chandra Pode Mondle (2). Though there is thus a divergence in the reasons given by this Court and by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts, the conclusion they arrive at is identical"

Turning to the Madras High Court we find that in Rangammal v Echammal (14) decided by Subramania Ayyar, and Moore, JJ., it was held, following Janki v Nand Ram (1); Kamini Dassee v Chandra Pode Mondle (2) and Devi Persad v. Gunwanti Koer (3), that according to these cases the correct view of law was that the moral obligation to support a son's widow, to which her father-in-law was subject, would, on his death, acquire the force of a legal obligation as against his assets in the hands of his heir.

In Surampalli Bangaramma v. Surampalli Brambaze (15), decided by Wallis, and Sankaran Nair, JJ., it was held that a father-in-law was under a moral obligation to maintain his daughter-in-law and this obligation ripened into a legal obligation against the assets in the hands of his heirs.

It would, therefore, be clear from the authorities which I have quoted above that it is now the accepted principle of the Hindu law that where a self-acquired property of a father has been inherited by his sons it becomes their duty to support the widow of one of their brothers who has died in the lifetime of the father, and that this liability exists where the property goes into the hands of the sons either by inheritance or by survivorship. The question is discussed by Mr Mayne in his well-known work on Hindu law in Ch. 14, which deals with maintenance (pp 645 to 649, Edn 9), where the learned author has reviewed the decisions of the various High Courts and has come to the same conclusion.

My answer, therefore, to the question referred to the Full Bench is in the affirmative

Judgment—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Third Additional District Judge of Lucknow, dated 14th August 1928, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Malihabad dated 26th September 1927.

The facts of the case are as follows:

The respondents held a decree against one Suraj Kumar and the sum of money due to them under that decree approximately amounted to Rs 17,000 The plaintiff-appellant agreed to purchase this decree at a value less by Rs 2,000 It is agreed that the contract for sale was complete and it is also agreed that within a month from 15th March 1926 the sale was to be completed It is further agreed that on 15th March 1926 a sum of Rs. 100 was paid by the appellant to the respondents and it is no longer disputed that the character of this payment was as earnest money for the due performance of the contract of sale.

From what has been stated above it follows that the completion of the sale was to take place on or before 15th April 1926 A further point on which the parties are now agreed is that on 16th April 1926 one Lala Indar Prasad paid a sum of Rs 1,000 to the respondents on behalf of the appellant

There is controversy between the parties as to the nature of the second payment of Rs 1,000 made on 16th April 1926 but the controversy is settled by the finding arrived at in the Court below. That Court has held on evidence that this payment was made as security money for the due performance of the contract of sale A good deal of argument was addressed to us to induce us to go behind this finding but we have not been so induced. We hold that the finding is valid, not vitiated by any error of law or procedure and is therefore conclusive This being so, it seems to us that the plaintiff's case, out of which this appeal arises, for the refund of Rs 1,000 which he paid to the respondents as specified above and having regard to the finding which was not challenged that the contract of sale fell through because of the fault of the appellant is wholly untenable.

It is settled law that money paid by an intending purchaser under a perfected contract of sale as a guarantee that the sale shall be performed remains with the vendor if the contract fails by reason of default on the part of the purchaser. In the case of Howe v Smith (1) the law on the subject of deposit under a contract of sale and its forfeiture is exhaustively considered and stated. Cotton, L. J, in his judgment quotes the following passage from Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, 14th Edn.:

"Where a purchaser is in default and the seller has not parted with the subject of the contract, it is clear that the purchaser could not recover the deposit, for he cannot, by his own default, acquire a right to rescind the contract."

After referring to the cases of Collins v Stimson (2), Depree v Bedborough (3) and Ex-parte Barrell (4) and quoting a passage from the judgment of James, L. J, in the last mentioned case Cotton, L. J., says:

"What is the deposit? The deposit, as I understand it, and using the words of James, L. J., is a guarantee that the contract shall be performed. If the sale goes on, of course, not only in accordance with the words of the contract, but in accordance with the intention of the parties in making the contract, it goes in part payment of the purchase money for which it is deposited, but if on the default of the purchaser the contract goes off, that is to say, if he repudiates the contract, then according to James, L. J, he can have no right to recover the deposit."

In the same case Bowen, L. J., said:

"A deposit if nothing more is said about it, is, according to the ordinary interpretation of business men, a security for the completion of the purchase. It is quite certain that the purchaser cannot insist on abandoning his contract and yet recover the deposit, because that would be to enable him to take advantage of his own wrong."

Fry, L. J., in his judgment in the case said:

"Money paid as a deposit must, I conceive, be paid on some terms implied or expressed. In this case no terms are expressed, and we must therefore inquire what terms are to be implied. The terms most naturally to be implied appear to me in the case of money paid on the signing of a contract to be that in the event of the contract being performed it shall be brought into account, but if the contract is not performed by the payer it shall remain the property of the payee. It is not merely a part payment, but is then also an earnest to bind the bargain so entered into, and creates by the fear of its forfeiture a motive in the payer to perform the rest of the contract."

The above being the state of law it is not necessary to enter into the question as to whether Lala Inder Prasad, when he paid the sum of Rs. 1,000 to the respondents on behalf of the appellant, had or had not the authority to enter into an express contract on behalf of the appellant as to the forfeiture of the deposit in the event of the contract failing by reason of the default on the part of the appellant. It is agreed that Lala Inder Prasad made this deposit on behalf of the appellant. This is enough for the disposal of the appeal. But there is a conclusive finding of the lower appellate Court that the deposit was by way of security for the due performance of the contract.

Before we take leave of this case we may refer to a recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Chiranjit Singh v. Har Swarup (5) The law was stated by Lord Shaw in the following words :

"Earnest money is part of the purchase price when the transaction goes forward. It is forfeited when the transaction falls through, by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee."

Another recent decision of the same tribunal and to the same effect is to be found in Mayson v. Clouet (6).

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No 488 of 1898, Decided on 6th December 1928, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Kheri, D/- 10th November 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 339—Non compliance with the provisions by the Court vitiates the trial.

The provisions of S. 339, Criminal P. Bhawani Shankar—for Appellant.

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri in the case of one Itwari Lodh who has been convicted of the offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. and sentenced to death. Itwari also has submitted an appeal from jail.

A preliminary objection has been raised before us that this trial was vitiated through non-compliance on the part of the Court below with the provisions of S 339-A, Criminal P. C. Itwari was offered a pardon by the Magistrate but when he came before the same Magistrate in Court he stated that he knew nothing about the case. It was therefore decided to proceed against him on the original charge of murder. The Committing Magistrate asked him whether he pleaded that he complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made and he said that he had complied with them. This question was not repeated in the Sessions Court and no plea was there recorded It was the duty of the Court, that is to say, the Sessions Court to put this question to the accused and to record his plea and if he pleaded that he had complied with the conditions of his pardon the Court had to make a finding as to whether or not he had complied with the conditions of the pardon. These provisions of the code are compulsory, and the accused could not be properly tried and convicted of the offence of murder until the Court trying him had recorded a finding that he had forfeited the pardon which had been offered to him owing to non-compliance with its conditions. This view was taken by the Lahore High Court in Ali v. Emperor (1) and we are of opinion that the failure of the Court to comply with the conditions of the section vitiates the trial.

We therefore direct that the proceedings be quashed, but under the circumstances of the case we order that the accused shall be again tried according to law.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of a partition suit, which was partially decreed by the learned Munsif of Ramsanehighat but has been totally dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki.

The facts of the case are that the parties to this suit are descendants of one Sahib Din as will appear from the following pedigree :

They constituted a joint family and the plaintiff Gaya Din, who is the son of Sheo Dayal in Bhichchuk's branch, claims by partition a half share in the properties in suit against the defendants, who are descended from Raghubar, brother of Sheo Dayal, in the same branch. The properties sought to be partitioned are detailed below :

1. The grove standing on plot No. 518 situate in village Barethi, district Bara Banki. 2. The grove standing on plot No 632 situate in village Tanda, district Bara Banki. 3. The grove standing on plot No. 499 situate in the same village Tanda. 4 The muafi plots Nos. 140, 384, 908 also situate in village Tanda. 5. The house standing on plots Nos 117 and 118 also situate in village Tanda. 6. The ahata (compound), which is now a phulwari (orchard) also situate in village Tanda, and 7. The Brit Mahabrahmani relating to villages Tanda and Mohammadpur and exerciseable for the full month of Katik, the latter halves of the months of Phagun and Asarh and the first half of the month of Sawan.

The case for the plaintiffs shortly stated was that the descendants of Saheb Din never separated from each other and that the properties mentioned above were their joint family properties, and therefore liable to partition. The share claimed by the plaintiff as stated above was a moiety in the said properties. The suit was mainly contested by defendant 1 Gur Din, whose contention was that Ganga Din and Bhichchuk, the sons of Saheb Din, had separated from each other, that properties 1, 2, 3 and 5 belonged exclusively to his father Raghubar and that properties 4 and 6 belonged to Ganga Din and after his death had come exclusively in the possession of his father, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in these properties. Regarding property No. 7 it was contended that it could not be partitioned in law because it consisted merely of such fee as the jajmans (clients) gave at the time of the funeral ceremonies performed on the occasion of deaths in their families. There were other contentions raised in the case, but it is not necessary to mention them for the purpose of this appeal.

The learned Munsif of Ramsanehighat, who tried the suit, we should like to state, with great care and attention, found that property No. 1 was the ancestral property of the parties, having been recorded at the time of the first regular settlement in the name of Bhichchuk; that Ganga Din and Bhichchuk had separated from each other; that Ganga Din was the owner of the properties Nos. 4, 5 and 6 and that property No. 2 was acquired by Raghubar, father of the defendant, out of the income of Brit Mahabrahmani and was, therefore, the joint property of the family. Regarding property No. 7 which as stated above was the Brit Mahabrahmani he found that as the parties were Mahabrahmans it belonged to them and their family from times immemorial, and was liable to be partitioned amongst them. As to property No. 3 he found that it never belonged to the parties' family, nor could it be considered to belong to it even now. The result was that he decreed the plaintiff's suit for partition in respect of all the properties in suit except property No. 3.

The defendants appealed to the learned Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki and he agreed with the finding of the learned Munsif relating to property No. 1 but disagreed with regard to other items of property in respect of which the suit had been decreed by the learned Munsif. Regarding properties Nos. 4 and 5 he came to the conclusion that they were properties of Ganga Din and although Sheo Dayal, father of the plaintiff, was an heir to Ganga Din, yet because he and the plaintiff had gone away to Secundrabad (Deccan) they had never been in possession of the said properties and the plaintiff's claim in regard thereto could not be maintained. As to item 6 he further found that it was an ahata or compound, which Raghubar, the father of the defendants, had purchased at an auction sale and it was consequently his own property. As to item 2 he took the same view that because it had been acquired by Raghubar, father of the defendants, it was also his exclusive property and could not be considered to be the joint family property. The view which he took regarding the income of Mahabrahmani dues was that it was the personal property of Mahabrahman to whom it was offered. Lastly, he said regarding property No. 7 that it was not such as could be partitioned in law. The result was that except item 1 he accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's claim in regard to all the items in suit.

The plaintiff-appellant has now appealed to this Court and in second appeal it is contended by the learned advocate on his behalf, firstly, that regarding properties Nos. 4 and 5 which had been found to be the properties of Ganga Din it was admitted that they passed by inheritance in equal shares to Raghubar, the ancestor of the defendants and Sheo Dayal, father of the plaintiff, and the mere fact that Raghubar alone was in possession of the said properties would not make him exclusive owner thereof; secondly, that regarding items 2 and 6 it having been found by the Courts below that they were built or acquired out of the Mahabrahmani income which was admittedly the joint family income of the parties, the said properties must also be deemed to be the properties belonging to the joint family and, therefore, liable to partition: thirdly, that the Brit Mahabrahmani ought to be treated as property capable of partition among the members of the family belonging to the parties. The case was argued at great length and we have taken time to consider our judgment. We now proceed to give our findings regarding each of these points.

First point:—As regards the first point it appears to us that the learned Subordinate Judge has taken an erroneous view. It is admitted by the parties that properties Nos. 4 and 5 belonged to Ganga Din and that after his death they passed by inheritance in equal shares to Raghubar and Sheo Dayal. Half the property would, therefore, go to Raghubar and his descendants and the other half would go to Sheo Dayal and his son, the plaintiff. This means that Raghubar and Sheo Dayal became cosharers in these properties and the mere fact, that Sheo Dayal, father of the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff himself did not take actual possession of the property, since they were absent from the village and resided in Secundrabad, would not make the possession of the other cosharer named Raghubar adverse. This has been held in a large number of cases both by their Lordships of the Privy Council as well as by this Court and other High Courts. We would only refer to a few decisions on the point because in our opinion the rule is so settled that it is not necessary for us to quote many authorities in support of the proposition or to discuss it in detail. We would mention Corea v. Appuhamy (1), Jogendranath Rai v. Baldeo Das (2), Mahipal Singh v. Sarju Prasad (3), Mahadeo Prasad v. Ram Lal (4). We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to a decree for a half share in properties Nos. 4 and 5.

Second point :—The second point relates to items 2 and 6. Item 2 is a grove situate in village Tanda and item 6 is an ahata (compound) in which now stands a phulwari (orchard). It was admitted by the parties before us that these items were acquired by Raghubar, father of defendant-respondent 1, out of the income of the joint family consisting of Mahabramani dues. It was admitted by the parties that the Brit Mahabrahmani was their ancestral property since they are Mahabrahmans and that the income derived therefrom went to support the entire family. Under these circumstances it appears to us to be clear that the properties Nos. 2 and 6, which were either acquired or built out of joint funds should also constitute joint family property. We are unable to treat the Mahabrahmani income as the exclusive property of Raghubar, father of the defendants. We, therefore, cannot accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point and must hold that properties Nos. 2 and 6 also constitute joint family property and the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to a half share therein.

Third point :—The next point that was argued before us was that Brit Mahabrahamani was "property" capable of partition among the members of the family, to which the said Brit appertained This was the position taken up by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant, whereas the argument of the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents was to the effect that the Brit could not be considered as "property" since it was at the option of jajmans (clients) to give or not to the defendants offerings on the occasion of funeral ceremonies occurring in their family.

The learned advocate for the appellant relied upon the following rulings :

The learned counsel for the defendants-respondents relied upon the following rulings :

Seeta Ram v. Sheodas (14) decided by Campbell, J. C., Bhagwan Din v. Mani Ram (15) decided by Mr. Macleod, O. J. C., Baddu v. Babu Lal (16) decided by Messrs. Evans and Greevan, Mahesh Prasad v. Bharath (17) decided by Mr. Lindsay (now Sir B Lindsay). We first proceed to discuss the authorities quoted on behalf of the respondents.

In Seeta Ram v. Sheodas (14) it was held by Campbell, J. C., that no one was entitled to a monopoly to make certain collections or from certain classes, and that the jajmans who paid the fee were perfectly free to employ whom they liked. There is no doubt as to the correctness of this proposition. Nobody can compel a particular person to make offerings on a particular occasion to him and him alone The matter must be left to the pleasure of the person making the offerings. This does not, however, touch the point, since what we have to decide is whether the right to receive such offerings can be considered as "property" or not. We do not agree with the argument advanced by the learned counsel for the respondents that since it is optional with the jajmans to pay the fee, it should not be considered to be any valuable right whatsoever. The right may not be capable of being enforced against strangers against their will but there can be no doubt that so far as the members of a particular family are concerned the right to receive such offerings must be a right and a very valuable one. Indeed it is within our experience that in pursuance of the exercise of such a right a large income is made by families whose profession is to deal with jajmans (clients)

In Bhagwan Din v. Mani Ram (15) the point to be decided in the case was whether in a case, where a third person had made a voluntary offering to one of the parties, it was not open to the other party to claim a share in it unless an agreement to that effect between the parties had been established. The view of law taken in that case was to the effect that no suit would lie by one Mahabrahman against another for recovery of the whole or a portion of such offerings unless on the basis of an agreement between the parties. We are not called upon to discuss the accuracy or otherwise of this proposition. It is enough for us to observe that when the right to receive Mahabrahmani dues is enjoyed by a Mahabrahman and after his death if the right devolves, in case such right is held to be capable of devolving upon his sons, there would be impliedly an agreement between them to participate in that right in equal shares. The point decided in this case does not, therefore, touch the point which is actually before us for decision. In Baddu v. Babu Lal (16) the point decided was that a contract amongst Mahabrahmans with respect to the distribution of alms to be received in the future by exercise of voluntary charges is not enforcible against the heirs or representatives of the parties to the agreement. If the right to receive alms be considered to be included within the definition of the word "property" the view taken in this case would be open to grave doubt.

It would thus appear that except the last case the other two cases referred to by the learned advocate for the defendants-respondents do not touch the point. As to the third case though the question for decision now before us was not directly in question in that case, yet the view of law propounded in that case would certainly support the contention raised by the learned counsel for the defendants.

In Mahesh Prasad v. Bharathi (17), it was held by Mr. Lindsay, J. C., that no contract for the division of money or other articles received by Mahabrahmans in the way of charity could be enforced except as between the immediate parties to the agreement. He followed the case quoted above, namely, Baddu v. Babu Lal (16).

We now turn to discuss the rulings relied upon by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant.

(17) [1920] 23 O. C. 252=59 I. C. 677.

In Badri v. Mulloo (5) it was held that the right to receive offerings as malis (gardners) attached to a particular temple situate in the city of Lucknow was a right of property and a suit for declaration and perpetual injunction with respect thereto would lie in a civil Court.

This case has no doubt supports the view urged by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant.

In Raghubar v. Mt. Rukmin (6), the view taken was to the effect that an arrangement among Mahabrahmans of the place regulating the terms in which they should act or the method in which the offerings should be collected or divided and which does not control or restrict the discretion of the persons to whom the services are to be rendered by whom the offerings or gifts are to be made, is valid and binding between the parties to that agreement.

In Bachhpali v. Chandresar Dei (7) the chaukis at Ajudhya "were the subject-matter of partition." These chaukis are well understood spots on the banks of the river Sarju, where one or the other member of the family of pandas sits, receives his clients, and helps them in the observance of their religious ceremonies connected with the river such as bathing, offering flowers, etc., for which services remuneration is usually paid by the clients, who choose to avail themselves of those services. It was held that such a right constituted property in law and a suit for a share in the business resulting in such gains was maintainable. This case also supports the view urged before us by the learned advocate for the appellant to a great extent.

In Beni Madho v. Hira Lal (8), it was held that the rights of a Pragwal who used a particular kind of flag to attract the notice of pilgrims, who wanted to find him out, could devolve by a right of inheritance to his widow and if any other person put up a flag similar to the one used by him so as to mislead the pilgrims into the belief that he was the representative of the Pragwal, an action could be maintained by the widow to prevent such persons from using the flag since his action in doing so was unlawful. It was observed in that case by Piggott, J., that in such a case the question to be determined was whether the plaintiff had or had not a right to carry on certain business in or about a particular locality and if any stranger interfered with such exercises of the right, it was to be considered as an unlawful interference with the conduct of that business. It would thus appear that in the opinion of their Lordships the right to carry on the business as a Pragwal in a particular locality was a right which could be enforced in the Court of law.

In Ram Chander v. Channu Lal (9), it was held that where the "brit jajmani" consisted of offerings given to a Pragwal by pilgrims when they came to bathe in the Ganges the division of the brit could not be carried out by allotting clients to one party or the other but only by the division of the books in which pilgrims entered their names We are unable to follow this ruling. If "brit jajmani" is divisible, the division can take place by allotting clients or allotting localities. The division so made, it is obvious, would not be any ground for the person in whose share a particular jajman (client) had fallen to compel that jajman to make offerings to him. The effect of such an allotment would only be that if offerings were willingly made by such jajmans they would go to one member of the family in preference to another.

In Lokya v. Sulli (10), it was held that the right known as "brit jajmani" was heritable The head-note says that they are also transferable, but the judgment itself does not go to that extent. This case is no doubt in favour of the contention put forward by the plaintiff-appellant.

In Narayan Lal v. Chullan Lal (11), it was held by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court that although prima facie when a gift is made to a priest by a pilgrim the money belongs to him in his personal capacity, yet members of the family may agree amongst themselves that whoever amongst them may earn anything by officiating as a priest, the income is to be brought into a common fund and divided in certain proportions amongst them. This was also a suit for partition and the parties to the case were members of a family of Gayawals. The partition of "brit jajmani" was allowed by allotting books to the different members of the family, which indicates that the persons to whom such books were allotted would approach the clients whose names were entered therein. It was indicated by their Lordships that where such a property was saleable and did not admit of a physical division partition could be effected by declaring that the enjoyment of the property was to be in turns as in a case of right to worship. It was also observed in that case that no Court should be inclined to accede to the contention that the property was indivisible or impartible unless it could be shown that the division thereof would be against public right or policy or would tend to impair some paramount right existing in a stranger to the co-tenancy or would outrage the public sense of propriety, decency and good morals. We need not state that the partition of "brit Mahabrahmani" cannot in any case be considered to be against the public right or policy or against the good sense of propriety, decency and good morals.

In Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargowan Ramji (12), it was held that under Hindu law the office of the hereditary priest (yajman vritti) was a nibandha and ranked among the hereditary rights to the immovable property. The argument advanced by the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant was that "brit Mahabrahmans" was also similarly to be considered as immovable property under the Hindu law and therefore capable of inheritance and partition by the descendants of a particular Hindu in enjoyment thereof.

In Girjashankar Daji v. Murlidhar Narain (13), it was again held that an hereditary office of a priest was in the nature of immovable property and a plaintiff would ordinarily be entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with that immovable property. The case quoted above, namely, Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargowan Ramji (12) was relied upon. It would appear from the two rulings of the Bombay High Court quoted above that a jajmani brit (right to receive offerings) is considered in Hindu law as immovable property and if this is the case, it would clearly be heritable and partible. We do not enter into the vexed question whether such a right is transferable or not. It is not necessary for us to do so in the present case. The point which we have to decide is whether this right can be considered to be included within the definition of the word "property" as understood in Hindu law.

In Ragghoo Pandey v. Kassy Parey (18) Mitter and Tottenham, JJ. held that a right to officiate as a priest at funeral ceremonies of Hindus was in the nature of immovable property. Two previous decisions of the Bombay High Court reported in Krishna Bhat v. Kapabhat (19) and Balvantrav v. Purshotam Sidheshvar (20) were relied upon by their Lordships in support of the decision. The texts of the Hindu law appearing upon this question, it was observed by their Lordships, are all collected in these two judgments of the Bombay High Court. A decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Fatteh Singhji Jaswant Sangji v. Killian Kaiji Hekormutt Raiji (21) was also relied upon where their Lordships had held that an hereditary right to receive certain payments payable by an inamdar out of rents of a village was to be considered as an interest in the immovable property.

In Sukh Lal v. Bishambhar (22) their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court consisting of Richards, C. J., and Banerji, J., approved of the ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported in Ragghoo Pandey v Kassy Parey (18) and held that Mahabrahmani dues could be considered as property capable of being transferred and that a mortgage of the same was permissible. We do not see, as stated above, the necessity to decide the question of transferability of such rights, since it is not at all necessary to do so for our purposes. It is sufficient for us to decide that the right is considered by the Hindu law as immovable property and if so it would be clearly heritable and partible.

In English Treatises on Inheritance S. 206, para. 96, the rule is quoted as follows:

"The right of performing religious ceremonies of certain classes of people as Poorohit, is by custom considered analogous to real property. The ancestral priest, that is, he who has been honoured by former generations with employment of officiating priest, and the priest appointed by the party himself, cannot be discarded without good and sufficient cause; but there is no legal authority for establishing the right of the heirs to officiate. The male heir of an hereditary poorohit is, however, by custom considered entitled thereto, but not the heirs of an appointed priest. A female cannot succeed to such right and perform the ceremonies by a substitute, because she can appoint a substitute only for worldly affairs, not for solemn acts for the performance of which she herself is disqualified. Several male heirs share the fees according to their respective portions, and if they have divided the jajmans among them, each one will take the fees from his respective jajmans."

On a view of the authorities quoted above we have come to the conclusion that under Hindu law the right to receive offerings from jajmans is considered as immovable property and, therefore, capable of passing by inheritance to the heirs of the person in enjoyment of such rights and is, therefore, divisible among the heirs.

We would, therefore, declare that property No. 7 which consists of brit Mahabrahmini should also be declared as capable of being divided among the parties to this case and the plaintiff should be allowed a half-share therein. This division can be conveniently made by allotting particular days or periods to the parties according to their shares. The result is that the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree in respect of the properties Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7. There is no dispute regarding property No. 3 in respect of which the plaintiff's claim has been dismissed by the two Courts below.

Another point was raised on behalf of the defendants-respondents in the cross-objections. It was to the effect that the suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for partition should be dismissed since he had not brought into hotchpot the property acquired by him and his father at Secundrabad (Deccan). The defendants, however, did not file any list showing such properties and the objection raised by them is under the circumstances a futile one. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and restore the decree passed by the learned Munsif with costs in this and the Courts below. The cross-objections filed by the defendants-respondents will also stand dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Sitapur, dated 24th November 1927, setting aside the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, dated 20th July 1927 in an execution case.

The following facts are no longer in controversy. One Nawab Singh was the owner of a $\frac{1}{8}$th share in khata No. 18/8 in village Kachuri in the district of Gonda. That share was equivalent to 16 bighas 4 biswas $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswansis. It appears that the tenure of the village is bhayachari. Nawab Singh sold 1 bigha 17 biswas to Sheo Bakhsh Singh and then he mortgaged his remaining 14 bighas 7 biswas $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswansis share to Ganga Bakhsh Singh on 2nd June 1919. It was a simple mortgage. He then made a gift of 2 biswas $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswansis share in favour of Bhola Singh. Subsequently, on 1st February 1920 he executed another mortgage in respect of his 14 bighas 5 biswas share in favour of Sheo Bakhsh Singh. This mortgage was a possessory mortgage. Sheo Bakhsh Singh was directed to pay off Ganga Bakhsh Singh's mortgage of 2nd June 1919. However he failed to pay off that mortgage. As the money due to Ganga Bakhsh was never paid, he brought a suit for sale of the mortgage property in March 1925 against Bhola Singh and Sheo Bakhsh Singh. It should be noted that Bhola Singh was impleaded as the heir of Nawab Singh who had died in the meanwhile. Ganga Bakhsh's claim was decreed by the Court in respect of the property comprised in his mortgage. The preliminary decree was passed on 24th November 1925 and the final decree, on 24th September 1926. It so happened that the village was partitioned by order of the revenue Court in the meantime but this fact was not brought by any of the parties to the notice of the Court. All the parties who are parties to this litigation were parties to the partition case also. The result of the partition was that two biswas 2½ biswansis share of Nawab Singh in khata No. 18/8 was allotted to khata No. 8 which was named after Bhola Singh and the share of 14 bighas 5 biswas was allotted to khata No. 11 named after Sheo Bakhsh Singh. It was expressly stated in the tarz taqsim that the land allotted to khata No. 11 is both proprietary as well as mortgage land of Sheo Bakhsh Singh. It is not denied that the mortgage land was that very land which was comprised in the possessory mortgage of Sheo Bakhsh Singh dated 1st February 1920.

Ganga Bakhsh Singh applied for execution of the decree. His application was opposed by Bhola Singh and Sheo Bakhsh Singh. Bhola Singh had no objection to the sale of 2 biswas 2½ biswansis gifted land that had been allotted to his khata No. 8. Sheo Bakhsh's contention was that he had become the owner of all the lands in khata No. 11 by virtue of partition and therefore Ganga Bakhsh Singh had no right to proceed against any land of that khata. There is no doubt that he had raised this objection dishonestly. The fact is that the property which had been mortgaged to him by Nawab Singh had been allotted to his khata as mortgagee and not as proprietor It was also contended on behalf of Sheo Bakhsh Singh that the question as to the property against which execution was to be taken out could not be determined or decided in the execution proceedings.

The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the objection of Sheo Bakhsh Singh. He directed that the execution application should be amended so as to enable the decree-holder to execute the decree in respect of 2 biswas 2½ biswansis out of khata No. 8 and 14 bighas 5 biswas out of khata No. 11.

Sheo Bakhsh Singh appealed and his appeal was allowed by the learned District Judge of Sitapur. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the decree-holder could not claim to execute his decree against a khata different to that specified in the decree, and that the decree-holder should apply for a formal amendment of the decree Ganga Bakhsh Singh has now come to this Court in second appeal.

We think this appeal should be allowed. The only point for determination in this appeal is whether the share of 14 bighas 5 biswas land which was allotted to Sheo Bakhsh Singh's khata No. 11 and was shown therein as mortgage land can be sold in execution of Ganga Bakhsh's decree. In our opinion this question must be answered in the affirmative. It is clear that the lands of the entire khata No. 11 have not been allotted to Sheo Bakhsh Singh as a proprietor and lands representing the share of 14 bighas 5 biswas have been allotted to him as a mortgagee from Nawab Singh. There is no reason why the decree obtained by Ganga Bakhsh Singh should not be executed against the said share which has been allotted to Sheo Bakhsh Singh's khata No. 11. The learned counsel for the respondents has argued before us that there was no specification of lands and so the decree could not be executed against any land of Sheo Bakhsh Singh' khata No. 11 We think this contention is not well founded. The property in respect of which the decree was passed represented the share of the mortgagor in a bhayachari village.

Mutation was effected in favour of Sheo Bakhsh Singh in respect of that very share as evidenced by Ex. 1. Lands to the extent of 14 bighas 5 biswas which have been allotted to khata No. 11 as mortgage lands must be held to represent the property in respect of which the decree was passed, and this is a sufficient specification of the mortgaged property which is to be sold in execution of the decree. We think the principle of decision in the case of Baijnath Goenka v. Ravaneshwar Prasad Singh (1) helps the appellant's case. It was held in that case that where a decree gives a right to possession of a share in any land in ijmali mahal which has already been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act, the Court in proceedings for execution of the decree has power under S. 47, Civil P. C., 1908, to put the decree-holder in possession of the specific lands substituted for his share on partition. No difficulty arises in this case so far as identification of the mortgaged property is concerned. The property in dispute which formerly belonged to khata No. 18/8 now belongs to khata No. 11 and Sheo Bakhsh Singh held the same under the mortgage of 1st February 1920. We are not prepared to grant the request made by the learned counsel for the respondent that the case should be remanded to ascertain what lands out of khata No. 11 represent the mortgaged property It is unnecessary in this case to make any inquiry as to the identity of the property when the extent of the share representing the mortgaged property is sufficiently clear.

The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore that of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellant will get his costs from the respondent Sheo Bakhsh Singh in all the three Courts.

Opinion.

Pullan, J.—The question referred to this Full Bench is as follows:

"Is it open to a member of a joint Hindu family to acquire by pre-emption a portion of the property belonging to the joint family of which he happens to be a member, when the said property has been sold by the manager of the family, for family necessity or otherwise."

We are not concerned with the case where the whole of a joint family property has been sold, but only with the case where a portion of the property has been sold, and therefore every member of the joint family still possesses in virtue of his position as a joint owner an interest in that portion of the family property which has not been sold. The right of any person to pre-empt depends on his fulfilling the requirements of S. 9, Oudh Laws Act. It appears to me that every member of a joint Hindu family owning joint family property is a cosharer in the family property and is therefore prima facie a person entitled to pre-empt the property of another cosharer in the same mahal or khata as the case may be. The difficulty which arises in the case of a cosharer in the property which is being sold is due to the objection that a man cannot, ordinarily speaking, buy his own property which is the principle underlying the rulings which have induced us to refer this case for decision of a Full Bench. It is said that:

"A man cannot successively occupy the position of vendor and pre-emptor in respect of the same transaction."

This is the view taken of a case such as we have before us by Mr. Daniels, J. C. in the case of Gajadhar v. Lal Behari (1). It is also the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Partap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (2) In that case the Judges described the cosharer who wished to pre-empt that sale as being "practically" a vendor. In my opinion it is not correct to regard other members of a family who have taken no part in the sale of a portion of the family property as vendors. The vendor is the person who executes the sale, and it is clear that although he is in the position of being able to dispose of the family property and thereby the interests of persons other than himself by means of sale, they may take no part in the transaction, and may even contest it by means of suit. They are not therefore properly described as vendors although the property sold belongs partly to them. Nor do they become vendors merely because in order to bring a suit for pre-emption they must admit the validity of the sale. This admission of the validity of the sale was insisted upon by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Abdul Wahab Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (3) but the only effect of this admission is to deprive the cosharer of his right to dispute the legal necessity of the sale, that is to say he cannot seek to pre-empt the sale and at the same time say that the sale is not for legal necessity. By offering to buy the property himself, he admits not only that the property can be legally sold, but that he wishes it to be sold. On the other hand, I am not prepared to say that he has deprived himself of his right to object to the sale in favour of a certain vendee if that vendee is not acceptable to him. It is not the case that a member of the joint Hindu family cannot acquire by purchase the interest of another member of the family, and where a sale has been effected by one member and the sale is such that it cannot be successfully disputed under the terms of Hindu law, I see no reason why a cosharer, who owns an interest in the property sold, should not come forward and buy the property rather than allow it to pass into the hands of strangers. I can see nothing in the transaction which is contrary even to the terms of Hindu law. but the only question which is to be decided is whether the cosharer, in a case such as has been propounded to us, is entitled to bring a suit for pre-emption under S. 9, Oudh Laws Act, and there is nothing in the definition contained in that section which prohibits the cosharer from bringing such a suit. This view, although it did not find favour with two Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in the case cited above Gajadhar v. Lal Behari (1) had been taken more than once by other Judges of the same Court. In particular, I would refer to the decision of Mr. Wazir Hasan, Additional Judicial Commissioner (now Mr. Hasan, J.) in Ramadhin Singh v. Surajpal Singh (4). This judgment follows one of the earliest reported decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, viz., Hazari Singh v. Joot Singh (5). Mr. Daniels was of opinion that Mr Wazir Hasan was wrong in distinguishing the case which he was trying from the case reported in the case of Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (6). The same passage in that judgment has been quoted both in the case of Gajadhar v. Lal Behari (1) and Ramadhin Singh v. Surajpal Singh (4) and in my opinion, the distinction drawn in the latter case was a very real distinction.

In the case of Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (6), the sale transferred all the interest in the property on which the cosharers could base a suit for pre-emption. Thus when they had admitted the sale they had admitted that all their rights had passed by that sale, and at the moment when they came into the Court they were not cosharers; and they were therefore deprived by S 9, Oudh Laws Act, from bringing a suit for pre-emption. On this account the Judicial Commissioners observed that the proper course would appear to have been to attack the sale itself. But I am not prepared to hold that the cosharers, as long as they possess some other interest in the property which has not been sold, and are therefore persons entitled to pre-empt under the Oudh Laws Act, are debarred from exercising this right merely because a part of their own interest has been transferred along with the interest of others by the sale which they wish to pre-empt. I would therefore reply to the question referred to us as follows: It is open to a member of a joint Hindu family to acquire by pre-emption a portion of the property belonging to the joint family of which he happens to be a member, when the said property has been sold by the manager of the family. The question of family property is immaterial, because by making a claim for pre-emption the cosharer is precluded from disputing the validity of the sale on the ground that it was not for family necessity.

Misra, J.—The question referred to us is as follows :

"Is it open to a member of a joint Hindu family to acquire by pre-emption a portion of the property belonging to the joint family of which he happens to be a member when the said property has been sold by the manager of the family for family necessity or otherwise?"

The facts of the case are that one Chhattar Singh, who owned certain land situate in village Harnathpur, district Sitapur, sold a portion of the said land to one Gur Bakhsh Singh for Rupees 1,978-13-0. Gur Bakhsh Singh is admittedly a stranger to the village. Two suits for pre-emption were brought, one by his son Ajodhya Singh and the other by Hewanchal Singh, who was also a cosharer in the village. The suit of Ajodhya Singh was contested by Hewanchal Singh on the ground that inasmuch as the property sold belonged to the joint family consisting of Ajodhya Singh and his father Chattar Singh, it was not open to him to bring a suit for pre-emption in respect of the property sold by his own father, who was the head and the manager of the family. This contention has been overruled by both the Courts below who have held that Ajodhya Singh, being the son of Chattar Singh, is more nearly related to the vendor than Hewanchal Singh. They have, therefore, passed a decree to the effect that Ajodhya Singh should be given a preferential right to pre-empt the property in suit and failing him the right should be given to Hewanchal Singh. The Courts below are of opinion that since a portion of the family property has still remained undisposed of Ajodhya Singh must be treated to be still a cosharer in the village on the strength of that property and the fact that the property sold consisted of the joint family property should not stand in the way of his getting a decree for pre-emption. The reference before us is in connexion with the two appeals, which have arisen out of these rival suits for pre-emption.

On behalf of the appellant reliance has been placed upon the two rulings of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, one reported in Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (6) and the other reported in Gajadhar v. Lal Behari (1) and a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (2).

On behalf of the respondents reliance has, however, been placed upon two other cases decided by the late Court of the the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, one reported in Hazari Singh v. Joot Singh (5) and Ram Adhin Singh v. Surajpal Singh (4).

In the cases relied upon by the appellant it has been held that where a sale-deed has been executed in regard to the property owned by a joint family, a member of that family cannot be allowed to pre-empt the property sold, whereas in the case relied upon by the respondents a contrary view has been taken.

We have to decide which view we ought to hold as the correct view with reference to the pre-emption law embodied in the Oudh Laws Act, 18 of 1876. After carefully studying those provisions it appears to me that if the right of a party to claim pre-emption in Oudh is to be, as it must be, determined in accordance with the said Act the view urged by the respondent must be accepted. Under S. 13, Oudh Laws Act, any person entitled to a right of pre-emption is given a right to bring his suit to enforce such right in case the sale made in favour of the person, against whom he wishes to exercise the right, has been effected without his having been given a due notice of the proposal in respect of the said sale. The persons, who are entitled to a right of pre-emption, are enumerated in S. 9 of the said Act. According to that section the right to pre-empt is given first to cosharers of the subdivision of the tenure in which the property is comprised in order of their relationship to the vendor, then it is given to the cosharers of the whole mahal in the same order and lastly the right is given to any member of the village community. It is further declared that if two or more persons are equally entitled to such right the person to exercise the same shall be determined by lot. Looking to these provisions it appears to me to be clear that if Ajodhya Singh can be considered to be a cosharer in the village on the basis of property other than sold he would be entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption in respect of the sale in question. It is admitted by the parties in this case that no notice of the sale in dispute was given to him and under the circumstances he would be entitled to bring a suit in accordance with the provisions of S. 13.

It has been consistently ruled both in Oudh and in the Allahabad High Court that in order to determine whether a person is a cosharer in the village or not it is not necessary that he should be a recorded cosharer. If he is really entitled in law to certain proprietary rights in the village, he should be deemed a cosharer for the purposes of pre-emption, although his name is not recorded in the khewat. This position is obvious from the language used by the legislature in the Act itself. S 9 does not give the right to recorded cosharers only. It gives right to all cosharers irrespective of the fact whether they are recorded cosharers or not. In Lalta Singh v. Chattar Singh (7). Mr. Stuart (now Sir Louis Stuart) and Pt. K. Lall took the view that the entry of a person's name in the khewat was not a condition precedent to his being entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption. In the Allahabad High Court the said view was taken so far back as 1885 in a Full Bench decision reported in Gandharp Singh v. Sahib Singh (8). In that case the point decided by the Full Bench was to the effect that the members of a joint undivided Hindu family other than the member who was recorded in the village recorded as a cosharer in the mahal, were to be deemed as cosharers for the purpose of pre-emption. On the strength of these rulings there can be no doubt that Ajodhya Singh, the son of Chattar Singh, who was admittedly a member of the joint undivided family with his father Chattar Singh must be deemed to be a cosharer for the purpose of pre-emption, though his name was not recorded in the khewat Indeed this point was not seriously contested by the learned advocate for the appellant.

The main argument of the learned advocate for the appellant was that since the sale made by Chattar Singh was a sale of the joint family property justified by legal necessity it must be deemed to be a valid sale on behalf of all the members of the family includiug Ajodhya Singh The argument was that if it was a sale binding on all the members of the family it must be treated to be a sale on behalf of Ajodhya Singh also and if Ajodhya Singh was to be treated as a vendor, it was difficult for him to claim the right of pre-emption, since the vendor himself could not be allowed to exercise the right of pre-emption in respect of a sale effected by himself. The basis of this argument is obviously the fact that a member of the joint family claiming pre-emption is to be treated as a vendor. Although a member of the joint family whose property has been sold may loosely be described as a vendor, yet strictly speaking he cannot be in the eyes of law deemed as a vendor. This would be clear from the fact that he can in certain cases, for instance, where the sale is not justified by legal necessity, challenge the transaction. If in all cases a member of a joint Hindu family is to be treated as a vendor, it would not be possible for him to challenge the transaction in any case whatsoever. A vendor cannot obviously be allowed to challenge his own act. The real position seems to me to be that a member of a joint Hindu family is to be treated merely as a person upon whom the sale is to be binding if effected for legal necessity. It is not correct to describe him as a vendor but only as a person, who in certain circumstances is bound by the sale. If he is to be treated as a person bound by the sale, it would be perfectly open to him to treat the transaction as a valid sale and if there is still left a portion of the family property upon the strength of which he could still claim to be a cosharer, I do not think why he should not be allowed to exercise the right of pre-emption given to him by the statute law as indicated above.

In Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Singh (6), which was a case decided by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh consisting of Mr. Macleod and Mr Chamier (now Sir Edward Chamier), a case which was cited by the learned advocate for the appellant in his support, the following passage was relied upon :

"It seems to me that Ram Bharose and Mool Narain are on the horns of dilemma. They must either admit that the sale was a valid one or deny that it was so. If they admit that the sale was a valid one then any interest they had in the property before the sale must have been lost to them on the sale taking place, and therefore they had no subsisting title at the date of the institution of the suit ; while if they deny their father had power to transfer their interest they are precluded from claiming pre-emption."

I have underlined (italicised) the words in the above passage which in my opinion are a key to the whole situation. It appears to me from the facts given in the report that apart from the property sold, Ram Dayal the appellant pre-emptor, had no other property left, upon which he could claim a subsisting title at the date of the institution of the suit. In such a case indeed the position would be as observed in the passage quoted above. Where, however, there is still some joint property left unsold, on the basis of which the member of the family can base his title of being a cosharer or where he possesses his own separate property on the basis of which he can claim pre-emption, there is no reason why he should not be treated as a cosharer and entitled to exercise the right, which he is entitled to in law.

In Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (2) the gist of the decision is embodied in the following passage to be found on page 265 :

"The interests of all were joint and to allow the plaintiffs to pre-empt would be tantamount to allowing a man to be both a vendor and a pre-emptor one after the other."

I have already tried to show in the previous portion of my judgment that a member of a joint Hindu family cannot in connexion with the sale of the joint family property which is to be held binding on him be treated as a vendor. There is no justification for holding him as such in the Hindu law. It is one thing to say that the sale is binding upon him and quite the other to say that he is to be treated as a vendor.

A case decided by the Lahore High Court was also quoted during the course of arguments. It will be found reported in Sukha Ram v. Kotu Ram (9). In that case the learned Judge of the Lahore High Court followed the case decided by the Allahabad High Court reported in Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (2). The learned Judge has not given any reasons for treating a member of a joint Hindu family as a vendor other than those given in the decision relied upon by him

The conclusion to which I, therefore, arrive is that where a sale of a joint family property has been effected by the manager of the said family for family necessity, it would be open to a member of the said joint family to treat the sale as valid and to acquire by pre-emption the portion of the property sold. In the case where it is not effected for family necessity, it would be open to him to treat the sale as valid or otherwise. If he wishes to bring a suit for pre-emption he must treat it as a valid sale, without which no suit for pre-emption can be legally brought. If he wishes to treat the sale as invalid it would be open to him to attack it as such, but it would not be open to him in that case to acquire the property by pre-emption. If, however, the entire family property is sold for legal necessity and there is left no family property on which the member of the joint family can base his title as a cosharer or if he does not possess any separate property of his own he cannot be allowed to exercise the right of pre-emption. The very basis upon which such right could be exercised has been lost to him. In such a case he cannot be allowed to pre-empt the property. If the entire property has been sold not for family necessity, obviously the course open to him in law would be, if so advised, to attack the sale itself, I, therefore, answer the reference in the terms quoted above.

(9) [1921] 67 I. C. 76.

Wazir Hasan, Ag. C. J.—The question involved in this reference was considered and decided by me so far back as June 1921 in the case of Ram Adhin Singh v. Surajpal Singh (4). My learned brother, Pullan, J., has referred to this case in his judgment relating to this reference. To the view which I then held I still adhere and the contrary view taken in the case of Gajadhar v. Lal Behari (1), in express dissent from my opinion has failed to commend itself to me. In giving my answer to this reference I propose to reproduce mutatis mutandis my judgment in the aforementioned case.

To determine the right of a party to pre-emption we must primarily look to the provisions of the Oudh Laws Act (18 of 1876) by which the right is conferred upon persons residing in the territory of Oudh. S. 3, sub-section (c), of the Act says that the law to be administered by the Courts of Oudh shall be "the rules contained in this Act." S. 6 of the same Act is as follows :

"The right of pre-emption is a right of the persons hereinafter mentioned or referred to, to acquire, in the cases hereinafter specified, immovable property in preference to all other persons."

Such persons are enumerated and classified in S 9. Where immovable property is owned by a joint Hindu family it must be admitted that every member of that family is a cosharer in that property in relation to every other member of the same family. S. 13 of the Act gives cause of action to an intending pre-emptor to bring a suit for pre-emption for the purpose of acquiring the property in preference to the person to whom it has been sold on breach of the terms laid down in Ss. 10, 11 and 12 and also on the ground that the price stated in the notice was not fixed in good faith. It would thus appear that on the terms of the enactment just now mentioned a member of a joint Hindu family when he is possessed of the status of a cosharer on the date of the sale on the basis of his interest in immovable property outside the subject-matter of the sale is entitled to bring a suit for pre-emption in respect of that sale by reason of the breach of the conditions which the law imposes on the intending vendor and on the fulfilment of which alone the cosharer's right to enforce his title to pre-empt is excluded. This to my mind is an irresistible conclusion which flows from the interpretation of the clear provisions of law. But it is argued that there is a general principle of the Hindu law which destroys the right of pre-emption existing on the terms of the statute in favour of a member of a joint Hindu family where the sale intended to be pre-empted is made by another member of the same family. The argument is that when one member of a joint Hindu family sells property to a stranger another member of the same family must be treated as also a vendor. In support of this appeal reference is made to the juristic conception of a joint Hindu family and the relations in which the members of the family stand to each other and the case of Himmat Bahadur v. Bhawani Kunwar (10) is cited. I accept the analysis of the concept of a joint Hindu family so elaborately made in that judgment but the conclusion which it is sought to be drawn from that analysis does not appear to me to follow, nor can it override the statutory law to which reference has already been made.

In the Full Bench case of Gandharp Singh v. Saheb Singh (8) it was held that the members of a joint and undivided Hindu family other than the member who is recorded in the Collector's book as a sharer in the mahal are "cosharers" for the purposes of pre-emption. In that case the vendees resisted the suit for pre-emption on the ground that they were cosharers in the village in the right of members of a joint and undivided Hindu family and the defence was upheld by the Full Bench. The effect of such a defence being recognized as valid logically leads to the conclusion that the vendees had a right to retain the property in preference to the pre-emptor and that they could equally well enforce their right of pre-emption as members of a joint Hindu family, being possessed of interest in the family property, a portion of which was sold, had they been plaintiffs and the vendee a stranger. This conclusion can only be avoided by taking the view that in the former case the vendees and in the latter case, the plaintiffs pre-emptors were also vendors. To my mind such a view is wholly untenable. The Full Bench decision has been admitted in the old Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh as enunciating good law. In the case of Hazari Singh v. Joot Singh (5) Mr. Blennerhassett, J. C, referred to that case with approval and held that a suit for pre-emption by a member of a joint Hindu family, who happened to be the son of the vendor in that case, was maintainable in respect of a sale made by his father with whom he formed the joint Hindu family. In that judgment Mr. Blennerhassett referred to an earlier decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Raghunath (S. C A No. 652 of 1885, dated 16th September 1885) which had decided that the son was entitled to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the property sold by his father with whom he was joint and undivided. A reference was also made in this connexion to a decision of a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner in the case of Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (6). The ratio decidendi of that case may best be explained in the language of Macleod, A. J. C., who delivered the judgment of the Court.

"It seems to me that Ram Bharose and Mul Narain are on the horns of a dilemma. They must either admit that the sale was a valid one or deny that it was so. If they admit that the sale was a valid one, then any interest they had in the property before the sale must have been lost to them on the sale taking place, and therefore they had no subsisting title at the date of the institution of their suit, while if they deny that their father had power to transfer their interest they are precluded from claiming pre-emption."

Now it is perfectly clear that the title of Ram Bharose and Mul Narain to pre-empt rested on their interest in the property which was the subject matter of the sale and apparently there was no other property in which they had interest and upon which they could found their status of cosharers.

The argument that the intending pre-emptor is a vendor in a case where he is a member of a joint Hindu family and the sale is of a portion of the family property by another member is supported by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Pratap Narain Singh v Shiam Lal (2). With due respect I am not prepared to accept the decision as a sound one. A plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption must accept the validity of the sale he intends to pre-empt and of the vendor's title to affect it. If he denies either the one or the other according to the law in force in Oudh he is debarred from claiming a right of pre-emption. This view is founded upon a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (3). The plaintiff with a view to successfully exercise his right of pre-emption is therefore bound to accept the sale which has given rise to the cause of action. For the reason of this fact alone that he has accepted the sale as a valid sale I am unable to clothe such a plaintiff with the character of a vendor. I am of opinion that a member of a joint Hindu family who consents to the sale of a portion of the family property by another member of the same family is in no sense a vendor. His consent merely takes the place of legal necessity on proof of which the sale would be valid against every member of the family. Such a consent is a substitute for the evidence of legal necessity and when established merely works out as an estoppel by force of which the member giving the consent is debarred from challenging the sale on the ground open to him under the Hindu law. This I understand is the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (11).

Such an estoppel cannot in my opinion debar him of his right to exercise the claim of pre-emption which exists in his favour outside the transaction of sale and only arises subsequent to and after a valid sale has been proposed and carried through. One member of a family may sell a portion of the family property under pressure of legal necessity, yet it may be effected in teeth of protest by other members of the family. The sale will be binding on those members under the Hindu law and yet I hold that it is impossible to predicate of them as vendors. Take the case of a joint estate owned by two tenants in common. Having regard to the nature of the tenancy each tenant is seized per my et per tout and each is the owner of an undivided moiety. Assume further that a portion of this hereditament is sold by only one of the two tenants. Clearly it is open to the other tenant either to object to the sale and seek relief for its cancellation, or to waive his objection and accept the sale as conveying his undivided interest also. Now having been faced with an election between consent and contest he elects the former course. Can it reasonably be said that having done so he becomes a vendor and is therefore precluded from exercising his right of pre-emption? I think not. My answer therefore to the reference is in the affirmative.

Judgment.—Taule Chamar has been convicted of the murder of his sister-in-law Mt. Bhajania and sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. In this appeal he has re-stated the defence which he put up at the outset of the case namely, that Mt. Bhajania was killed by dacoits who carried off his entire belongings. There is no doubt that Mt. Bhajania was murdered. She received some seven injuries from a gandasa, mostly on the neck and head. No less than three of the injuries were on her face. There is also no reason to doubt that the murder was committed some time after midnight on 25th October 1928. The first report was made by Taule himself, who was accompanied by the village chaukidar and his own father Dujai and his uncle Puran. The report was not made till 10 a. m. at a police station, which is not more than 5½ miles from the village in which the crime was committed. There was therefore considerable delay in making the report and this delay has been accounted for by the fact that the father of the accused was absent on the night of the crime, and nothing was done until he returned in the morning. The report is in some ways a curious one. The first thing to be noticed is that there is no direct reference to the murder or the manner in which Mt. Bhajania met her death. The accused stated that two men, one of whom was a Mahomedan of Kauriya and the other was Baldeo Chamar, pressed down Mt Bhajania who was the wife of Taule's younger brother. He went on to say that Niranjan Chamar of the village, Bakkas Mussulman of Kauriya Kandhai, Arakh of Kauriya and a certain Natha, who was apparently a Teli by caste, came into the house and took the wristlets off both Taule's hands while he was sleeping. Then he woke up, saw them all and recognized them. They asked for the money and began striking him with the wrong, that is, blunt side of a knife. On this he gave up Rs. 25 in cash which were buried, and the thieves took him outside to his maize field and left him there. Later on in the report he mentioned certain articles which had been stolen and said that he had received injuries from the wrong side of the knife on the left side of his body. But he did not mention the two cuts which were found on the back of his left leg.

On investigation the report as to the dacoity was found to be untrue. There was no sign that any dacoity had been committed. The floor had not been dug up and there were numerous utensils lying by the bed of the murdered girl. Nor were her injuries such as could reasonably be expected to have been inflicted by dacoits. Such injuries, particularly cuts on the face inflicted upon a woman are generally the work of a disappointed lover; and it must have been evident to any one who saw the corpse that she had been murdered for some definite motive and not merely killed by dacoits in an attempt to rob the house.

The Sub-Inspector before proceeding to the village sent Taule for medical examination and he did not arrest him until the following morning. Before making his arrest it appears that he had investigated the state of affairs existing in this family and he had also heard the statement of Puran, the uncle of the accused, who has now stated in Court that immediately after the murder the accused confessed to him that he had himself committed the crime.

The lower Court has based the conviction largely upon the confession made to Puran and second confession said to have been made to one Thakur Karam Singh who is a ziladar of the Kapurthala estate. He has made mention of a judgment reported in Emperor v Badal (1), where it was held that the evidence of admission of guilt to villagers may be sufficient to justify the conviction of an accused person. This judgment has been re-affirmed lately by this Court in Sheo Ratan v. Emperor (2) and it is not necessary for us to state again our reasons for holding this view. At the same time it must be remembered that the evidence that such a confession has been made must be as closely scrutinized as all other evidence which is used to prove a case of murder. In the present case one of the so-called confessions is in our opinion inadmissible in evidence that is the one said to have been made to Thakur Karam Singh, Ziladar of the Landanpur Grant Circle of the Kapurthala estate in which the village of Pipra is situated. We consider that a ziladar serving under a great estate such as that of Kapurthala is a person of great importance in the villages which belong to that estate and he is a person who has authority over the villagers. Indeed it is he to whom they look in everything relating to their tenancy and all those matters which are important for their livelihood. In our opinion such a ziladar is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act. It was held by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Har Piari (3) that a village mukhia is a person in authority and various other village officials and persons in similar positions have from time to time been held by various Courts to come within that definition In our opinion a ziladar, such as this person Karam Singh is a person of more influence and more authority than a village mukhia. Holding that he was a person in authority it is clear from his own statement that he offered an inducement to the accused to confess. His own account of the affair is as follows:

"The accused met me at 4 or 4-30 p. m. on the 25th October and I asked him what was the matter and that no dacoity appeared to have taken place at his house and he should give a true account. The accused kept quiet and did not say anything. I asked him again but he kept quiet. When I asked him a third time he told me that if I helped him he would give me a correct account. I told him to give a true account and that I would help him so far as it lay in my power."

To such a person as the accused the ziladar had great power and could even save him from the police, if he were so minded. We consider, therefore, that this was an inducement given by a person in authority and as such must be ruled out of the evidence. But there is another point which we must consider in connexion with the statement of this witness and that is that in our opinion no such confession was ever made. We know that the accused was sent to the hospital by the Sub-Inspector before 1 o'clock. The hospital is at Gola and the Assistant Surgeon examined the injuries of the accused at 4-30 .p. m. It is therefore impossible that the accused can have reached the village before 6 p.m, at the earliest and as a matter of fact we find that, although the Sub-Inspector was in the village that evening he did not see the accused at all until the following morning when he searched his person and arrested him But the zila-dar said that he met the accused in the village at 5 or 4-30 p m on 25th October and that he then left the village but hearing that the Sub-Inspector had come he went to him in the village at 10 or 11 p m and told him what the accused had said We know that the Sub-Inspector was in the village at least till 4 p. m when he signed the punchayatnama and we must come to the conclusion that this whole statement is entirely false It is unfortunate that investigating officers should allow such evidence to be produced in a Court. No doubt the extra-judicial confession is of great importance, but it must be a true extra-judicial confession and not one fabricated in order to provide additional evidence for what rightly or wrongly the investigating officer considers to be a weak case

The confession made to Puran stands on a different footing. We have read very carefully Puran's statement. He says that when he heard the cry raised by Taule he went and found him sitting outside his house. Taule then said to him that it was not a case of theft at all, that really he had tried to have sexual connexion with his sister-in-law, and he had killed her for fear that she would tell about the matter and there would be a punchayat. It is true that in the morning Puran went to the police station with the accused, but, although he went there, he was clearly uneasy. He left the police station while the report was being made and he returned, after first of all going to his father-in-law's house, to the village. As soon as he was sent for by the police he admitted that Taule had confessed to him. When we consider that no report was made until Taule's father returned from a fair, which he had been attending that day, we are of opinion that there must have been some considerable discussion in the family as to what report was to be made and it is most likely that Puran was partly persuaded by his brother and nephew to agree in their story about a dacoity. But he subsequently felt that he could not go on with this falsehood and told the truth The two witnesses who are said to have overheard the confession do not impress us favourably. We cannot resist the feeling that they have been brought in merely to corroborate the statement of Puran and to make it appear that, while Taule was ready to confess to his uncle, he remained silent when he discovered that he was being overheard by other persons Apart, however, from their evidence, we consider that the evidence of Puran is not to be disregarded

We must now consider the evidence apart from the so-called confession, and this evidence consists chiefly of the acts and statements of the accused himself together with the evidence as to the motive which he may have had for killing his sister-in-law. We would deal first with this motive. Mt. Bhajania was the wife of Taule's younger brother, a youth of about 16 years of age, whereas she was probably between 18 and 20. It is clear from the statement of her mother Mt. Basanti that this girl was pestered by the attentions of her brother-in-law, that she actually left her husband's house because of his behaviour, that she was ashamed of telling her mother what he had done to her, that she finally confessed that he had had forcible connexion with her, and it was only after great persuasion by Puran and her husband Churai that she consented to go back to her husband's house She even said to her mother that if she went she would be killed This evidence is fully corroborated by the statement of Puran and we have no doubt that it is true.

It is proved that on the night in question there was no body in the house of the accused except himself, Mt Bhajania, his youngest brother Budha who is a semi-insane and about 12 years of age and a little girl of three We see from the map that Mt. Bhajania had a room to herself while the accused slept on the other side of the house and the two children occupied a third room. This must have offered to the accused an opportunity for resuming his improper advances to his sister-in-law and it is certain that whatever happened he must have known very well what the events of the night were. We know that he was stained with blood in the middle of the night at the same time that his sister-in-law was murdered and he himself made a report as to a dacoity which is entirely and palpably false He also accounted for his own injuries by saying that they were caused with the blunt side of a knife which is absurd, and he falsely named no less than five persons and gave a clue to a sixth who have all been examined as witnesses, and who had clearly nothing to do with the affair. But this is not all. He had previously told the chaukidar that the crime was committed by six Muhammadans whom he did not know, whereas, of the persons whom he named four were Hindus His next statement was that the dacoits thrust a knife into his left leg, of which he said nothing in his first report and he subsequently in the Court of Session produced an entirely new story There he said that the scratches on his body were caused by thorns in a tatti which he had put up in the southern wall of his house He had also then forgotten the story that the two dacoits had taken and placed him in a maize field; but he says that he ran out of the house raising an alarm He also raised the number of the dacoits to 15 or 16 and exaggerated the amount of the property stolen from Rs. 25 to Rs 225 When a person who is present at the commission of a crime chooses to make a number of different statements contradictory to each other and palpably false as to the manner in which the crime has been committed he brings suspicion upon himself, and in this case the suspicion is so strong that it seems impossible to resist the conclusion that Taule took this opportunity of making indecent advances to his sister-in-law who appears to have been a decent and respectable young woman and that he killed her because she refused to yield. We cannot say how his injuries were caused and we are not prepared to say that the cuts on his leg did not cause sufficient effusion of blood to account for the stains on his dhoti, but it is quite certain that he has never given a true account of those injuries and the medical opinion that the injuries on the leg may have been self-inflicted is probably correct.

We have then to consider whether this evidence is sufficient to justify a conviction. There is no counter story before us for we discard the alleged dacoity as a pure invention of Taule and we have a clear motive why Taule himself may have committed the crime. We then have his whole conduct from the time of the murder until the present which shows that, although he knows the truth he prefers to tell numerous falsehoods, and we also have the statement of Puran that at the very first he confessed the crime to his uncle. In our opinion the evidence is sufficient. It satisfied two of the assessors and the Sessions Judge and it satisfies us. As to the sentence there is only one sentence possible in a case of this kind, and that is the sentence of death. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal, uphold the conviction and sentence and order that Taule be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

First Appeal No. 98 of 1928, Decided on 22nd February 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 24th July 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 11—Partition suit—Decision affecting right of one defendant against another is decision inter partes and will be res judicata.

As it is not possible in a suit for partition to make a hard and fast line between the plaintiffs and the defendants a decision affecting the right of one defendant as against another is a decision inter partes so as to be res judicata . A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 31, Foll. [P 277 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 11—Decision need not be on merits.

A decision to be final for the purpose of S. 11 need not be on the merits. [P 277 C 2]

(c) Civil P. In a sons' suit for partition against their father, the father's mortgagee also was impleaded as defendant the object being to get their share in the family property released from the burden of the mortgage. This point was fought out in the appellate Court though not in the trial Court, which reduced the rate of interest and held that the whole family property should be liable for the mortgage debt.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff to recover a sum of Rs. 21,000 which he claimed to be due on three mortgages dated 29th April 1918, the 7th June 1918 and 17th June 1920, alleging that the entire mortgaged property was liable for payment of the entire amount, but asking in the alternative that the Court might separate the liability holding the whole property to be liable for the sum of Rs. 13,871-8-0 and the share of defendant 1 alone to be liable for the remainder. The whole property has passed into the hands of defendant 5 who is the appellant before us. The lower Court (the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow) decreed the suit and the appellant has appealed mainly on the ground that in virtue of a decision of a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court dated 27th February 1925, the whole amount due to the mortgagee at the time when the suit was brought was paid on 30th March 1928 and consequently nothing was due.

The question of res judicata arises in the following manner The mortgages were executed by one Jwala Prasad and they were declared to be binding on the joint family property. The three sons of Jwala Prasad brought a suit for partition against their father and impleaded the mortgagee. It is clear from their plaint that their object was to release their shares in the family property from the burden of these mortgages. The suit was defended by the mortgagee who pleaded that this was not joint family property, but if it were held that the property were joint property all the members of the family were liable to pay the debt. The suit was fought out on these pleas, and the mortgagee being dissatisfied with the decision of the Court of first instance appealed to the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh One of his grounds of appeal was as follows :

"That the Court below should have declared that in any event the 8 annas share belonging to the executants of the deeds in suit was liable for the entire amount due under terms of these deeds."

No objection was raised in the grounds of appeal to the partition. It was an appeal fought out by the mortgagee and the sons of the mortgagor in order to determine how much was due to the mortgagee and what property was liable for that amount. The Judicial Commissioners held that the family property should not be burdened with the mortgage at the high rate of interest of Rs. 1-9-0 per cent per month, and accordingly cut down the amount due to the mortgagee, declaring it to be Rs. 9,689-12 0 on which simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum would run from 17th June 1920 For this amount the Court found the entire property in suit to be liable.

The mortgagee now wishes to realize the whole amount which he claimed as due to him in the former suit. He claims from the shares of all the members of the family the sum decreed by the Judicial Commissioners with interest up to date, but he claims from the separated share of the father not only the balance which was disallowed by the Judicial Commissioners but also a large sum by way of interest representing the difference between the interest at Re 1 per mouth and the interest of Rs. 1-9-0 per month on the whole mortgage money. He does not however, claim compound interest.

It will be seen that his claim as against the property of defendant 1, namely, the father, reproduces the ground of appeal before the Judicial Commissioners which we have already quoted. It is this question which we are asked to find to have been decided by the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners. The lower Court has decided on this point in favour of the plaintiff, on the ground that the previous suit was between the sons on one side and the father and the mortgagee on the other. He says that the mortgagee in that case wanted the entire burden to be thrown on the entire property :

" There was no question at all of any claim being set up by the mortgagee as to the declaration of his rights against the separated share of the father."

He went on to say that this was purely a point between the defendants inter se, and the decision of the same was not required at all As to the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners he observed that they disallowed this contention because :

" They were not concerned with it, and as it was not raised in the first Court this was never a decision of the point on its intrinsic merit. The question was not a res judicata between the parties for those reasons."

In our opinion this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous. It is not possible in a suit for partition to make a hard and fast line between the plaintiffs and the defendants and to say that the decision is not inter partes because it is a decision affecting the right of one defendant as against another. In partition cases the defendants become decree-holders as much as the plaintiff and we are not prepared to say that there is no decision between the mortgagee and defendant 1 merely because for the purposes of the suit they were both impleaded as defendants. This principle has been laid down more than once, but we would refer only to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Nalini Kanta Lahiri v. Sarnamoyi Debya (1) The second point on which the lower Court has gone wrong is in his finding that the mortgagee did not set up any claim to a declaration of his rights against the separated share of the father. He did so in his grounds of appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioners, and this matter was argued in that Court as appears from the judgment Lastly the lower Court went wrong in saying that the learned Judges in appeal "disallowed this contention as they were not concerned with it." Nowhere in their judgment do the learned Judicial Commissioners state that they were not concerned with this question and we do not understand how any such meaning can be read into their judgment. The relevant passage appears on p 36 of part 3 of the printed book beginning at line 12. It runs as follows :

"The appellants' learned counsel argued that the father's separated property after partition should at least be made liable for payment of the compound interest and of the other items disallowed by this Court. We have read the written statement of the defendants-appellants and find no such plea raised therein. We have been told that the appellants will not be satisfied with a decree for their whole claim passed against the separated property of the father alone. The liability of the joint family property is to be considered in accordance with the circumstances existing at the time of each mortgage and not with reference to a future partition. This new plea of the appellants cannot be entertained. The question was not before the lower Court, so ground of appeal No. 4 that the lower Court should have declared the separated 8 annas share of the father liable for the entire amount due on the three deeds is without substance."

In view of these observations it is not open to the respondents to say that this plea was not raised in the previous suit. It does not matter whether the plea was raised in the Court of first instance or in the Court of appeal. We would refer to a case decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee : Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd. v Naresh Narayan Roy (2), in which a point was waived in the first Court but argued and decided in appeal and it was held that finding operated as res judicata , nor can the respondent plead that this was not a substantial issue It was an issue which he himself raised in appeal and considered necessary for the purposes of his case Lastly the respondent has failed to convince us that the issue was not heard and finally decided by a competent Court We have already quoted the observations of the Judicial Commissioners which show that the point was argued before them, and we consider that the same passage shows that the matter was decided It is nowhere stated in S 11, Civil P. C., that a decision to be final for the purposes of that section must be on the merits But as a matter of fact we do not find that the Judicial Commissioners refused to entertain the ground of appeal before them because it had not been raised in the Court below. They clearly considered whether the mortgagee would accept a decree for the whole claim against the separated property of the father alone ; and they found that he would not. From this they proceeded to consider the claim as against the unseparated property and they found that the claim stood against the property as it was at the time when the mortgages were executed and not against the property after partition. It must be remembered that when the Judicial Commissioners decided the appeal the property had already been partitioned and so it was possible for them to state how much could be claimed from the separated properties But they did not do so. They found, first, that the joint family property was liable, not the separated property, and, secondly, that the liability of the joint family property was to be considered in accordance with the circumstances existing at the time of the mortgages. They followed up this finding by saying :

"In the result we modify the preliminary decree of the lower Court and declare the entire property in suit to be liable for the following payments to the defendants-appellants."

Thereafter follows the calculation on which the decree was based In our opinion this is a complete and final decision that the mortgagee had no claim against any property except the joint family property as it stood at the time of the mortgages and before the partition. This judgment therefore operates as res judicata in the present case, and the plaintiff cannot now claim to recover from the separated property of the father the balance of the money which was disallowed as against the family property.

An attempt was made to show that on the merits of the case the plaintiff should have been able to recover from the separated property of the father, but in view of the fact that the matter has in our opinion been finally decided on the merits by the Judicial Commissioners we are not prepared to enter into this question.

Having decided the question of res judicata in favour of the appellant we have only got to see whether the plaintiff-mortgagee has received the full amount due to him in the terms of the order of the Judicial Commissioners A calculation has been made in certain lists which have been appended to the amended plaint from which it appears that the total amount due in accordance with the findings of the Judicial Commissioners was Rs. 9,689-12-0 as principal and Rs 8,689-12-0 as interest. The total is Rs. 18,379-8-0 The payments prior to the suit were Rs. 4,661-0-0 shown in list B (1) and Rs 3,457-10-0 shown in list B (2) Subsequently the appellant deposited a sum of Rs. 10,513-4-8. The total of these amounts is Rs. 18,631-14-8 which represents the total amount due at the time when the payment was made on 30th March 1928, the suit having been filed on 26th January 1928. We understand that the sum of Rs 10,513-4-8, which was deposited on 30th March 1928, has already been paid to the plaintiff and there is therefore nothing due to him When however, the plaintiff filed his suit this sum was still due and we do not consider that he should have to pay the whole of the costs of the suit. We therefore allow this appeal with costs in this Court and set aside the order for a preliminary decree for sale passed by the lower appellate Court but order that the parties shall bear their own costs in the Court below.

Second Appeal No, 373 of 1928, Decided on 27th February 1929, against the order of the Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 16th July 1928

(a) Pre-emption—Custom of antiquity and certainty constitute title for legal recognition—Custom is applicable to property outside as well as within town.

The custom of pre-emption cannot be said to be a custom in contravention of the ordinary law of Oudh. It is the ordinary law as far as the village communities are concerned, but it can only be extended to towns, if there is proof that the custom is ancient and invariable. Such a custom must "possess that condition of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends. There can be no distinction drawn between the land lying outside the town and the land lying inside it; and if a special custom is proved appertaining to the inhabitants of a town in respect of their agricultural land that same custom must, failing strong evidence to the contrary, apply also to that portion of their property which is situated in the town itself. 14 *M. (b) Custom —Pre-emption—Custom dating from beginning of 19th century is sufficient to be immemorial.

A custom to have legal recognition ought to be immemorial. A custom might be considered to be immemorial if it went back as far as the beginning of the 19th century [P 280 C 2]

M. Wasim, H. N. Misra and Mohammad Ayub—for Appellant.

Salig Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by one Mt. Mithan in respect of the sale of certain property in Amethi. The plaintiff stated that her right was based on the fact that she was a cosharer and that the vendee was a stranger. The Court below without deciding this question dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that there was no custom of pre-emption in Amethi which could affect this particular property. At least this is the meaning which I place upon the judgment of the lower appellate Court. He does not say that there is no custom of pre-emption in respect of agricultural lands appertaining to Amethi, but rather he finds that, even if there may be such a custom, there is no custom of pre-emption, as to a shop or site in the actual town.

In this Court it is not contested that Amethi is a town It is a very ancient town dating, I am informed, from the 11th century at least, and as such it cannot be presumed that any right of pre-emption exists there. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that there was a custom of pre-emption and that she was entitled to base a claim on that custom. The custom of pre-emption cannot be said to be a custom in contravention of the ordinary law of this province. It is the ordinary law as far as the village communities are concerned, but it can only be extended to towns, if there is proof that the custom is ancient and invariable As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1872 in the case of Ramalakshmi Ammal v Shivanatha Perumal (1) such a custom must "possess that condition of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

The lower Courts have held that the proof of this custom fails in both particulars, but only, as far as I understand their judgments, because they have made a distinction between the property in the town and property in the surrounding aricultural land. Now Amethi being a town, the inhabitants thereof do not form a village community and any right of pre-emption which they may have belongs to them as a special custom and not as a matter of law. There can be no distinction drawn in my opinion between the land lying outside the town and the land lying inside it ; and if a special custom is proved appertaining to the inhabitants of this town in respect of their agricultural land that same custom must, failing strong evidence to the contrary, apply also to that portion of their property which is situated in the town itself. Curiously enough the one judgment of a Court which held that a custom of pre-emption was not proved to exist in Amethi came to the same conclusion on this point. I refer to a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner dated 1st November 1881, in the case of Chhote v. Mirza Agha Ali Khan (Special Appeal No. 238 of 1881) In that case the lower Courts decreed pre-emption in respect of a grove, but decided that the custom of pre-emption was not proved in the town. The Judicial Commissioner held that the custom does not apply to the territorial boundaries of the 'abadi', inhabited town, but to the residents thereof. So that there is no difference between the inhabited part and cultivated lands of the 'Qasba ' He allowed the appeal because the Courts below had tried to draw this distinction. Holding that the Judicial Commissioner was right in respect of his ratio decidendi and that there can be no proper distinction drawn between the land in the town and outside it. I have got to consider whether there is or is not sufficient evidence to support a custom of pre-emption as belonging to the inhabitants of this town of Amethi whether in respect of their agricultural or other property. The evidence of custom is divided into two portions. The first relates to the evidence prior to British occupation and the second shows instances of pre-emption under British rule The Courts below have gone at great length into the evidence and there is no question in my mind that from the year 1800, at least up till the date of the British occupation of Oudh, a custom of pre-emption existed in Amethi. There are several documents showing that the custom was acted upon and there is no reason whatever to doubt the validity of these documents They have indeed been accepted as genuine by the lower appellate Court and they have been held by that Court to prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption, although the learned Subordinate Judge is not prepared to find that a plot of land described as panj dukania or five shops was situated in the town. Then follows the evidence as to the custom being in existence during the British occupation.

The first case is that to which I have already referred in the year 1881 which tells against the plaintiff, because in that case, it was found that the existence of the right of pre-emption was not proved But in subsequent cases the existence of the right under precisely similar circumstances namely, in respect of goves and other outlying land has been proved to exist, and in some other cases also the right has been admitted The judgments of the Courts on this subject cover the years from 1909 to 1926 and the decisions have consistently been in favour of the existence of a custom of pre-emption in respect of land, groves and in one case at least the site of a house belonging to the inhabitants of Amethi.

The lower appellate Court has disposed of the evidence as to the existence of the custom prior to British occupation by holding that at that time the Mahomedan law prevailed, and the evidence that pre-emption had been allowed under the Muhammadan rule is merely equivalent to saying that the Mahomedan law was in vogue under Muhammadan rulers. On this point I do not agree with the Court below. There is nothing to show that the law of pre-emption as it existed in the town of Amethi was the strict Mahomedan law of pre-emption. It was undoubtedly adopted from the Mahomedan law of pre-emption. But there is nothing to show that it is not the same as the law of pre-emption which has become the general law of this province and which is applicable alike to Muhammadans and Hindus. It is true that Amethi is to a large extent a Muhammadan town and the parties in these cases were Muhammadans ; but in my opinion the law under which they claimed pre-emption was the law which had even then become the general law of the province ; and there is nothing to show that it was the strict Mahomedan law of pre-emption with all its attendant formulae.

Another point made by the lower appellate Court is that custom ought to be immemorial and he appears to consider that even if the custom prevailed throughout the time of the Muhammadan sway, this would not be long enough to make the custom immemorial. He says "It is after all not very long that Muhammadans had their sway over Amethi." Now the Muhammadans first captured Amethi in the year 1050 A. D. and although they may have lost it several times in the intervening centuries, there can be no doubt that Amethi was under Muhammadan rule throughout the major portion at least of the period covered by the Mughal Emperors. I cannot consider that the period of say 250 years is a short period. It was held by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in a case reported in Manna Lal v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (2) that a custom might be considered to be immemorial if it went back as far as living witnesses can remember and this view is based upon a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England, para. 442. I do not consider that the evidence as to the custom of pre-emption in Amethi fails on the score that it does not go back far enough. In spite of the decision of the Judicial commissioner in 1881. I consider that this custom has been invariable since at least the commencement of the 19th century and this is sufficient to establish the custom.

I therefore hold that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that there was no custom of pre-emption in existence in respect of property situated in the abadi of Amethi. The custom has been proved to exist in respect of the inhabitants of the town, and there is no reason for making a distinction between the property inside the abadi and the property outside the abadi. But this finding does not dispose of the case. There is no decision before me as to whether the plaintiff is or is not a cosharer, and it is only by virtue of being a cosharer or Sharik as stated in the old documents that the plaintiff can base a claim to pre-emption. An issue covering this point was framed in the Court of first instance and there were also other issues which have not been determined. I find that there were originally two pre-emptors, but one has filed no appeal and he has therefore dropped out of the case. This makes it unnecessary to determine issues 1 (a) and 1 (b) as they stand. Issue 1 (c) has been determined by me. The remaining issues 2, 3, 4 and 5 remain to be determined, but I must also in view of the pleadings frame another issue which can be substituted for issues 1 (a) and 1 (b) namely, "Has the plaintiff a right of pre-emption of the property in suit ?"

I remand this case to the Court of first instance for determination of these issues under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C.

Bhagwan Din—Accused.

Jury Ref. No. 8 of 1928, Decided on 20th December 1928

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Ground of reference that verdict is perverse and unreasonable not expressly stated—Ground can be presumed.

Where the Judge in his reference does not state in so many words that he considers that the verdict of the jury was perverse or unreasonable but this appears to be his opinion it must be taken that the Judge has only referred the case on the ground that in his opinion the verdict was perverse and unreasonable: A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1186, Rel. on. [P 281 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Duty of High Court is to see whether verdict is unreasonable—Verdict contrary to or unjustified by evidence is unreasonable.

High Court has to consider not whether a verdict is wrong but whether it is unreasonable. An unreasonable verdict is one which is contrary to the evidence or at least totally unjustified by the evidence [P 281 C 2]

G H. Thomas—for the Crown.

S. M. Ahmed—for Accused.

Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C., by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow who considers that the verdict given by a jury acquitting a certain Bhagwan Din, who was charged with the offence of dacoity, should not be allowed to stand. The Judge in his reference does not state in so many words that he considers that the verdict of the jury was perverse or unreasonable but this appears to be his opinion and we must take it on the authority of the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported in Veerappa Goundaun v. Emperor (1) that the Judge has only referred the case on the ground that in his opinion the verdict was perverse and unreasonable.

In this case four persons were charged with dacoity and the jury acquitted two and convicted the other two. It is therefore evident that they believed that a dacoity was committed and they exercised their intelligence in ascertaining which of the accused persons were guilty and which were innocent. In his summing up the Judge indicated that in his opinion the case was weakest against one Ajodhia, who was acquitted by the jury, strongest against Bhagwandin. who was also acquitted by the jury, and that the case againt the other two men Durgadin and Gajadhar stood in the middle. These two men were convicted by the jury. Now if the Judge's view of the evidence is correct, it may well be that the view taken by the jury was wrong. But we have to consider not whether the verdict was wrong but whether it was unreasonable. An unreasonable verdict is one which is contrary to the evidence or at least totally unjustified by the evidence. We find that the evidence against this man Bhagwan Din was that he was identified at the time of dacoity by two witnesses Lachhminia and Maiku and that he was named by a coaccused named Naurang, who pleaded guilty, was convicted on his own plea and then gave evidence for the Crown. We find that the two men who have been convicted were named by Naurang and identified each by one witness, Durgadin by Thakur Prasad and Gajadhar by Dularey Consequently it cannot be said that the jury had disbelieved the evidence of the same identifying witness in the case of Bhagwan Din that they believed in the case of any other accused, For all we know the jury who saw these witnesses may have had good reasons for disbelieving their evidence against Bhagwan Din It does not follow that they took the same view of the witnesses as the Judge Nor were they bound to do so. Indeed the Judge in his summing up told the jury himself that he had merely stated his opinion and that they were in no way bound to accept his opinion. It is difficult to assess the value of any witness who merely states that he has recognized a person during the commission of a dacoity. It is difficult for the judge or jury who can see and hear that witness. It is more than difficult for a Court which has neither seen nor heard the witness, and has only a brief statement on paper from which to form an opinion Moreover we are not of opinion that it is our duty to retry the case and form an opinion to as the value of the evidence. All that we have to consider is whether the verdict of the jury is perverse or unreasonable Whether the the jury did or did not believe the alibi evidence set up by this Bhagwan Din, the discussion of which occupied the learned Judge nearly a page in his charge sheet, appears to us to be immaterial. The jury's first duty was to give an opinion as to the prosecution evidence. When we are unable to find that their opinion as to the prosecution evidence was perverse or unreasonable we cannot go on to consider what their opinion may have been as to the evidence for the defence. Thus we are unable to concur with the learned Judge when he says that the only reason he can suggest for the jury's verdict is that Bhagwan Din produced several witnesses in his defence and that the jury may have believed them. Even if they did believe these witnesses that again would not necessarily be unreasonable, and the jury themselves could rely on the warning given by the Judge himself that they need not accept his opinion In our opinion this is a reference which cannot be accepted We therefore return the record The accused Bhagwan Din shall be forthwith released

B Shishadhar Singh—Plaintiff—Respondent

First Appeal No. 163 of 1928, Decided on 12th September 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 19th September 1927

 (a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 98—Mortgagee entitled to sell or foreclose mortgaged property—Mortgage is anomalous.

A mortgage containing a clause to the effect that after the expiry of the due date the mortgagee shall have power to realise the entire amount found due by sale of the mortgaged property or in lieu of the said amount he may enter into possession of the mortgaged property by having it foreclosed is clearly an anomalous mortgage. [P 282 C 1, 2]

 (b) Civil P. C, O. 34, R. 4—Suit for foreclosure on anomalous mortgage is covered by R. 4

A suit for foreclosure on an anomalous mortgage is covered by O. 34, R. 4 : 18 I. C. 24, Diss. from. [P 282 C 2]

Stuart, C J—This is a defendant's appeal The facts are these. The defendant executed a registered deed of mortgage in favour of the grandfather of the plaintiff on 8th January 1928 for Rs 50,000. The mortgage-deed contains these words:

"After the expiry of the due date the mortgagee shall have power to realize the entire amount, principal, interest and compound interest whatever may be found due to the mortgagee with costs out of the sale proceeds, by sale of the mortgaged property or in lieu of the said amount due he may enter into possession of the mortgaged property by having it foreclosed according to the law for the time being in force."

The plaintiff sued for foreclosure. The defendant did not contest as to execution or consideration but asked that the relief should take the form of a decree for sale. The learned trial Judge refused to grant his request, and gave a decree for foreclosure. The defendant appeals against this decree, asking that a decree for sale should be substituted. The learned counsel for the appellant has argued that the mortgage is a simple mortgage, and not an anomalous mortgage. We do not agree with him there We are of opinion that the mortgage is clearly an anomalous mortgage and as such governed by the provisions of S. 98 of Act 4 of 1882. The rights and liabilities of the parties have to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage deed. This, however, only goes to show that the mortgagee has a right to come to Court and ask for a decree for foreclosure or a decree for sale It does not follow from the words of the section that he has a right to direct the Court which relief to grant him, and the matter in my opinion is clearly covered by the provisions of O. 34, R. 4 (2), Civil P C. This was a suit for foreclosure. That rule states that in a suit for foreclosure if the plaintiff succeeds and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may of its own motion (these words have been added as far as Oudh is concerned), and they have been added regularly by law, and are now a part of the law, pass a like decree, that is to say a sale decree in lieu of a decree for foreclosure on such terms as it thinks fit. Now this is a suit for foreclosure which is not a suit on a mortgage by conditional sale, and in my opinion the terms of this rule cover a suit on an anomalous mortgage It has been pointed out to me that in 1912 I did not hold this opinion This is perfectly true. I find that in that year I was on a Bench with Mr Piggott who was then Judicial Commissioner. He decided in Baqar Husain v Balak Ram (1), that there was nothing in Cl 2, O 34, R 4 which could override the provisions of S 98, T P Act. and further decided that, where a plaintiff, in the case of an anomalous nortgage providing both for foreclosure or sale at his option, sues for foreclosure only, the mortgagor cannot compel him to accept a decree for sale. This was the decision of Mr. Piggott and I concurred with it. That was my opinion in 1912 but it is not my opinion now.

(1) [illegible] 18 I. C. 24.

I have looked since then again into the law on the subject. I find that O. 34, R. 4 (2) is based upon the procedure in the English Conveyancing Act of 1881 It is a procedure which was introduced in England to give a Court direction not to enforce a foreclosure in circumstances in which it was inequitable to foreclose Naturally as this was an English rule it applied in my land only to mortgages in the forms known in England but the conclusion drawn by certain commentators that therefore this rule can only apply to English mortgages as defined in S 58 of Act 4 of 1882 appears to me to be in no way justified. It was the opinion of these commentators that appears to have influenced Mr. Piggott and myself in arriving at our decision in 1912. But a subsequent examination of the question indicates to me that there is no justification for that view. The Indian Legislature clearly intended by the introduction of this provision to allow a Court discretion to substitute for a rigid foreclosure a sale, and in drafting the rule the legislature wished to make one exception and one exception only in the case of a suit on a mortgage by conditional sale. It was perfectly easy for the legislature, if it had wished also to make an exception in favour of a suit on an anomalous mortgage, to have said so, and the fact that the legislature did not say so convinces me that a suit on an anomalous mortgage is not excepted I now come to the next argument of the respondent which is to the effect that the Civil Procedure Code cannot override the substantive law contained in the Transfer of Property Act. I am not of opinion that it does override the substantive law contained in the Transfer of Property Act for there is nothing in S. 98, Act 4 of 1882 which says that where an anomalous mortgagor allows an option to the mortgagee to obtain foreclosure he can compel a Court to grant him foreclosure. All that the rule lays down is that in certain circumstances the Court can substitute for one relief another relief. I am thus of opinion that the Court below had a discretion to grant a decree for sale had it wished to do so It could not be compelled to grant that relief but it could grant that relief if it wished; similarly here we can if we wish to grant that relief. We cannot be compelled to do so. We have to look at the facts to see whether the defendant deserves that relief.

The facts are these. The property mortgaged is admittedly worth over Rs. 50,000. The annual income is over Rs. 15,000. Under the terms of the deed the amount due on 15th January 1927 was Rs. 69,941-4-7. It is obvious that, if the property is forcelosed, the plaintiff will gain an advantage to which he is in no way entitled, and in these circumstances I think that we are thoroughly justified in exercising our discretion in the defendant's favour. The terms of the deed were, however, far from onerous and the plaintiff has behaved in a most reasonable and obliging manner towards the defendant; therefore while granting the defendant this relief I consider that we should grant to the plaintiff all to which he is reasonably entitled. I therefore propose to substitute for the decree of the Court below the following decree. A decree shall be passed in favour of the plaintiff as against the defendant for Rs. 69,941-4-7 with interest at 4½ per cent. compoundable six monthly on 30th June and 31st December. If this amount be not paid on or before the 11th March 1929 the property mortgaged by the deed shall be sold and the proceeds of the sale, after defraying therefrom the expenses of the sale, shall be paid into Court and applied in payment to what is declared due to the plaintiff as aforesaid together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs, and the balance shall be paid to the defendant. I should add the following condition. The decree of the lower Court for costs shall stand and those costs with future interest at 6 per cent from the date of the decree of the lower Court shall also be recoverable from the sale proceeds. Further the defendant shall pay his own costs and the costs of the plaintiff in this appeal and those costs shall bear interest at 6 per cent. from today's date and shall also be recoverable from the sale proceeds and further the plaintiff shall be entitled to 9 per cent. simple interest as future interest on the total amount due, excluding costs from 11th March 1929 if the decree be not satisfied on or before that date.

Raza, J.—I concur in the order proposed. In my opinion also the Court below had a discretion to grant a decree for sale in this case under O. 34, R. 4 (2), Sch. 1 Civil P. C. Having regard to the value of the property in suit I think the decree for sale should properly be passed in this case.

By Court:—The appeal is allowed to the extent stated and the decree will be prepared accordingly.

M. Wasim and Khaliq-uz-zaman—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This 2nd appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Ajudhia and his transferees for possession of a share in two mahals in the village of Baharwa, which were originally in possession of Dharmraj, who was the father of Ajudhia. In the plaint it was alleged that the cause of action had arisen when the defendants-appellants raised an objection in the revenue Court to the application made by the transferees of Ajudhia for entry of their names in respect of this share. It was also stated that Ajudhia brought the suit within three years of attaining his majority, and this allegation gave rise to a contest on the question of fact whether Ajudhia was less or more than twenty-four years of age when the suit was filed. The first Court found this issue against him and clearly deemed that it was the most important issue in the Court but it also found that the suit was barred by limitation on the ground that the appellants before us had attained a title by adverse possession. The District Judge found that Art. 44, Lim. Act, had no application because this suit did not relate to a transaction entered into by the guardian of the plaintiff, but by his elder brother in his capacity as manager of a joint Hindu family. This view is in our opinion correct ; and in any case the plaintiff was not required to challenge the sale deed on which the contesting appellants rely, because it was a sale deed by the manager of a joint Hindu family of ancestral property without any legal necessity and as such was void from its inception : see Ram Narain v. Nand Kumar (1) read with Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (2).

Although this was the principal point raised in the Court of first instance and the appellants never specially pleaded title by adverse possession they raised that point in argument in both the Courts below and this is the main plea which has been argued before us. The appellants are transferees by virtue of a sale deed executed by Pateshar, the elder brother of Ajudhia, in the year 1907. They did not apply for mutation of names in respect of this property until they made their objection to the application brought by the transferees of Ajudhia They plead, however, that their possession must be held to date from the year 1907 and as the sale-deed by which they obtained possession is an invalid document their possession must therefore be held to be adverse to Ajudhiya and his brother Biddam deceased, whose share is now claimed by Ajudhia. The lower appellate Court has pointed out that the appellants or their predecessor-in-title in whose name the sale deed was executed were themselves co-sharers in the mahals in suit in their own right even before the sale deed was executed. As cosharers they were entitled to possession of the property and failing definite evidence that they asserted a different title than that of cosharers after the execution of their sale-deed, we are not prepared to find that their possession became adverse against the other cosharers The same question came up for decision before one of us when Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in a case : Indarpal Singh v. Thakur Din Singh (3), and that judgment expresses the views which this Bench now holds. After finding that the plaintiffs and the defendants were co-owners in the property in suit the judgment proceeds as follows :

"This is a cardinal point in subordination to which the decision of the question of adverse possession should be approached. As Lord Buckmaster observed in the case of Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (4), possession may be either lawful or unlawful and in the absence of evidence it must be assumed to be the former, and possession is lawful when it is in virtue of a legal title. In the case of Thomas v. Thomas (5). Wood, Vice-Chancellor, said : Possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. This dictum was quoted with approval by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Corea v. Appuhamy (6).In the case before me it is admitted that the defendants and before them their ancestor, Ochcha Singh, have all along been in possession of the whole of the property in suit and in enjoyment of the profits thereof. In the circumstances the question to be asked is : has one tenant-in-common legal title to the whole ? If he has, then the defendants'possession is lawful and therefore not adverse. It is well established that one tenant-in-common is not the agent of the other nor is there any fiduciary relation between them : Kennedy v. De Trafford (7). In a clash of self interest and duty to others the law will compel a person to do his duty : Hardoon v. Belilios (8). In re Biss (9) and Griffith v. Owen (10). But one tenant owes no duty to the other tenant-in-common in respect of the interest of the latter in the common property though he has a duty to share the advantages acquired in his character as such with the other tenant : White and Tudor's Leading cases, Vol. 2, Keech v. Sandford and the notes thereunder ; also sec. S. 90, Trust Act (2 of 1882). The presumption that the possession of one co tenant of the entire common property is lawful seems to be founded on the principle that between two tenants-in-common each has a title to the whole and also to his undivided moiety and each is said to be seized per my et per tout, that is each co-tenant has the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole.

In the case of Kennedy v. De Trafford (7). Lord Herschel, in speaking of a co-owner called Dodson, said : Dodson was an owner of his property the owner of an undivided moiety, it is true, but each owner of an undivided moiety is none the less truly an owner. I must therefore hold that prima facie the possession of the defendants of the common property in its entirety was not adverse to the plaintiffs. The defendants had to prove that the possession which was and is not prima facie adverse had or has become so in reality.This is heavy onus which the defendants have to discharge. It is clear on the authorities that the fact that the plaintiffs have not been in the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property in suit does not establish a title by adverse possession in the co-tenant, that is, the defendants, who have enjoyed such profits, the reason of the view being that it is consistent with the legal title in the co tenant in possession. It may be doubted whether the old rule of English law afterwards abrogated by the Statute 3 and 4, William 4, Ch. 27, S 12. that the possession of one of several coparceners, joint-tenants or tenants-in common is the possession of the others so as to prevent the statute of limitation from affecting them is applicable in India to "sharers in an unpartitioned agricultural village." See the decision of Viscount Cave in the case of N. Varada Pillai v. Jeewarathnammal (11). But one thing is perfectly clear that the co-tenant out of possession starts with the presumption in his favour that the possession of the other co-tenants is not adverse but lawful. This is well-established by a series of decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council and further it is equally well established that nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster must be proved by the co-tenant in possession in order to bring about the success of the plea of adverse possession: Corea v. Appuhamy (6), Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (4), Muttunayagam v. Brito (12) and the last decision of Viscount Cave in N. Varada Pillai v. Jeewarathnammal (11) already mentioned. In case of Jogendra Nath Rai v Baldeo Das (13) decided by the High Court of Calcutta a series of cases are noticed in support of the opinion expressed above. From the same principle, it would seem to follow that such overt acts on the part of the tenant in possession as would ordinarily prove the adverse character of the possession as against a stranger will afford no evidence of such character as against the co-tenant, the reason being that those acts will be found to be consistent with the lawful title of the co-tenant in occupation."

In the present case we cannot find that there has been anything equivalent to ouster of the plaintiff. The appellants did nothing to assert their title and mere possession was not inconsistent with their position as cosharers in the mahals We have been referred to a decision of a Bench of this Court reported in Ram Narain v. Mannu Lal (14), in which it is alleged that a different view was taken. As will be seen from a perusal of that judgment the point on which it turned was that the cosharers had successfully asserted their rights to the sole enjoyment of the property and that there had been an ouster. In the present case we find no assertion and no ouster. We find therefore that the possession of the defendants-appellants was not adverse and the suit was not barred by limitation. The appeal is dismissed with costs

Ordinarily it is no doubt true that there can be no waiver in respect of a plea of jurisdiction just as much as consent of parties cannot invest a Court with jurisdiction. But the position is somewhat altered where a party having a right of appeal against the order deciding the plea of jurisdiction has allowed that order to become final by not filing an appeal against it : *A. Judgment.—The plaintiffs-appellants brought the present suit against the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur as representing the Court of Wards Deara estate and three others for possession of a few plots of land on the allegation that in the year 1919 ths Court of Wards after ejecting one Dawan Singh from those plots had given a lease in respect of them to the plaintiffs for a period of seven years. The plaintiffs had remained in possession of the holding only for one year when they were dispossessed by Dawan Singh who had been successful in appeal in his suit to contest the notice of ejectment and had obtained on order through Court, for delivery of possession in his favour. Dawan Singh remained in possession from 1920 until June 1926, when he was again ejected by the Court of Wards. The plaintiffs' grievance is that the Court of Wards instead of allowing them to hold them for six years, the balance of the period of the lease, had let out the lands to defendants 2 to 4 The plaintiffs, therefore, claimed to be entitled to possession to enable them to enjoy the lands for the unexpired period of the lease. The claim has been dismissed by both the lower Courts.

The learned counsel for the Court of Wards has raised a preliminary objection against the hearing of the appeal. The objection is based upon S. 108, Cl. (10), Oudh Rent Act

It appears that the defendants in their written statement raised a plea questioning the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain the suit. This plea was successful in the first Court but on appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the suit was cognizable by the civil Court and remanded the case for decision on the merits under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. The defendants submitted to this decision and did not appeal against it as they were entitled to do under O 43, R. 1, Cl. (u) of the Code The learned counsel for the defendants has relied on the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Maha Prasad Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (1) in which a plea of jurisdiction which had been raised in the trial Court but abandoned in the High Court was allowed to be raised in appeal before their Lordships In dealing with the plea their Lordships remarked as follows :

" Seeing that it is a question of jurisdiction, and depends on no disputed facts, their Lordships are of opinion that they cannot decline to entertain it, although it is not specifically raised on the appeal, more especially as it necessarily presented itself in the argument."

Ordinarily it is no doubt true that there can be no waiver in respect of a jurisdiction just as much as consent of parties cannot invest a Court with jurisdiction. But the position in this case is somewhat altered by reason of the fact that the defendants had a right of appeal against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and they have in a sense allowed that order to become final against them. However, it is not necessary for me to decide the question in the present case because I am satisfied that the plea must fail, on the merits. S. 108, Cl. (10), Oudh Rent Act, applies only to those cases where the tenant has been illegally ejected by the landlord. In this case it is admitted that the plaintiff had not been ejected by the landlord but by Dawan Singh. I, therefore, in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, hold that S. 108, Cl. (10), does not bar the claim.

To come to the merits of the appeal, the learned counsel for the plaintiffs has based his arguments on S. 43, T. P. Act, S. 94, Trusts Act and S. 18, Specific Relief Act. There is no evidence that at the time when the Court of Wards executed the lease in favour of the plaintiffs they made any erroneous representation to the plaintiffs. Further the lease distinctly lays down that it was a period of seven years from 1327 to 1333 Fasli. It is admitted that Dawan Singh was ejected at the end of 1333 Fasli. So it seems clear that at that time the contract of transfer relied upon by the plaintiffs did not subsist. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs has ingeniously argued that the lease was for a period of seven years and as the plaintiffs were deprived of enjoyment for a period of six years the lease must be held to subsist until the landlord has enabled them to have enjoyment for the full period of seven years irrespective of the years 1327 to 1333 Fasli mentioned in the lease.

I cannot agree with this contention If for any reason the plaintiffs have not been able to get full enjoyment under the terms of the lease they may or may not have their remedies against the landlord but that would not have the effect of extending the period of the lease as fixed under the terms. I am, therefore, of opinion that the necessary conditions requisite for the application of S. 43, T. P. Act have not been satisfied in this case

It follows from what I have stated above that S. 94, Trust Act and S 18, Specific Relief Act, also cannot help the plaintiffs. Assuming that other conditions necessary for the application of S 94 are satisfied it is not possible to say that when the Court of Wards obtained possession of the property in 1926 they did not possess the whole beneficial interest in it or that the plaintiffs had any such interest therein when the contract in their favour was no longer subsisting. Similarly other conditions being satisfied S. 18, Specific Relief Act, requires the lessor " to make good the contract " out of the interest subsequently acquired by him. There can be no question of making good the contract when contract no longer subsists. I am, therefore, of opinion that the period of the contract relied upon by the plaintiffs having expired they cannot succeed in the present suit. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 1 of 1929, Decided on 28th February 1929. against order of Sub-Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, D/- 22nd September 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., Sch. 2, para. 16.

Where a judgment-debtor caused removal of his property from the decree-holder's land through a bailiff, and where the bill submitted by the bailiff being deemed excessive, the Munsiff before whom the case was, was asked to decide the matter personally by a visit to the spot, and where it was contended that the Munsiff's decision on the matter could not be challenged in appeal he having been appointed an arbitrator:

Held, that the Munsif, was not and could not be so appointed and as such his decision could be challenged in appeal, and that he was merely asked to inspect the locality, the parties agreeing to accept his decision.

Gaya Prasad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of an execution matter the facts of which have been detailed at length by the Courts below All that I have to consider is whether the sum which has been decreed against the appellant in the matter of costs has been rightly awarded and whether there has been some illegality in the procedure which vitiates the decision. It appears that when the case was before the Munsif the judgment-debtor realized that he had to remove a large quantity of materials from a plot of land belonging to the decree-holder. He found it difficult and expensive to do so and finally allowed the materials to be removed by the bailiff. The bailiff put in a bill and the judgment-debtor thought it an excessive bill. Instead of producing evidence he asked the Munsif to go to the spot and decide the matter for himself. The Munsif agreed and came to the conclusion that the bailiff's account was right and passed a decree accordingly. An appeal was filed against this decision and the learned Subordinate Judge declined to interfere, one of his grounds being that the Munsif had been made an arbitrator and that his decision could not be challenged in appeal. This therefore has been made a ground of appeal before me. I do not consider that the Munsif was appointed an arbitrator, and I doubt very much whether he could have been so appointed. He was merely asked to inspect the localities and the parties both agreed that they would accept his decision as to the cost of removing the materials. This being so, as pointed out to me in appeal, the Munsif should have written a note of inspection. Probably because the parties had agreed to accept his decision, whatever it was he failed to comply with this rule. But he stated the grounds on which he came to the decision with great clearness in his judgment and in the appeal preferred before the Subordinate Judge not a word has been said as to his failure to write a separate note. I am not prepared to reverse the decision of the Courts below on this technical plea The parties got the decision they asked for, and there is nothing to show that the decision was an improper one or passed without full and careful consideration. I have now been asked to consider that the Munsif failed to consider an objection raised by the judgment debtor that constructions not standing on the land decreed were wantonly demolished. It is true that some such application was made, but it is manifest that it was not pressed before the Munsif and it does not appear in an intelligible form in the grounds of appeal preferred to the Subordinate Judge, and it is evident from the judgment of the Court that no such point was argued.

There remains only one question, namely, as to whether the pleader's fee has been correctly calculated in the Court below It was calculated at 5 per cent as though this were an appeal in a regular suit. The reason given for taking this view is the curious one that appeals from orders under S. 47 appear in the same register as appeals in regular suits. This does not affect the pleader's fee chargeable on them which must be calculated in accordance with para. 272 (Cl. 9), Ch. 7 of the Oudh Civil Digest. The fee should be calculated at 1½ per cent and not at 5 per cent.

I therefore allow the appeal to this extent, modify tha decree of the Court below and allow proportionate costs in this appeal.

First Appeal No. 127 of 1927, Decided on 3rd May 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 16th July 1927.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Migration of a branch of family does not imply separation.

The migration of a branch of the family in itself establishes nothing regarding the question of jointness or separation. Members of a joint Hindu family migrating to another district might or might not separate from their family. [P 289 C 2]

M. Wasim—for Respondents

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal. The suit out of which this appeal arises was a suit by a certain Gaya Prasad Singh for the partition of his share in certain property in the Fyzabad and Basti Districts. His case was that there was formerly a family of Gaur Thakurs resident in the Fyzabad District. The head of this family was Buland Singh. Buland Singh has seven sons Masanand Singh, Zinda Ranjit Singh and Gajraj Singh and three others with whom we are not concerned. At some period, more than eighty years ago some members of this family migrated to the Basti District. At the present moment there are residing in the Fyzabad District Masanand Singh's branch and there are residing in the Basti District Gajraj Singh's branch. The branches of Zinda Singh and Ranjit Singh, which are also said to have settled in basti, have died out and the branches of the other three sons have also died out. This suit was in effect an assertion by Gaya Prasad Singh and other members of the Masanand Singh's branch that their branch and the branch of Gajraj Singh formed a joint family and an assertion by the members of the Gajraj Singh branch that this was not the case and that Masanand Singh's branch had separated from Gajraj Singh's branch many years before. The contest was acute. The dispute was of distinct importance for the basti property in which the members of the Masanand Singh branch claimed their share is very much more valuable than the Fyzabad property, which is possessed by the members of the Masanand Singh branch The learned trial Judge has decided in favour of the plaintiffs' view and has found that the two branches formed one joint Hindu family and that the property in dispute is all joint family property. It is against this decision that the present appeal is preferred

The suit from its nature was not an easy suit to decide We note that the learned trial Judge has decided it very carefully and has discussed the evidence with great intelligence. The first proposition to the effect that the sons of Buland Singh were originally joint is established clearly upon the general presumptions of Hindu law and the finding to that effect is not challenged by the learned and experienced counsel, who has appeared for the appellants. Nor is it challenged on the other side that Zinda Singh, Ranjit Singh and Gajraj Singh migrated to the Basti District more than eighty years ago. The migration in itself establishes nothing ; and at the period when they are said to have migrated the incident was of little or no significance. The Fyzabad District adjoins the Basti District from which it is separated by the Gogra river. At that period the Fyzabad District was in the kingdom of Oudh and subject to the rule of the king of Oudh and the Basti District was administered by the East India Company. Changes of residence were not unusual Members of a joint Hindu family migrating to another district might or might not separate from their family. They might or might not make acquisitions of land with the nucleus of family funds They might or might not, even if they made acquisition of land with their own funds, incorporate those acquisitions with the joint family property. The learned trial Judge is inclined to think that the family had ancestral property in Basti District. This may be so, but it would seem unlikely that they should have. This much we know that at an early period a portion of the landed property held in the Basti District is described as maurusi or ancestral, but there is some reason to suppose that that very property had been purchased about the year 1844 by Zinda Singh for 662 Farrukhabadi rupees The learned trial Judge has found that there could not have been a great nucleus of ancestral funds in the hands of those members who migrated to the Basti District but he has found affirmatively that there was some nucleus and it is for the appellants to disturb the finding that such a nucleus existed and that the Basti property was bought therefrom. It is a matter of insuperable difficulty to arrive at a close conclusion as to what the exact nucleus of family funds could be with Gaur Thakurs, who resided in the Fyzabad District in the years preceding the annexation of Oudh There were as many methods by which money could be obtained in those days as they are now, and it cannot be said how far the family funds could be supplemented by the diligence of the members. A Court has to fill up many gaps in evidence by reasoning in such matters ; and granting the fact that Zinda Singh had obtained 662 Farrukhabadi rupees in the year 1844, it is equally difficult to see how he would have obtained the amount from his separate funds.

But the question of acquisition is not the only question here. There is considerable evidence of the treatment of the Basti property as showing that it was treated as joint property belonging both to the family members who had migrated to the Basti District and the members who had remained behind in the Fyzabad District. This evidence of treatment of the property has been considered very carefully by the learned trial Judge. He has considered all the evidence very carefully. There are undoubtedly many difficulties in the case. There are instances of previous partial partition in the family without including the members of the family generally or even the members of the branch generally. There have been certain splittings off and certain separations of the property but the learned trial Judge, has, in our opinion, considered the effect of these partitions and considered the effect correctly. The case as we have said was a difficult case. The decision of the learned trial Judge was a decision which was naturally open to criticizm as all decisions in difficult cases are It has received considerable criticizm from the learned senior counsel who represented the appellants. This criticizm has been eminently fair and intelligent and good criticizm but in the end it has not been able to satisfy us that the decision of the learned trial Judge upon the facts is incorrect. We can now take the grounds of appeal seriatim. We find that the learned trial Judge has arrived at a correct conclusion in holding that the plaintiff and the defendants 1 to 27 were members of a joint Hindu family at the time of the institution of the suit and has arrived at a correct conclusion in holding that the property in question was their joint property. We find that he has rightly repelled the suggestion of separation. We find that he has correctly held that the Basti property was not the self-acquired property of Bali Singh and his descendants. We do not consider that the question as to whether the plaintiff-respondent was to be considered a tenant-in-common arises or has any effect in the matter. We agree that Ex. 13 is admissible in evidence For the above reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs

Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for redemption. The facts of the case are that one Ram Harakh and his brother Nanku Singh were the owners of 11 bighas 9 biswas land situate in village Gopalpur, District Sultanpur The plaintiffs-respondents in this case are the sons of Nanku Singh. Nanku Singh mortgaged those lands for Rs. 300 with one Kanhaiya Pandey under a usufructuary mortgage dated 18th December 1893 under the terms of which the mortgagee was to remain in possession and to appropriate the profits thereof in lieu of his interest. He was to pay to the mortgagor a sum of Rs. 29 yearly as paramsana On 29th December 1896, Ram Harakh and Nanku Singh sold one of these plots to one Sanmukh Das and some of the plots together with others were sold by them on 6th January 1921, to the same person. The mortgagee Kanhaiya Pande did not get possession under the terms of his mortgage and sued his mortgagors as well as Sanmukh Das, the purchaser, for recovery of the lands mortgaged and obtained a decree on 7th March 1925 Sanmukh Das subsequently sued Kanhaiya Pande for redemption of the property purchased by him. The case was compromised on 18th December 1893, and by virtue of the compromise redemption was allowed to Sanmukh Das on payment of Rs 300 the sum due under the original mortgage and an additional sum of Rs 325 which the mortgagee claimed on account of the profits of which they were deprived during the time that the mortgagors had remained in possession. Sanmukh Das got into possession of the entire mortgaged property by virtue of this decree on 14th July 1915. Sanmukh Das is dead and the defendant appellant Mahant Nanku Das is his successor-in-interest. Ram Harakh, and Nanku, the original mortgagors, are also dead and the plaintiffs are their successors-in-title. The plaintiffs have now brought the present suit for recovery of the mortgaged property with the exception of those plots of land which were sold by them to Sanmukh Das.

The suit was contested on various grounds but for the purposes of this appeal it is only necessary to consider two defences, namely one in regard to limitation and the other in regard to interest The plea of limitation is based on the ground that the present suit for redemption has been brought after 12 years from the date of the decree passed in favour of Sanmukh Das. The payment made by Sanmukh Das was on 11th February 1915, though possession was obtained by him on 14th July 1915. The present suit has been brought on 11th October 1927. The plea as to interest is based on the ground that the predecessor-in-title of the defendant-appellant had to pay a sum of Rs. 325 in addition to the sum of Rs. 300, which was the principal money entered in the mortgage deed. He was, therefore, it was contended, entitled to claim interest on this amount Both the Courts below have thrown out these two contentions of the defendant-appellant and they have again been urged before me in second appeal.

After hearing the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellant I am of opinion that the decision arrived at in this case by the Courts below is correct, and should not be disturbed. As to the point of limitation I may state that so far as the province of Oudh is concerned the law relating to the position of a co-mortgagor redeeming the entire property was laid down in Makhdum Khan v. Mt. Jadi (1) In that case it was held by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that the limitation which should govern a suit brought by a co-mortgagor to redeem the property from the hands of the other co-mortgagor, who had redeemed the entire property mortgaged, was 12 years, but this period was to be reckoned from the date, when the redeeming co-mortgagor sets up his adverse possession. The point of view taken in that case was that a redeeming co-mortgagor could not be supposed to be in the position of a mortgagee, but the other co-mortgagors, who wish to seek redemption must bring their suit for possession within 12 years from the date when the redeeming co-mortgagor sets up his adverse possession. In the present case there is no proof that the defendant-appellant or his predecessor-in-title ever set up his adverse title in regard to the land in suit. I am in entire agreement with the view of law laid down in the above case and so far as I am aware the case has been consistently followed in Oudh : vide Wajihuddin Asharf v Ahmad Ashraf (2) and Rameshwar v. Sheo Rani (3). I, therefore, overrule the plea of limitation urged in this case.

As to the plea relating to interest I may refer to a recent decision of the Bombay High Court reported in Gafur Imam v Amir Isab (4) In that case it was held that in a case like the present the claim for interest could not be maintained unless the redeeming co-mortgagor had given notice that he would claim interest on the excess amount of money paid by him. In the present case it is clear that the defendant-appellant and his predecessor-in title have remained in possession of the property mortgaged after redeeming it from the mortgagee and have enjoyed the profits thereof. It is argued on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the profits were enjoyed by the appellant and his predecessor-in-title in lieu of the sum of Rs. 300 only. I am unable to accept this argument. I think the conduct of the defendant-appellant and of his predecessor-in-title shows explicitly that they have impliedly agreed to take profits of the property in lieu of the interest of the entire sum paid by them. If they desired to charge any interest they could have given notice of their intention to do so to their co-mortgagors, and if the latter had delayed redemption, they might have been heard to say that they were entitled in equity to claim interest In the absence of such an intention I do not think that the defendant-appellant can claim interest when he is in possession of the property and has been in enjoyment of the profits thereof presumably in lieu of the interest of the entire amount paid by him for redemption.

The plaintiffs also filed cross-objections but they were not pressed at the time of the argument. They are, therefore, dismissed with costs. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

H Husain—for Respondent 3.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff arising out of a suit for a declaration in respect of a 1/9th share in a house and ahata standing on plots 167 and 263 and in the alternative for possession of the same. The suit was based on the allegation that the house and ahata in question belonged to one Shubrati, who died about 50 years ago. On his death the property remained in the possession of his son, Pir Bakhsh, who died about 4 years ago. The plaintiff claimed as heir of Pir Bakhsh.

It may be stated at the outset that the plaintiff did dot pay any Court-fee as regards the alternative relief for possession So the suit has been treated by the Courts below and must be considered to be one merely for a declaration in respect of the plaintiff's title. The defendants 2 and 3 resisted the suit on the ground that the property really belonged to one Ali Bakhsh and that it devolved on defendant 1 as the sole heir to the property and that defendant 1 executed a sale-deed in repect of it in March 1925 in favour of defendants 2 and 3 for a sum of Rs. 200. The property at that time consisted of a plot of land with a small kachcha thatched house standing on part of it. Defendants 2 and 3 have subsequently put up a substantial building on the plot. They pleaded that these constructions were made in the knowledge of the plaintiff, who stood by allowing the defendants to proceed with the construction without any objection. So it was pleaded that the plaintiffs having acquiesced in the construction were estopped from maintaining the suit.

This plea of acquiescence has been accepted by both the Courts below.

So far as title to the property is concerned the finding of the lower appellate Court is to the effect that the plaintiffs were entitled to a share in the property as heirs of Pir Bakhsh. It has also been found that defendant 1 has a share equal to that of each of the two plaintiffs. The contention which has been pressed by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in support of the appeal is that the defendants have failed to prove the necessary elements justifying a finding of acquiescence in their favour and reliance has been placed upon the observations of Fry, J. in Willmott v. Barbar (1) as quoted in Mustafa Husain v. Saidul Nisan (2).

No doubt the learned Subordinate Judge has not categorically dealt with each one of the elements laid down in the case of Willmott v. Barbar (1) but I am satisfied that the circumstances in the present case are sufficient to establish all the necessary ingredients for a case of acquiescence I also take it that when the learned Subordinate Judge finds that the defendants' case as regards acquiescence has been made out his finding implies that in his opinion the necessary elements have been established.

The circumstances, on which reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the defendants are that the plaintiffs are close relations being the first cousin of defendant 1. They are all residents of the same village. When the sale-deed was executed by defendent 1 in March 1925 plaintiff 2 was present at the execution of the deed and signed it as an attesting witness. In this sale-deed defendant 1 described himself as the sole owner of the property. It has been found by the lower appellate Court and the finding is supported by evidence that shortly after the sale-deed defendants 2 and 3 started with the construction of a substantial building on the plot and that plaintiffs 1 and 2 were both present in the village while the constructions were going on The plaintiffs had no doubt pleaded that they had protested against the construction but the evidence regarding it has been disbelieved by both the Courts below. Under the circumstances there can be no doubt that the defendants 2 and 3 were acting under a bona fide belief that they possessed good title to the property under the sale-deed which they had obtained from the defendant 1. It must also be presumed that the plaintiffs knew of their title. It is not denied that the defendants have expended money on the faith of their mistaken belief regarding their own title under the sale-deed. The defendants' case was that they had spent not less than Rs. 4,000 in the construction A Commissioner was appointed who inspected the place and reported that the value of the constructions amounts to about Rs. 3,000. It is impossible to think that the defendants could have invested so much money in the building without a bona fide belief in the soundness of their title Lastly I can safely presume that the plaintiffs knew that the defendants were acting under the mistaken belief of their rights because plaintiff 2, as I have stated before was an attesting witness to the sale-deed and therefore knew very well of the transaction.

The fact that plaintiff 2 was present at the time of the execution of the sale-deed and attested it and the fact that plaintiffs did not raise any protest against the constructions show that they by their silence and conduct encouraged the defendants in expending money over the constructions. I am therefore satisfied that all the necessary elements have been fully made out in the present case.

(2) A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 66.

The lower appellate Court has also held that in view of the conduct of the plaintiffs in the present case the Court was justified in refusing to grant the declaration sought by them. Grant of a relief for declaration being in the discretion of the Court I am not prepared to hold that the Court exercised an improper discretion in refusing the declaration in the circumstances of this case

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs

Judgment —This is a second appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated 9th August 1928 affirming an order of Munsif, Partabgarh, dated 3rd May 1928 in execution proceedings.

The facts relevant to the appeal are as follows :

Bajrangi Lal, appellant, held a decree against one Ramdin. The decree was passed on the basis of a mortgage. Some plots in village Paniari and some other plots in village Sahjanpur were to be sold in execution of the decree. Bajrangi Lal applied for the sale of the property in execution of the decree. The sale was fixed, the first time, for 20th Jaunary 1926. No encumbrance was shown in the sale proclamation The Paniari property was valued at Rs. 342-12-0 and the Sahjanpur property at Rs. 169-12-0. There were no bids on 20th January 1926 and the sale was, therefore, postponed The next date fixed for sale was 20th March 1926 A fresh sale proclamation was issued and no encumbrance was shown in that proclamation also. It contained the same particulars as were given in the first sale proclamation The property was sold on 20th March 1926 in two lots. The first lot was of Paniari property and the second lot of Sahjanpur property. There is no dispute in this case about Sahjanpur property which was sold to Ram Harakh (respondent) for Rs 405 The dispute in this case relates to the Paniari property only. There was competition between the decree-holder (appellant) and Ram Harakh (respondent) in respect of the first lot (i. e. Paniari property) The bids made by the decree-holder were pre-empted by Ram Harakh who was a cosharer in the village Paniari. The last bid was of Rs 1,000 Ram Harakh deposited twenty five per cent. of the purchase money under O 21, R. 84, Civil P C However, he failed to deposit the full amount of the purchase money within fifteen pays from the date of sale under O. 21, R. 85 The result was that the property was ordered to be resold and Ram Harakh, the defaulting purchaser, forfeited the amount deposited by him under O 21, R. 84. A fresh proclamation for sale was issued under O 21, R 87 and it contained the same description of the Paniari property as noted in the previous proclamations. No encumbrance was shown in this sale proclamation also The sale was fixed for 20th October 1927. The judgment-debtor however, applied for postponement of sale on that date His application was granted and the sale was fixed for 3rd November 1927 On that date the property was sold for Rs. 500 only and was purchased by the decree-holder himself at the auction sale

The decree-holder having thus purchased the property applied on 20th January 1928 for recovery of the deficiency of the price (Rs 500), from the defaulting purchaser Ram Harakh, under O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C.

This application was resisted by Ram Harakh on various grounds. He pleaded inter alia that the decree-holder was guilty of fraud in not having shown the prior encumbrance of 1909 in the sale proclamation. He contended that the decree-holder being guilty of fraud could not take advantage of his own fraud.

We should like to note that the prior encumbrance of 1909 was a mortgage in favour of one Sita Ram for Rs. 50 in respect of certain property including the property in dispute. A suit was brought by Sita Ram on the basis of that mortgage on 15th December 1921 The present decree-holder, Bajrangi Lal, was also a party to that suit The claim was decreed for Rs. 600 odd in that suit on 30th March 1922 Though Bajrangi Lal had full knowledge of this encumbrance, he failed to show it in the sale proclamation which was issued in execution of his decree. His own agent filed an affidavit stating that the property in dispute was not subject to any encumbrance. This affidavit was of course a false affidavit.

The lower Courts rejected the decree-holder's claim for deficiency of price on the ground that he was guilty of fraud and could not be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud

Bajrangi Lal decree-holder has now come to this Court in second appeal.

We think there is no substance in this appeal.

The finding of the lower Courts that the decree-holder is guilty of fraud in this matter is based upon admissible evidence and cannot be impugned in second appeal There is no doubt that he is guilty of fraud and that his conduct is very objectionable. He got the sale proclamation issued without showing the encumbrance to which the property was subject. His own agent filed a false affidavit stating that the property was not subject to any encumbrance He then competed with Ram Harak (respondent) in bidding for the property at the auction sale and when the bids went up to Rs. 1,000 he cleverly withdrew and Ram Harakh became the auction purchaser. Ram Harakh became the purchaser believing that the property was not subject to any encumbrance. It was the decree-holder (appellant) who caused Ram Harakh to believe that the property was not subject to any encumbrance. Ram Harakh deposited twenty-five per cent. of the purchase-money, but when he came to know that the property was really subject to an encumbrance he did not deposit the balance. The amount deposited by him was forfeited to Government under O. 21, R. 86, Civil P. C. He thus suffered loss of Rs. 250 but avoided greater loss. The property was ordered to be resold and then the decree-holder himself purchased it for Rs. 500 only. After purchasing the property in this way, the decree-holder filed the present application on 20th January 1928 for recovery of the deficiency of price under O 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. We agree with the following observations made by the Hon'ble Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Baijnath Sahay v Moheep Narain Singh (1)

> " After the decree-holder has succeeded in misleading the defaulting purchaser to bid a high price, by withholding information as to encumbrances which it was his duty to notify, if he were allowed to recover the deficiency of price at the re-sale, it would be allowing him to take advantage of his own neglect of duty. That would be so manifestly inequitable that we are unable to hold that the legislature could have ever intended such a result."

This case was followed in the case of Kali Kishore Deb v. Guru Prosad (2). The following observations were made in the judgment in that case :

> " If there was a misdescription on the first occasion, the decree-holder was aware of it, and he ought not to have had the property again proclaimed for sale under a description which he knew to be wrong. Having done that he cannot make the defaulting purchaser answerable for the deficiency."

The appellant's learned counsel has referred to the case of Venkatchellamayya v. Rama Girjee Nilakanta Girjee (3). We think this case does not help the appellent in the case before us The question of fraud was not considered in that case It should be borne in mind that fraud vitiates and corrupts every thing and no person ought to have advantage of his own wrong or gain an advantage by his own fraud.

We are satisfied that the decree-holder (appellant) was guilty of fraud as held by the lower Courts. In our opinion no

WAZIR HASAN, AG. C. J. AND RAZA, J.

Raj Bachan Singh—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v

Bhanwar Lalji—Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No 91 of 1928, Decided on 21st February 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Kheri, D/- 24th July 1928.

(a) Hindu Law — Custom — Succession—Jangra Sangra Chauhan Thakur—Daughters are excluded from inheriting father's property moveable and immovable—But no inference from this of exclusion from mother's or grand-mother's stridhan can be drawn.

Daughters are excluded from inheriting their father's property whether moveable or immovable in the family of Jangra Sangra Chauhan Thakur; and as daughter has no right to inherit her issue also cannot inherit. But it cannot be inferred from such custom that the custom of exclusion of the same heir from mother or maternal grandmother's property is also in existence. The latter custom has strictly to be proved 5 I A. 1 and A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 278, Rel. on.

(b) Hindu Law—Stridhan—In absence of special custom, Hindu Law rules should be applied—In absence of issue, husband or his heirs succeed—But husband is not to be considered propositus.

In the absence of special custom the stridhan must pass according to the special rules of devolution applicable to such property under the Hindu law and the rule of succession to stridhan according to the Mitakshara is that where the marriage is in an approved form (and the presumption is that it was in an approved form unless the contrary is proved) the stridhan goes in default of issue to the husband and his heirs, that is to say, it descends in the same way as if it had belonged to the husband himself. But this does not mean that in such a case the husband is to be considered the propositus. [P 300 C 1, 2]

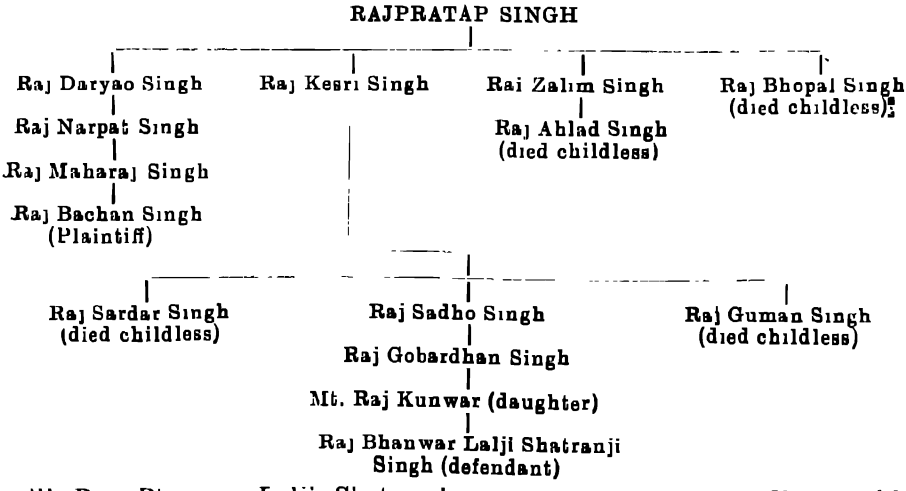
Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a declaratory suit.

The relative position of the parties will appear from the following pedigree;

(For pedigree see p. 297.)



The facts relevant to the appeal are as follows:

Raj Gobardhan Singh was a taluqdar. A reference to list No 1 prepared under S. 8, Oudh Estates Act (Act 1 of 1869), shows that the Bhira estate in the Kheri District was conferred upon four persons one of whom was Raj Sadho Singh, father of Raj Gobardhan Singh. It appears that subsequent to the grant estate was divided into several portions. Raj Gobardhan Singh at the time of his death was in possession of four portions of the Bhira estate. The names of these ilaqas are set out as being Bijwa, Ramnagar, Daulatpur and Nighasan. The estate as originally granted was an estate of list No. 4, the rule of succession being that when the owner dies intestate the property descends according to the ordinary law to which the members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject.

Raj Gobardhan Singh had no male issue. He had only one daughter, Mt. Raj Kunwar, who was married to Kunwar Sardar Singhji, the second son of the Chief of Shahpura in Rajputana, in 1903. She gave birth to a son (Raj Bhanwar Lalji Shatranji Singh defendant in the present suit) in 1904 and died the same year sometime after the birth of the child. Raj Gobardhan Singh had five Ranis. Mt. Raj Kunwar was his daughter by his second Rani called Rani Sesapaniwali. Rani Seesapaniwali and one other Rani died in the lifetime of Raj Gobardhan Singh. He died in March 1905 leaving three Ranis, namely: (1) Rani Suraj Kunwar called Bari Rani (2) Rani Devi Kunwar called Manjli Rani (3) Rani Dammar Kunwar called Choti Rani The Manjhli Rani died in 1915, the Chhoti Rani in November 1924 and the Bari Rani in May 1925.

Raj Gobardhan Singh had executed a registered will on 13th November 1903. By that will he created life-estates in favour of the Bari Rani and the Chhoti Rani in portions of his taluqa and granted a maintenance at the rate of Rs. 250 a month to the Manjhli Rani. The will created a vested remainder in favour of his daughter's son (and in default of daughter's son, in favour of the daughter herself) which was to take effect in possession immediately on the termination of the life-estates created in favour of the widows. That daughter's son is now the defendant in the present suit. The will contained also a bequest in favour of Raj Bachan Singh (plaintiff in the present suit) in respect of the villages out of the taluqa to take effect on the determination of the life-estates created in favour of the widows. These ten villages were to go to Raj Bachan Singh for life after the death of the widows. It was further provided that if Bachan Singh should have a son, the ten villages were to descend to him in full ownership after the termination of Bachan Singh's life-estate. It appears that the will of Raj Gobardhan Singh has been duly given effect to. We should like to note that there was a litigation between the parties about the will in question some years ago. The case was finally decided by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in 1918. It is reported in Raj Bachan Singh v Shatranji.(1). The will was held to be genuine and valid. It was also held that under the terms of the will Raj Bhanwar Lalji Shatranji Singh had a vested interest in the estate left by Raj Gobardhan Singh.

The circumstances out of which the present suit has arisen so far as they are material to the judgment may be very shortly stated The Bari Rani of Raj Gobardhan Singh remained in possession of the whole of the taluqa after the death of the Chhoti Rani She died on 15th May 1925. She devoted a considerable portion of her savings to religious purposes and executed several deeds of trust. At her death disputes arose as to succession and as there was apprehension of forcible possession being taken over the moveable property in the possession of the lady at the time of her death, the District Magistrate of Kheri took over charge of the property and kept it in his custody and refused to part with the possession to any person who could not show a title through the civil Court. B. Bankey Behari Lal who was appointed trustee for the deity Sri Thakurji Maharaj to whom property was dedicated under the deed of trust dated 3rd May 1925 filed a suit on behalf of the deity on 1st June 1925 for a declaration that the moveable property left by the lady was dedicated to the deity under the terms of the deed. He impleaded both the parties to the present suit as defendants in that suit. The claim was contested by both the defendants in that suit and each defendant claimed the property as against the other defendant The trial Judge refused to decide in that suit which defendant would succeed to the property which Rani Suraj Kunwar (Bari Rani) was not competent to dispose of in her lifetime. He found that something less than two-thirds of the property which was in possession of the Rani was her self-acquired property which she could dispose of in her lifetime. He found that the Rani had executed the deed of trust intelligently. He decreed the suit accordingly on 24th September 1926. Raj Bachan Singh, who was defendant 1 in that suit and who is the plaintiff in the present suit appealed to this Court asking that the suit should be dismissed in entirety and in the alternative that the relief should be reduced The decree of the first Court was affirmed by this Court with slight modification in September 1927. No determination was made by this Court of the rights of the defendants inter se in that suit. The case is reported in Raj Bachan Singh v. Shri Thakurji Maharaj (2).

Raj Bachan Singh brought the present suit against Raj Bhanwar Lalji Shatranji Singh in January 1928 claiming the rest of the moveable property in respect of which the suit of Sri Thakurji Maharaj was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, Kheri on 24th September 1926 He claims the property in suit as the heir of Raj Gobardhan Singh, Manjhli Rani and Chhoti Rani. It is also stated in the plaint that should any article out of the property in suit be held to be the property of the Bari Rani, the plaintiff is entitled to the assets of the Bari Rani also by right of inheritance. It is alleged that the defendant has no right to the property in suit as daughters and daughters' sons are excluded from inheritance by the custom prevailing in the clan of Chauhan Thakurs and in the family of Raj Gobardhan Singh who belonged to that clan

The claim was resisted by the defendant He set up the will of 13th November 1903 and denied the alleged custom alleging that it was inapplicable to the present suit He alleged that the plaintiff had no right to the property in suit as against him and that he was entitled to the entire property. The learned Subordinate Judge framed six issues and found as follows :

(1) The plaintiff is not entitled to the property in suit as the heir of Raj Gobardhan Singh or his Ranis.

(2) A custom prevailed among the Sangra Chauhan Thakurs in general and the family of Raj Gobardan Singh in particular by which daughter and daughters' sons are excluded from inheritance so far as the estate or zamindari property is concerned. The property in suit is the moveable property of Raj Gobardhan Singh, the Manjhli Rani and the Chhoti Rani No custom of exclusion of daughters or daughters' sons is proved as regards the moveable property or as regards the separate or absolute property of mothers and maternal grandmothers The alleged custom does not apply to the moveable property left by Raj Gobardhan Singh and also to the moveable property left by the Manjhli Rani and the Chhoti Rani

(3) and (4) The moveable property in suit is not covered by the will of Raj Gobardhan Singh. The defendant is not the residuary legatee under the will of all the properties of Raj Gobardhan Singh.

(5) The property detailed in list, Ex. 26, belonged to Raj Gobardhan Singh and that detailed in list, Ex. 27, to the Manjhli Rani. The rest of the property in suit belonged to the Chhoti Rani. The property which belonged to the Ranis was their stridhan to which the defendant is entitled under the Hindu law The cash which was left by the Bari Rani should be taken to be the income or the saving of the estate. The defendant has taken possession of the taluqa under the terms of the will of Raj Gobardhan Singh and the cash must go along with the estate

(6) The plaintiff is not entitled to any relief.

The plaintiff's claim was therefore rejected. He has appealed challenging the findings on the points decided against him

The learned Subordinate Judge need not and should not have introduced the question of accretion (as regards cash) in the present suit That question, admittedly, does not arise on the pleadings. The plaintiff has filed the lists of the properties of Raj Gobardhan Singh and the Manjhli Rani, separately. These are Exs 26 and 27 Ex 26 is the list of the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh and Ex 27 is the list of the property of Manjhli Rani as stated by the plaintiff in his application dated 16th April 1928 see printed book p 30 It is now agreed that the lists Exs 26 and 27 should be taken to be correct and the rest of the property should be held to be the property of the Chhoti Rani There is no dispute now so far as the specification of property or properties is concerned. The only point for determination is the question of title to the property in suit We now proceed to decide that question

The learned Subordinate Judge, has found that the moveable property in suit is not covered by the will of Raj Gobardhan Singh This finding has not been seriously disputed before us. We have examined the will in question (Ex. A 1). It relates to the taluqa and not to the moveable property. The will in question should therefore be left out of consideration in deciding the question of title. We hold, agreeing with the learned trial Judge, that the defendant can have no right to the property in suit under the will.

We have to decide the question of title with regard to (1) the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh specified in Ex. 26 and (2) the properties of Manjhli Rani and Chhoti Rani.

As regards the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh, specified in Ex. 26, the title of the defendant under the Hindu law is not disputed. It is, however, contended that the defendant is excluded from inheriting that property by custom. Raj Gobardhan Singh was a Jangra Sangra Chauhan Thakur. The evidence of custom on which the plaintiff relies consists of (1) the wajib-ul-araez of villages Lalpur, Lakhsar, Naurangabad and Teekar, (2) the deposition of Bachchu Lal, P W 2 and (3) the pleadings and judgment in Mt Parbati Kuar's case (3). This is the only evidence to which the plaintiff-appellant's learned counsel has referred in the course of arguments before us We find that the wajib-ul-araez of Naurangabad and Teekar (Exs. 4 and 5) are not in point, as they deal with customs prevailing among the Janwar Thakurs of those villages. The wajib-ul-araez of Lalpur and Lakhsar (Exs. 2 and 3), help the plaintiff to some extent. Bachchu Lal, P W. 2, also gives evidence in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff relies principally on the pleadings and judgment in Mt Parbati Kuar's case (3). Mt Parbati Kuar was the daughter of Raj Milap Singh who belonged to the family of Raj Gobardhan Singh. She brought a suit for possession of the property of her father Raj Milap Singh against Raj Gobardhan Singh and others in 1900 The main defence which was set up to her claim was that under a family custom, daughters were excluded from inheritance and her suit was dismissed on the finding that the custom was proved to exist. It appears that Raj Gobardhan Singh did not actually file any written statement of defence in that suit, but his agent intimated to the Court that he (Raj Gobardhan Singh) took the same line of defence as the other defendants in that suit. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court on 31st March 1904. Mt. Parbati Kuar's appeal was dismissed by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on 2nd March 1905. It was held that among Jangra Sangra Chauhans, daughters were excluded by brothers and male collaterals, however remote. The case is reported in Mt. Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (3). Mt. Parbati Kuar's appeal was also dismissed by their Lordships of the Privy Council on 13th May 1909: see Parbati Kunwar v. Chandrapal Kunwar (4). There is no doubt that the case of Mt. Parbati Kuar helps the plaintiff's case, as regards Raj Gobardhan Singh's property, mentioned above to the full extent This evidence is surely a strong evidence in plaintiff's favour. We think the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in holding on this evidence that daughters are excluded from inheriting their father's property in the family of Raj Gobardhan Singh. If a daughter had no right to inherit her issue also could not inherit: see Balgobind v Badri Prasad (5). We should like to note that the respondent's learned counsel has not questioned the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the point under consideration in the course of arguments.

We accept the finding, but we are not prepared to agree with the learned trial Judge that the custom applies to estate or zamindari property only and not to moveable property. We see no reason why any distinction should be made between moveable and immovable property in this respect. If a daughter is excluded from inheriting her father's property, she is excluded from inheriting his property, whether it is moveable or immovable. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove specifically that daughters were excluded from inheriting their father's moveable property also. Surely the defendant would not have got the taluqa of Raj Gobardhan Singh, if the latter had not made the will mentioned above in his favour. It appears that Raj Gobardhan Singh, who had defended the suit of Mt. Parbati Kuar on the ground of custom, was conscious of the force of custom and had therefore executed the will mentioned above. The property in suit is not covered by the will and the defendant can claim no right to the property as he is excluded from inheriting the property of his maternal grandfather by custom. The plaintiff Raj Bachan Singh is the nearest male collateral relative of Raj Gobardhan Singh. He is entitled to the moveable property in dispute (i. e., the property specified in Ex. 26) as the heir of Raj Gobardhan Singh.

As regards the rest of the property (i. e., the property of Manjhli Rani and Chhoti Rani), it is not disputed that the said property is the stridhan of the widows. The rule of succession to stridhan according to the Mitakshara is that where the marriage is in an approved from (and the presumption is that it was in an approved from unless the contrary is proved) the stridhan goes in default of issue to the husband and his heirs, that is to say, it descends in the same way as if it had belonged to the husband himself. The appellant's learned counsel concedes that the successive heirs to a woman's stridhan after the husband would be:

(1) his (husband's) son by another wife, that is, the deceased woman's step-son; (2) his grandson by another wife; (3) his great-grandson by another wife, (4) his other wives; (5) his daughter by another wife, that is, the deceased woman's step-daughter, (6) the son of his daughter by another wife, that is, step-daughter's son; (7) his mother; (8) his father; (9) his brother: (10) his brother's son; then his other sapindas, then his samanodakas, and then his bandhus : see Principles of Hindu Law, 5th edn , by D. F Mulla, pp. 147-48.

He concedes that the defendant being the son of the step-daughter of the Manjhli Rani and the Chhoti Rani, is entitled to the stridhan of the Ranis under the Hindu Law and has preference as against the plaintiff. He contends, however, that the property in dispute should be held to be the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh after the death of the Ranis and should go to the plaintiff, as the defendant is excluded from inheriting the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh by custom. We think this contention is not well founded The plaintiff himself has not treated the property in dispute as the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh after the death of the Ranis. He has filed lists showing properties of Raj Gobordhan Singh and his Ranis separately. The property of the Ranis cannot be held to be the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh simply because it is to descend in the same way as if the property had belonged to Raj Gobardhan Singh himself. That property did not and could not vest in Raj Gobardhan Singh who died long ago. We are not prepared to accept the contention that the husband in such cases is the propositus, whether dead or alive. The stridhan must pass according to the special rules of devolution applicable to such property under the Hindu law. It is true that the defendant is excluded from inheriting the property of his maternal grandfather Raj Gobardhan Singh by custom, but we are not prepared to hold that for that reason, he is also excluded from inheriting the stridhan of the stepmothers of his mother, when he is heir to such property under the Hindu law. No such custom has been set up or proved in this case. In the case of Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council have said that :

" A custom is a rule which in a particular family or a particular district has from long usage obtained the force of law. It must be ancient, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rules of Law, must be construed strictly."

Where a custom has been proved to exist, it supersedes the general law which, however, regulates all beyond the custom : see Neelkisto Deb v. Beer Chunder (7), Ram Nundun Singh v Janki Koer (8), Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (9). The plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that daughters are excluded from inheriting the property of their fathers and daughters' sons, from inheriting the property of their maternal grandfathers, but he has wholly failed to show that this custom extends to property inherited from females which is " stridhan " in the special sense. We do not find and have not been referred to any clear instance of exclusion from succession to stridhan. As pointed out in the case of Bijai Bahadur Singh v Mathura Singh (10) the fact that the custom of exclusion of daughters and their issue from inheriting their father or maternal grandfather's property, as the case may be, has been established, does not lead to a necessary inference that the custom of exclusion of the same from their mother or maternal grandmother's property is also in existence The latter custom has strictly to be proved. This view is supported by the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Janki Koer (11). His Lordship observed as follows :

" The Judicial Commissioner, however, was of opinion that the plaintiff had failed to prove the special usage and custom which he had set up, and that there was no sufficient evidence to warrant the Courts excluding daughters from the succession. Their Lordships concur in that view and are of opinion that there was no sufficient evidence to prove the custom set up. Beyond all doubt there was no such custom proved as regards the separate or absolute property of a woman."

In that case the property in dispute was held to have belonged to the mother of the defendant-respondent as her absolute property and the remark quoted above was made with reference to the evidence led by the plaintiffs to prove the custom of exclusion of daughters from inheriting father's property. The same view was taken in a decision of a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Basant Singh v Rampal Singh (12). The rule that custom being in derogation of the general rules of law must be construed and proved strictly was followed also in the case of Brijraj Bux Singh v. B. Raghuraj Bahadur (13). It was held in that case that although the custom of division of istribant had been established yet no custom was established to the effect that the descendants of one wife, however, remote in degree had preference over the descendants of the other wife though nearer in degree. No such custom having been established the ordinary rule of Mitakshara law prevailed, viz , those who were nearer in degree excluded those who were more remote. We are of opinion, therefore, that the learned trial Judge was perfectly right in rejecting the plaintiff's claim in respect of the property of the Manjhli Rani and the Chhoti Rani. It is the defendant who is entitled to that property under the Hindu law. He has preference over the plaintiff as stated above.

The result is that the appeal is partly allowed. It is declared that the plaintiff is entitled to the property of Raj Gobardhan Singh detailed in the list Ex 26 The rest of the claim is dismissed. The parties will receive and pay costs in both the Courts in proportion to their success and failure.

Second Appeal No. 12 of 1928, Decided on 15th January 1929, against decree of Sub- Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 2nd Novem ber 1927.

Landlord and Tenant—Abadi —Mere inclusion in municipality is no test of area being 'town'.

Mere inclusion in a municipality is no test as to whether an area is or is not a town. Where in a mouza the dominating population was agricultural.

Held : that though the houses of the neighbouring town adjoined the area the area could not be, on that account, altered from its old condition as a village site into a town land though some of the old outlying fields of the mouza might have been included in the town. [P 302 C 2, P 303 C 1]

(b) Oudh Laws Act, S. 8—Pre-emption allowed in a city.

Section 8 clearly allows the right of pre-emption to exist in a town and even in a city. It only lays down that such a right must not be presumed to exist. [P 303 C 1]

Radha Krishna for Hyder Husein—for Appellants.

M. Wasim and Khaliq-uz-zaman—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises from a suit for pre-emption of a house and land covering four plots in an area described in the sale-deed as mouza Khairabad. The property in suit is specified at the foot of the plaint. The rights of plaintiffs to pre-empt are conceded if it be admitted that any custom of pre-emption exists in respect of this area, and it is not now disputed that the sale price is Rs. 1,500 We have only to consider whether this mouza Khairabad is still a village and controlled by Chap. 2, Oudh Laws Act (Act 18 of 1876) or whether, as found by the two Courts below, it is now a portion of the town of Sultanpur, and as such no right of pre-emption exists in it. The learned Munsif who tried this suit was influenced to some extent by his personal observation and it appears that to his mind the property in question is in appearance a part of the town of Sultanpur. If so, it must be the last four plots in the south of the town, as it appears that there is no other building beyond it But the learned Munsif shows in his judgment that he was mistaken as to certain facts. He was under the impression that the town of Sultanpur is gradually growing and is absorbing this area on the south. We find that this is not the case. The town of Sultanpur ceased to exist after the Mutiny and a new town gradually grew up on the site of the old cantonment. The village of Khairabad if shown in the map of the first settlement in the year 1869 as a fairly compact area bearing the number 113 surrounded by fields. The new town of Sultanpur gradually extended its boundaries towards the south and part of it is undoubtedly built on the northern area of Khairabad. The main road from Allahabad to Fyzabad runs along the old abadi of Khairabad in the east and on into the town of Sultanpur, and another road known as the thandhi sarak crosses it at some little distance, north of the old abadi of Khairabad but inside the limits of the village area. The town of Sultanpur has clearly extended itself to this thandhi sarak, but it is another matter to hold that it has absorbed the abadi of Khairabad in which the plot in suit is situated.

We have looked at the maps of the first Settlement and of the later Settlement of 1895 and we find that plot No. 113 in the first Settlement almost exactly corresponds with plot No. 223 of the latest Settlement and the only difference that we can see is that some of the fields adjoining the main were covered by houses at the time of the second Settlement In the year 1882 a portion of the Khairabad village area including the old abadi was brought within the municipal limits of Sultanpur town and it appears that from that the persons residing in this area have the advantages of being members of the municipality. Since then the town of Sultanpur has ceased to grow as is shown by successive census returns.

It is settled law that mere inclusion in a municipality does not change a village into a town. This was the finding of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh in a ruling in Janki Prasad v Sahib-un-nissa (1). As the Judges observed :

"if the framers of the Oudh Laws Act had intended that any land within the limits of a municipality should be treated as being situated within a 'town' within the meaning of S. 8, they would have expressed that intention in the Act itself."

We agree with this observation and we consider that mere inclusion in a municipality is no test as to whether an area is or is not a town. It is difficult to find a definition of the word "town" which is of universal use, because all those definitions that we have seen depend on the opinion of some person who has to decide whether the area is or is not a town, for instance the definition in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, after saying that it is a space covered by houses collected in a mass, goes on to say that the houses must be in sufficient number to be "ordinarily designated a town." It is impossible to say how many houses are required to make a town.

In the present case we find that there is no great difficulty in deciding that this particular area is not included in the town of Sultanpur for the purposes of this case This abadi No. 223 is in every essential the same village site that it was at the time of the first Settlement. The cosharers and lambardars still live in this abadi and they are zamindars of the agricultural lands appertaining to it. Of the 99 houses in this plot 7 8are occupied, 42 by persons whose occupation is agriculture and 18 by persons whose occupation may be considered to be appertenant to agriculture. Thus the bulk of the population of this area is agricultural and not essentially different from the population of any ordinary agricultural village of the same size. The town has not surrounded this area. That is not suggested. All that is said is that it comes up to it along the road. The mere fact that the last house in the town, as the learned Munsif calls it, adjoins this area does not bring the area inside the town, and we fail to see how the area has been altered from its old condition as a village site into anything which could be described as a town, if a town is to be held to be a mass of houses close together.

Moreover the municipal authorities themselves have differentiated the portion of the municipal area which lies south of the thandhi sarak from that which lies to the north, and they have allowed the construction of kachcha buildings and buildings with thatched roofs in the southern area which includes the old abadi of Khairabad, whereas they have forbidden the construction of such buildings north of the thandhi sarak. We have considered the nature of the buildings as well as the occupation of their inhabitants and we find that only a very few can be described as entirely pucca, and there are no public buildings except such as may be found in any good sized village

There remains the further question whether S. 8, Oudh Laws Act, would forbid us to hold that a custom of pre-emption exists in this abadi even if it were included in the town of Sultanpur. That section clearly allows the right of pre-emption to exist in a town and even a city. It only lays down that such a right must not be presumed to exist. Here there is no case of presumption. The right undoubtedly existed before the approach of the town of Sultanpur. It was exercised in the year 1882, the very year when municipal boundary was extended, and a notice was given to pre-emptors in a sale as late as the year 1905. We may ask, if the right of pre-emption existed in this area in 1882, what has happened in the interval to destroy that right? The only answer which we have heard is virtually the answer that it has been included in the municipal area of Sultanpur and that, as we have shown, is no answer at all. In our opinion this abadi No. 223 has not changed its nature and is still in its essence a village inhabited by a village community. The mere fact, that a portion of the outlying fields in the old mouza of Khairabad may have been included on the town of Sultanpur does not affect our opinion as to the particular area in suit, but we do not wish to extend our judgment beyond the actual facts which we have to decide.

We find, therefore, that the plaintiffs have a right to enforce their right of pre-emption in respect of the property in suit. We set aside the decisions of the lower Courts and decree the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the property in suit on payment of Rs. 1,500 within three months from this date If they fail to do so, their suit will be dismissed with costs in all the Courts If they comply, they will obtain their costs in all the Courts from the contesting defendant, Syed Mohammad Zamin

First Appeal No. 148 of 1927, Decided on 13th August 1928, from order of Sub-Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 29th August 1927.

Practice—Pleadings—Suit on mortgage—Subsequent agreement to pay enhanced interest by some of the holders of equity of redemption—Enhanced rate not claimed in plaint but in oral pleadings when time barred—Relief being personal against some of the holders of properties cannot be claimed.

After mortgaging certain properties the mortgagors transferred part of them to others. The transferees agreed by a letter to pay an enhanced rate than that fixed in the mortgage but the period within which it was to be paid was not fixed. In a suit by the mortgagees enhanced rate was not claimed in the plaint but was claimed in the oral pleadings when it was time barred.

Held : that this latter relief which was a personal one against the transferees on the basis of subsequent agreement and not against all the holders of the property together cannot be be claimed in the suit though in this suit it was bound to fail being time barred: 26 Cal. 707 (*P. Judgment —This is a plaintiff's appeal. On 26th February 1913, Ganesh Singh and Chandi Singh executed a deed of simple mortgage for a consideration of Rs 40,000 in favour of the plaintiff by which they mortgaged half a share which they had purchased under the exercise of a right of pre-emption and one-third of thier ancestral share. On 5th September 1921, Chandi Singh died. On that date Ganesh Singh on behalf of himself and Chandi Singh's descendants sold the whole of the share which had been acquired under exercise of the right of pre-emption but did not sell any portion of the ancestral property. The vendees were Gur Prasad and Parmeshar Dat. Gur Prasad is respondent 3, Parmeshar Dat is deceased and represented by respondents 4 and 5. The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff on the basis of the deed of mortgage of 26th February 1913, He claimed Rs. 40,000 principal. He claimed interest at a rate higher than the rate stated in the deed of mortgage. He claimed this enhanced interest on the basis of two letters Ex. 2 and Ex 3 dated 8th December and 11th December 1922. In both these letters Gur Prasad and Parmeshur Dat had stated after their purchase that they would pay an enhanced rate of interest and in the second letter they stated they would pay this enhanced rate of interest if they were given three months time within which to pay up the whole amount due on the mortgage. The letters are, however, not clear as to the period within which they would be ready to pay the enhanced interest. They nowhere stated that they would pay the enhanced interest up to the last date when the principal and interest could be recovered under the deed of 26th February 1913.

The trial Judge has decreed the plaintiff-appellant's suit for the relief which he has claimed with the exception of the claim for enhanced interest. He has refused to award him interest at a higher rate than the rate stated in the deed It is against this portion of his judgment that the present appeal is preferred, We consider that the learned trial Judge has arrived at a right view. We note that the suit was a suit on the mortgage and that the only relief sought was as against the mortgaged property. No personal relief is sought in the plaint against any of the respondents. It is true that in the oral pleadings a personal relief was claimed and the learned trial Judge has rejected this claim on the ground that it was time barred. We consider that the claim was time barred, but we further consider that such a relief could not have been given on the pleadings themselves. The facts in this case are very similar to the facts in Tika Ram v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (1). There the facts were as follows: A certain taluqdar had executed three registered mortgages. At the same time he executed three written promises to pay a higher rate of interest. The mortgagees subsequently sued to recover out of the estate not only the interest stated in the deed but this higher interest. The Judicial Commissioner's Court on appeal refused to grant him this higher interest. He appealed to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. Their Lordships stated at p. 100:

> " Their Lordships were asked to give the appellant a decree against the estate of the deceased Raja based on his personal liability under the rukkas The learned Commissioners expressed their opinion on the matter as if it were properly before them. But the truth is that this question was not raised in the plaint or referred to in the pleadings or issues. In their Lordships' opinion it was not competent for the Court in this suit to deal with it."

Here this relief was not raised in the plaint. It was raised in the oral pleadings and issues. But the fact that it was raised in the oral pleadings and issues does not in our opinion differentiate the case in such a manner as to justify us in considering such a relief. It is to be observed that the plaint merely asked for a relief against the property. In the oral pleadings there was a personal relief asked, not against the holders of the property together, but against certain of the holders in respect of a certain act. We wish to point out for the benefit of the Courts concerned that in our opinion they must look very closely as to the form that these plaints take Parties are too fond in Oudh of leaving these matters vague and then endeavouring to take advantage of their own carelessness by raising points subsequently which should have been cleared up when the pleadings were originally drafted. But in this case we are not determining the question against the appellant only upon the ground that such a relief could not be claimed in the suit but we are determining it also upon the merits. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 1 of 1928, Decided on 5th December 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Unao, D/- 28th November 1927.

(a) Hindu Law—Succession—Exclusion—Failure to conduct family business is not sign of insanity—S, when under observation, leaving hospital of his own will and taking part in funeral and marriage ceremonies—S is not lunatic although he may be eccentric and of weak intelligence.

The mere failure to conduct the family business is not a sign of insanity, and a man, who was never placed under restraint, who left the hospital, when under observation, of his own will and who took part in the funeral ceremonies of his brother and the marriage ceremonies of his daughter, is not a lunatic although he may be eccentric and of weak intelligence. [P 307 C 1]

(b) Family settlement—Family settlement need not be embodied in formal registered document—Registration Act S. 17.

It is not necessary that a family settlement should be embodied in a formal registered document. It is sufficient that members of the family should agree among themselves to make a settlement and give effect to such agreement: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 97, Rel. on.; 35 All. 502 and 22 *O. (c) Family settlement — Parties agreeing not to dispute each other's claims—Active contest is not necessary.

Although at the time when a family settlement is made there was no active contest, still the mere fact that at that time the parties agreed among themselves that they would not dispute each other's claims in respect of certain property is sufficient to establish the fact that a valid and binding family settlement took place between them. *A. Judgment—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Thakur Balbhaddar Singh whose suit for possession of certain zamindari property has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Unao. The plaintiff claims that he obtained his title to the property by means of a sale-deed executed in his favour on 28th September 1926, by Chandrika Singh and Raja Singh, the sons of one Gokul Singh deceased, and Mt. Ram Dei, the widow of Jagannath Singh who was the brother of Gokul Singh. The property which these persons are said to have transferred in favour of the plaintiff was, first of all, half of the zamindari share formerly belonging to one Narpat Singh, who died in the year 1896 and whose widow Basant Kuar held the estate as a Hindu widow until her death on 16th December 1920, and, secondly a similar half-share which belonged formerly to Jaswant Singh, nephew of the said Narpat Singh, who died in 1911 and was succeeded by his widow Mt. Pohkar Kuar, who died on 7th December 1924. The plaintiff's claim to these two properties has been contested on different grounds, and for the sake of convenience we shall deal first of all with the case of Narpat Singh's property.

When Basant Kuar died on 16th December 1920 there were three reversioners in equal degree, namely, Sitla Bakhsh Singh, Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh. Mt. Basant Kuar appears to have intended to make some disposition in favour of Mt. Pohkar Kuar and the latter claimed mutation in the revenue Courts. Her application was contested by Gokul Singh, Jagannath Singh and Sahmsher Singh, who was the son of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, all of whom claimed that the property on Mt. Basant Kuar's death was divided half and half between Sitla Bakhsh Singh on the one side and Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh on the other. On the same day that these applications were made, namely, 20th January 1921, Mt. Pohkar Kuar made a further application stating that she had now learnt that she was not a legal heir to the property and prayed that her application for mutation of names might be dismissed and mutation made in favour of Gokul Singh, Jagannath Singh and Sitla Bakhsh Singh, whom she described as nasamajh under the guardianship of his own son Shamsher Singh. Then on 4th February, Mt. Menda Kuar, the widow of Raghuraj Singh, brother of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, also made an application to the effect that she had no objection to the entry being made in favour of Sitla Bakhsh Singh in respect of the property left by the deceased Mt. Basant Kuar. There was thus no one left who could have any claim to this property except those who had expressed their agreement in mutation being made in favour of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh. On 19th February the Tahsildar passed orders dividing the property in two halves, one-half going to Sitla Bakhsh Singh, lunatic, under the guardianship of his son Shamsher Singh, and the other half going to Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh in equal shares This order was confirmed by the Assistant Collector on 27th April 1921, and entries were made in the revenue papers accordingly.

The plaintiff sets up his claim to the property, which was assigned in the mutation proceedings to Sitla Bakhsh Singh, on the ground that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was a lunatic and, therefore, debarred by Hindu law from inheritance and that the property left on the death of Basant Kuar devolved solely on the two nearer reversioners Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh, and the heirs of Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh were, therefore, entitled to sell to the plaintiff the half-share of the property which had been wrongly mutated in the name of Sitla Bakhsh Singh He also claimed that even if Sitla Bakhsh Singh was not held to be disqualified from inheritance on the ground of insanity he was under the Hindu law entitled only to one-third of the estate and not one-half, inheritance being per capita and not per stirpes

The plaintiff had at the outset to establish, first, that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was insane, and secondly that his insanity was such as to preclude him from inheritance under the Hindu law: and even if he were able to make good these two points he had to meet the defence that there had been a valid family settlement of the estate at the time of mutation.

The main proof that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was insane, is to be found in numerous documents in which he is described either as nasamajh, which means wanting in intelligence, or falir-ul-aql, which is an Arabic word having a similar meaning, but which is used as a technical expression for insane There is no evidence that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was ever treated as insane until the year 1909 On 9th July 1909, Shamsher Singh made an application to the District Judge of Hardoi (Ex. 38, p. 72) in which he asked that he should be made guardian of the property of his father Sitla Bakhsh Singh on the ground that he had been a lunatic for seven or eight years and was incompetent to do the zamindari affairs. This application was unsuccessful because the attempt to have Sitla Bakhsh Singh declared insane by the Civil Surgeon failed. There is on the record a document (Ex 43, p. 75) which shows that he was under observation in the District Hospital for 14 days He arrived on 3rd August and went away again on the 5th and he was brought back on the 8th and left on the 19th: apparently the Doctor was unable to give an opinion as to his insanity at the end of that time Despite the failure of the application Shamsher Singh from that time onward constituted himself the guardian of his father and signed documents on his behalf as guardian On one occasion his second son Raushan Singh acted in a similar capacity. There is also the evidence that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was described in the same manner by Pohkar Kuar and Menda Kuar as well as by Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh and it does not appear that from 1909 until his death he acted for himself in any matter of business.

There is also oral evidence intended to show that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was a lunatic. The plaintiff Balbhaddar Singh is the only person who says that Sitla Bakhsh Singh had to be kept under restraint, and as his statement is entirely unsupported by other evidence it has been properly disregarded by his own counsel The evidence which appears to be more or less reliable is that he was in the habit of using as many as twenty or twenty-five gharas of water for his bath, that he was careless in his dress allowing one-half of his dhoti to trail on the ground, and that he was surly and refused to speak to people. It is also alleged, and it may be true, that he used to abuse and beat his wife, but unfortunately this cannot be regarded as any proof of insanity We have considered carefully all the evidence produced by the plaintiff and we are not satisfied that the peculiarities of this man amount to proofs of madness. He was certainly eccentric and we have statement of Gokul Singh, the father of the plaintiff's vendors, made on oath on 18th September 1924 in which he stated that he had always seen Sitla Bakhsh Singh not to be in his proper senses and this condition had lasted for the last 30 years, which would take us back to the year 1894. At the same time he admitted that Sitla Bakhsh Singh performed the funeral ceremonies of his brother Raghuraj Singh and also performed the marriages of his own daughters. Later in cross-examination he toned down the statement : but even so he admitted that Sitla Bakhsh Singh arranged for the seating of the guests at the marriage of his daughter Secondly, we have before us the explanation of Shamsher Singh as to why Sitla Bakhsh Singh should have been treated as a lunatic after the year 1909 whereas his condition then was no different from what it had been according to Gokul Singh, in the year 1894, and according to Shamsher Singh in the year 1901. The reason was that on the death of Raguraj Singh, brother of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, the present plaintiff approached Mt. Menda Kuar, widow of Raghuraj Singh, and attempted to make her regard him as taluqdar of her property. Sitla Bakhsh Singh refused to interfere and as he would not go into Court his son determined to act for him and with this end in view sought for appointment as his guardian. This statement of Shamsher Singh is borne out by the documentary evidence. He made his application on 9th July 1909, and on 26th July 1909 Mt. Menda Kuar executed an agreement in favour of Balbhaddar Singh admitting his taluqdari right. This document is Ex. A-10 p. 76, Part 3 and there is the statement of Balbhaddar Singh himself (Ex. A-9 p. 79, Part 3) dated 8th September 1909, in which he deposes that such an agreement had been executed giving him 10 per cent taluqdari dues.

In our view this was a sufficient reason for the sons of Sitla Bakhsh Singh to exaggerate their father's mental condition in order to obtain a right to manage the affairs of the family. We are unable to hold that mere failure to conduct the family business is a sign of insanity and we do not consider that a man, who was never placed under restraint, who left the hospital, when under observation, of his own will, and who took part in those ceremonies which are of vital importance among Hindus, namely, the funeral ceremonies of a brother and the marriage ceremonies of a daughter, was a lunatic He may have been a man of weak intellect and he was certainly eccentric, but we doubt that the evidence justifies us in concluding that he was more than this.

We need not consider how far the Hindu law excludes from inheritance a person, who has not been born insane but who is insane at the time when inheritance opens. Admittedly the insanity, if any, of Sitla Bakhsh Singh was not congenital, but we are not prepared to find that he was insane at all, and we prefer therefore not to enter into the discussion of the meaning of the texts on which this theory of the exclusion of lunatics from inheritance under Hindu law is based.

We now turn to the question of the extent to which Sitla Bakhsh Singh inherited. According to the plaintiff he could only inherit under the Hindu law one-third of the property. No attempt has been made before us to establish a family custom which in this family prescribes that inheritance shall be per stripes and not per capita The defence set up is that the matter was decided by a valid family settlement. We have already stated the main elements of the settlement. They are to be seen in the vairous applications made at the time of mutation after the death of Basant Kuar On that occasion there can be no doubt that the parties, who were concerned in the inheritance, all acted in combination The applications made by Jagannath Singh, Gokul Singh and Shamsher Singh are practically identical and must have been drafted together. Moreover they were all filed on the same date, namely, 20th January 1921, as was the application of Pohkar Kuar admitting their claim and withdrawing her own All these documents are on the record beginning with the application of Mt. Pohkar Kuar on p. 109 and ending with the Assistant Collector's orders on pp. 132-133. It is also a matter worthy of notice that Mt Menda Kuar also was induced to agree to this mutation Thus all the members of the family, who had any interest in the property, agreed not only that mutation should be made in favour of the reversioners Sitla Bakhsh Singh, Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh, but that the property should be divided into equal halves between Sitla Bakhsh Singh on the one side and Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh on the other It is true that we have no record of a written agreement, no panchayet appears to have been called and there were no outside witnesses. But Shamsher Singh himself states that on the death of Basant Kuar mutation was effected with respect to the property of Narpat Singh under a compromise between the parties, and although his statement was challenged at length in cross-examination we do not find that he was shaken in any way and in our opinion his statement may be taken in corroboration of the documentary evidence to which we have already referred. It is also not without significance that when the property of Jaswant Singh came to be settled after the death of Pohkar Kuar, when Sitla Bakhsh Singh was already dead, the sons of Sitla Bakhsh Singh were given by compromise one-half just as their father had received one-half after the death of Basant Kuar.

It is not necessary that a family settlement should be embodied in a formal registered document. It is sufficient that members of the family should agree among themselves to make a settlement and give effect to such agreement A Single Judge of this Court in Tej Bahadur Khan v. Nakho Khan (1) went so far as to find that it was not even necessary for all members of the family to be parties to a family arrangement in order to make it valid and binding, and in his judgment he quoted Kokla v Piari Lal (2) and Gandharp Singh v. Nirmal Singh (3), in his support. Again in a very recent case decided by a Bench, of which one of us was a member—Mahabir v Dwarka (4)—it was held that the essence of a family arrangement lies in an adjustment of conflicting claims bona fide made and recognized on both sides with the object of putting an end to a controversy It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that there was no controversy here as between Sitla Bakhsh Singh on the one side and Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh on the other, but a controversy may be something less than an active contest. It is enough if a settlement seeks to lay down once for all a position which will avoid possible litigation in the future. There was here a possible ground of litigation. Indeed the question then settled between the parties is in litigation now, and the mere fact that at that time the parties agreed among themselves that they would not dispute each other's claims in respect to this property is sufficient in our opinion to establish the fact that a valid and binding family settlement took place among them.

We find therefore in the first place that Sitla Bakhsh Singh was not insane in the sense that he was a mad man debarred by Hindu law from inheritance, and in the second place we find that all members of the family on the death of Basant Kuar entered into a family arrangement of a binding character by which the property of Narpat Singh was divided among the reversioners in two portions, one portion going to Sitla Bakhsh Singh and other to Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh. This being so, the share of Sitla Bakhsh Singh devolved upon his sons and the sale-deed executed by the heirs of Gokul Singh and Jagannath Singh in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the share of Sitla Bakhsh Singh is of no effect, and the plaintiff's suit in regard to this portion of the property has been rightly dismissed.

As to the property which formerly belonged to Jaswant Singh we need say very little. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant after briefly stating the facts admitted that in his opinion he had no sufficient ground for challenging the finding of the lower Court with respect to this property. We find that in that case there was a definite and formal family settlement and furthermore the plaintiff's claim was vitiated by the doctrine of lis pendens. We find therefore that the plaintiff's claim as to this portion of the property also has been rightly dismissed.

A cross-objection has been filed by the defendant-respondent 9 on question of costs. He points out that pleader's fee has been taxed in the lower Court on a valuation of Rs 6,600 whereas the lower Court held definitely that the value of the property for purposes of taxation was Rs. 29,000. This objection has not been contested before us and we accept it. The fees in this Court and in the Court below will be calculated on the valuation of Rs. 29,000 instead of the valuation of Rs 6,600

A second cross-objection has been filed on behalf of respondents 1 to 3 but this has not been pressed. As to the third cross-objection, which has been filed on behalf of respondent 11, we have only to say that there is now no contest between this respondent and the appellant. He won his suit in the lower Court and he has no status here to obtain a decision by this Court on a side issue which is not before us in appeal. We therefore dismiss this appeal with costs and allow the cross-objection made by defendant-respondent 9 as to the calculation of costs and dismiss the other two cross-objections. There is no order as to costs on the cross-objections.

Execution of Decree Appeal No 15 of 1928, Decided on 24th August 1928, against the order of Sub-Judge, Gonda, D/- 18th February 1928

Civil P. C., S. 47 — Application by decree-holder sub-mortgagee to execution Court for withdrawal of mortgage money in redemption suit is an application for execution and order passed thereon is appealable.

A mortgaged with possession land in favour of B & C. B subsequently sub-mortgaged his half share in the mortgagee rights to X. X obtained a decree for sale of the half share in the mortgagee rights of B and the decree was made absolute. Prior to this decree being made absolute M, successor-in-title to A, obtained a decree for redemption against the heirs of the original mortgagees B & C. X was not impleaded in the suit for redemption. After M deposited the decretal amount in Court for redemption of the mortgaged property, X applied for withdrawal of half share of the same but the application was rejected with direction that X should bring a declaratory suit, which he eventually brought but which failed on the ground that it was not maintainable in law. X again applied to the execution Court praying that his name be substituted in the redemption suit as defendant and that the amount due to B on his half share in the mortgage money be paid to him. The Sub-Judge allowed the application holding that though it could not be maintained under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C., the sub-mortgagee was entitled to receive the money under S. 134, T. P. Act. On an appeal against this order:

Held. that the application by the sub-mortgagee to the execution Court, praying for withdrawal of money deposited by the mortgagor in the redemption suit against the mortgagee, could be treated as an application for execution of his original decree and that the order passed thereon was appealable. Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of execution proceedings. The facts of the case are complicated and we should like to state them in detail.

On 31st October 1901 one Autar Gir mortgaged with possession 94 bighas 12 biswas of land situate in village Gaurgumari, district Gonda in favour of Abdul Jabbar and Yar Ali Khan. On 4th July 1908 Abdul Jabbar sub-mortgaged his half share in the mortgagee rights under the aforesaid mortgage to Gaya and Bandhu, the ancestors of the respondents, for Rs. 1,000 On 6th May 1920 Gaya and Sindhu, the brother and legal representative of Bandhu the original mortgagee, obtained a decree for sale of the half share in the mortgagee rights possessed by Abdul Jabbar. On 25th February 1921 the decree was made absolute Prior to the decree being made absolute one Sheo Saran Gir, successor-in-title to Autar Gir, obtained a decree for redemption of the mortgage of 1901, against the heirs of the original mortgagees. The sub-mortgagees were not, however, impleaded as defendants in that suit A final decree for sale was passed in the redemption suit on 28th April 1925. It appears that on 6th May 1925 a sum of Rs. 13,840-9 0 was deposited by the decree-holder Sheo Saran Gir for redemption of the mortgaged property. On 9th May 1925 the present respondents applied that the half share in the mortgage money belonging to Abdul Jabbar be paid to them as they were his representatives having obtained a decree on the basis of a mortgage executed by him. On 12th December 1925 the application was dismissed by the execution Court with a direction that the respondents should bring a declaratory suit in order to establish their title. The respondents instituted a declaratory suit but it was dismissed on 27th May 1927 on the ground that no such declaratory suit was maintainable in law. On 30th August 1927 the respondents again applied to the execution Court praying that their names may be substitued in the redemption suit as defendants under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C. and that the amount of money due to Abdul Jabbar on account of his half share in the mortgage money should be paid to them since they were entitled lo the extent of Rs. 5,163-12-7.

The Subordinate Judge has allowed this application. He has held that though the application made by the respondents could not be maintained under O. 22, R 10, Civil P C yet they were entitled to receive the money under S. 134, T. P. Act, (Act IV of 1882) This order was passed by the Subordinate Judge on 18th February 1928. It is against this order that this appeal has been lodged.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies. We are not, however, inclined to entertain this objection on the ground which will appear from our judgment which will follow later, and from which it will appear that we are going to treat the present application filed by the respondents on the 30th August 1927 as an application for execution and in that view of the case the order in question would be one passed between a decree-holder and judgment-debtor on the excution side We now proceed to give our reasons why we consider that the application for withdrawal of the money presented by the respondents to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on the 30th August 1927, can well be treated as an application for execution.

We have examined the execution record and it appears to us that after the respondents obtained their decree absolute on 25th February 1921 they applied for execution on 15th February 1922. The application, it appears from the file, was for bringing on the record the heirs of Abdul Jabbar who had died in the meanwhile The second application for execution was filed on 19th January 1925, amply well within limitation. It appears that that application was, on grounds which it is not necessary to state here, dismissed on 12th December 1925 The right of the respondents to execute their decree as will appear from the dates given above will be available to them till the expiry of three years reckoned from 19th January 1925. Their present application for withdrawal of the money is dated 30th August 1927 In order to do justice to the parties in this case we are inclined to treat this application as an application for execution of their original decree dated 25th February 1921 We will state the reasons which have induced us to take this view. It would be clear from the facts given by us above that the mortgaged property which consisted of mortgagee rights has now taken the shape of actual cash deposited in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on 6th May 1925 The decree-holders respondents cannot now sell those mortgagee rights because they have now been substituted by the cash money. Instead of selling these rights they can now sell the money which was deposited by the successor of the original mortgagor in order to redeem the mortgaged property. It is evident that the money in deposit in the Court cannot be sold and an application for withdrawal of that money can be treated virtually as an application for sale of that very money. We take this view in order that the decree-holders respondents may be in a position to treat this application dated 30th August 1927 which is an application for withdrawal of the money as virtually an application for execution of the decree

It was urged on behalf of the appellants that this was not the view taken by the decree-holders themselves of the application filed by them in the Court below. We are fully aware of the fact that this is so We have only allowed the decree-holdere to take this position here in order that we may be able to do justice in the case and that the appellants may not be able to deprive the decree-holders of their just rights

The dates given above will show that the application dated 30th August 1927 is amply well within limitation. It was urged that there was no proof on the record that the decree-holders respondents filed an application for execution on 15th February 1922. We are not, however, willing to entertain this objection. We have looked into the record ourselves and it appears to us to be clear from the report of the ahlmad that there was a previous execution case and it was on the report of the ahlmad that there was a previous execution case and it was on the report of the ahlmad that this date was substitued by the decree-holder in his application for execution of the decree presented on 19th January 1925, the date previously entered in that application having been found to be a wrong one. We have therefore fully satisfied ourselves that there is no question of present application dated 30th August 1927 being considered in any way time barred.

We might state here that in the view which we have taken of the application dated 30th August 1927 it is not necessary for us that we should decide the question as to whether the application filed by the decree-holders respondents can be treated or not as a good application under S 134, T. P. Act (Act IV of 1882). It is unnecessary for us to do so and we therefore leave the point undecided.

We therefore confirm the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge but in view of the fact that the decree-holders did not present this view of the case before the learned Subordinate Judge, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs regarding this application both here and in the Court below

Judgment. — This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated 23rd August 1928, modifying the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of the same place, dated 8th May 1928.

The facts of the case are as follows: Under a deed of 23rd December 1920, the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest transferred certain lands, proprietary and under-proprietary, in favour of the defendant. Having regard to the events which have happened, the defendant was to hold the transferred property for her life in lieu of maintenance The transferee, that is the defendant, was to bear the liability of payment of a sum of Rs 164-15-6 and a further sum of Rs 10 annually to the transferrer or his successor-in-interest, that is the plaintiff. The deed of transfer describes the former amount as "malguzari sarkari" (Government revenue) and the latter as "lagan matahti" (under-proprietary rent) The claim out of which this appeal arises, was laid for the recovery of the sums of money just now mentioned for the years 1328 to 1334 fasli. The claim was resisted on various grounds but we are concerned with only one of such grounds and that is as to whether any portion of the claim in suit is barred by time. The Court of first instance answered the question in the negative but on appeal by the defendant the learned District Judge of Rae Bareli has held that three years' rule of limitation applied to the case and that consequently the claim for the years 1328, 1329 and 1330 fasli was barred by limitation.

Another question, which seems to have been discussed in the Courts below, was as to whether the plaintiff's claim was cognizible by the civil Court or by the Court of revenue. The Court of first instance expressed the opinion that it was cognizable by the former Court The view of the learned District Judge on this question does not appear to us to be quite clear. Be that as it may, it was not argued before us that the suit was not cognizable by the civil Court. The abstract question of the conflict of jurisdiction is of no consequence because in either case the appeal from the judgment of the Court of first instance would lie to the District Judge but it may be of importance as affecting the decision on the point of limitation According to S. 129, Oudh Rent Act 1886, all suits under that Act, except as otherwise provided therein, shall be instituted within one year from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. It was, however, not disputed before us that the limitation for the suit out of which this appeal arises, is to be found in the provisions of the Limitation Act, 1908. The argument on behalf of the plaintiff is that Art. 116 and not exclusively Art. 110, Lim. Act, which presumably is the article under which the lower appellate Court has held the present suit to fall, is applicable, and in support of the argument reliance is placed upon the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Tricomdas Coverji v Gopinath Jiu (1). If this argument is accepted the decree of the Court of first instance must be restored.

Article 116 is as follows:

"For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered : six years, when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases."

The deed of transfer, to which reference has already been made and on the terms of which the title to the claim in question rests, is a "writing registered." The argument advanced by Mr. Ali Zaheer on behalf of the respondent is that there is no "contract" in this case and in support of the argument the learned counsel relies on a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court, in the case of Apaji Bapuji v. Nilkantha Annaji (2), and upon a decision of the Court of appeal in England In re New Eberhardt Co. (3), referred to by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the above mentioned case.

As to the Privy Council case cited by Mr. Wasim, counsel for the plaintiff-appellant, Mr. Ali Zaheer distinguishes it on the ground that in that case the lease on which the suit was founded was effected by two registered documents: (1) a mokurari kabuliyat executed by the lessee and (2) a patta executed by the lessor and thus there was a complete contract in writing between the parties of that case while in the present case there is only a unilateral document evidencing a grant by the donor in favour of the donee and the acceptance of the grant by the latter is not shown by any writing but merely by conduct. We think that on the bare question as to whether the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee covers the case before us or not the argument of Mr Ali Zaheer is weighty but it appears to us that the interpretation placed on the language of Art. 116 by several High Courts in India turns the balance in favour of Mr. Wasim's argument and in the absence of a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee directly bearing on the arguments advanced by Mr. Ali Zaheer we think we should adopt the same interpretation. In the English case of New Eberhardt Co. (3), mentioned above the question decided by the Court of appeal was the interpretation of the words "contract duly made in writing" occurring in S 25, Company's Act of 1867 (30 and 31 Victoria, Chap. 131), which is as follows:

"Every share in any company shall be deemed and taken to have been issued and to be held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same shall have been otherwise determined by a contract duly made in writing, and filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies at or before the issue of such shares."

To bring into relief the view taken by the Court of appeal we propose to quote some portions from the judgments of Bowen, L J , and Fry, L. J. Bowen, L J., said:

"It is an offer duly made in writing,and only an offer, till it is accepted, and it was filed while it was an offer only. The offer being something short of the contract, it was not a complete contract when it was filed. It is true that it did turn afterwards into a contract when it was accepted, but it did not turn into a contract, I think, which was duly made in writing, because the offer only was made in writing, and it certainly did not turn into a contract which had been made in writing at the date when the document was filed, and it only became a contract long after the document was filed. It is obvious, therefore, that, unless we are to fritter away the section by putting a forced construction upon it, the section has not been complied with."

Fry, L. J., said:

". . . . the contract must be made in writing, by which I understand that both parties to the contract must signify their assent to the terms of it in writing, and that without going beyond the writing you can see the existence of the contract between the contracting parties. That is the ground on which it appears to me that we cannot convert this into a contract satisfying the language used by reason of the subsequent acceptance of its terms by some of the persons making the contract."

We now come to the cases decided in

(1) A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 182=44 Cal. 759=44 I. A. 65 (P.C.).
(2) [1901] 3 Bom. L. R. 667.

India. In Ambalavana Pandaram v. Vaguran (4), the claim was for the recovery of arrears of rent on a document which was signed by the tenant only. The Court held:

"In our opinion a contract which has in fact been registered is no less a contract in writing registered within the meaning of Art. 116 because it bears the signature of only one of the parties in the absence of any statutory provision requiring the signature of "both parties."

To the same effect is the decision in the cases of Kotappa v. Vellur Zamindar (5). These cases were accepted as laying down good law in Girish Chandra Das v Kunja Behari Malo (6), which was followed in Chaliphoo v. Banga Behari Sen (7). In the Bombay High Court the same view seems to have been taken by implication in the case of Ganapa Putta v. Hammad Saiba (8). As against the above cases the learned counsel for the respondent has placed before us the cases of Ram Narain v Kamta Singh (9) and Jaggi Lal v Sri Ram (10). Both these cases unquestionably support the argument of the learned counsel.

Having regard to the system of conveyancing prevailing in this country and particularly in the province of Oudh we are of opinion that the deed of transfer in question must be treated as evidencing a complete contract in writing between the transferrer and the transferee. It not only purports to make a transfer of immovable property mentioned therein on the part of the transferrer but it also contains the implied acceptance of the liability of the transferee to pay the annual rent to the transferrer. The acceptance though contained in a unilateral document is really and in essence the acceptance made by the transferee. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Second Appeal No. 433 of 1928, Decided on 23rd March 1929, against order of 1st Sub-Judge, Kheri, D/- 31st October 1928

(a) Pre-emption—Title acquired by purchaser after cause of action for pre-emption arose may be urged in defence in such suit.

Section 9 is applicable not only where there are persons equally entitled to buy a property and the property has been sold to a stranger, or to a person whose right to acquire it is inferior to that of the persons who are equally entitled to pre-empt. but is applicable also to cases where two or more persons are equally entitled to buy the property and one or more of them has or have acquired it: 13 *O. Ghulam Hasan—for Appellant.

Daya Kishen Seth—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a pre emption suit. Munne Khan (defendant 2) sold plot 384 ('63 in area) in patti Gobere Khan in Thok Hasan Khan in village Raipur in the District Kheri, to Muhammad Sher Khan (defendant 1) for Rs. 200 on 7th December 1926. There is an under-proprietary chak of mahal called chak Airi in village Raipur The said chak has a "thok" called "thok Hasan Khan" which is sub-divided into three pattis, namely (1) patti Amir Khan; (2) patti Gobere Khan and (3) patti Newaz Khan. Lal Bahadur Khan pre-emptor (plaintiff) is a cosharer of patti Newaz Khan. Munne Khan vendor (defendant 2) is a cosharer of patti Gobere Khan. Thus the pre-emptor and the vendor are cosharers of "thok Hasan Khan," in Chak Airi, in village Raipur. Muhammad Sher Khan vendee (defendant 1) is the superior proprietor of village Raipur. On 1st December 1927, Muhammad Sher Khan (defendant 1) purchased 1·35 acres of under-proprietary area in patti Amir Khan from one Mt Zia Bibi: see Ex. A-1. Thus he also became a cosharer of thok Hasan Khan in chak Airi in village Raipur. Lal Bahadur Khan brought the present suit to enforce his right of pre-emption on 7th December 1927. Thus the suit was brought six days after Muhammad Sher Khan had purchased the under-proprietary area mentioned above from Zia Bibi.

The claim was resisted by the defendants on various grounds. Defendant 1 Muhammad Sher Khan, who is the principal defendant in this case, set up under-preprietary rights on the strength of the sale-deed dated 1st December 1927 (Ex A-1). This is the plea with which we are concerned in this appeal This plea was rejected by the lower Courts and the result was that the plaintiff's claim was decreed with costs. Muhammad Sher Khan (defendant 1) has now come to this Court in second appeal The appellant's learned counsel has confined his arguments to one point only He contends that defendant 1 may use as a defence the title which he (defendant 1) acquired after his purchase but before the suit for pre-emption was brought against him I think this contention is well founded and must prevail. It is well settled that a purchaser may use a title acquired by him subsequently to the origin of the cause of action as a defence against a pre-emption suit instituted after acquisition of the said title: see Tahawar Khan v. Madho Ram (1) referred to in Amir Hasan v Mt. Sardar Begam (2); Sheo Charan Singh v Bhikai (3), Durga Singh v Gayga Singh (4) and Lalta Prasad v Raghubar Singh (5); see also Onkar Singh v Bhagwan Das (6) and Ram Hit Singh v. Narain Rai (7) I should like to note that defendant 1's rights under Ex A-1 have become perfect and are now unassailable. Thus the vendor and the pre-emptor have become persons equally entitled to purchase the property in dispute before the case is finally disposed of.

The last clause of S. 9, Oudh Laws Act (Act 18 of 1876) is applicable not only where there are persons equally entitled to buy a property and the property has been sold to a stranger or to a person whose right to acquire it is inferior to that of the persons who are equally entitled to pre-empt, but is applicable also to cases where two or more persons are equally entitled to buy the property and one or more of them has or have acquired it: see Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jivan Lal (8). Now lots must be cast under S. 9, Oudh Laws Act, in order to determine which of them (vendor and pre-emptor) shall exercise the right to buy the property in dispute Hence I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its original number in the register and to dispose of it according to law. The question as to who is entitled to the property should be decided by drawing lots. Costs will abide the result.

Second Appeal No. 226 of 1928, Decided on 18th October 1928, against decree of First Sub Judge, Kheri, D/- 14th May 1928.

(a) Landlord and Tenant — Abadi — Non-tenant residents do not make village a non-agricultural village.

A village in which such persons as silvers smiths, Jogis, Julahas and Telis reside besides the tenants does not cease to be an agricultural village for that reason. [P 315 C 1]

(b) Landlord and Tenant— Tenant ceasing to be tenant but allowed to remain in house—Tenant gifting the house—Transfer by tenant is not permitted—Transferee acquires no right and can be ejected as trespasser by landlord.

According to the general custom prevalent in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh a person, agriculturist or agricultural tenant, who is allowed by a zemindar to build a house for his occupation in the abadi, obtains, if there is no special contract to the contrary, a mere right to use that house for himself and his family so long as he maintains the house, that is, prevents it falling down, and so long as he does not abandon the house by leaving the village. As such occupier of a house in the abadi occupying under the zemindari he has, unless he has obtained by special grant from the zemindar, no interest which he can sell by a private sale or which can be sold in execution of a decree against him, except his interest in the timber, roofing and wood work of the house. [P 315 C 2]

Where a tenant who had ceased to be one but was allowed to continue in the occupation of a house in the village makes a gift of the house with the site, the zemindar owner is entitled to recover possession of the site, the right of ownership embracing within it the right of possession. The transfer is illegal and invalid as against the landlord as it is tantamount to a complete abandonment on the part of the donor of whatever interest he had either in the house or in the occupation of it, in favour of the donee. 20 All. 248; *A. Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated 14th May 1928, affirming a decree of the Munsif, Kheri, dated 22nd November 1927. The dispute in this case relates to a house in the abadi of village Raipur in the District of Kheri. The plaintiff is the taluqdar of Raipur. The defendants are his ryots. Defendant 1 Kunwar, who is potter by caste, has transferred the house in suit to defendant 2 Gokaran Prasad, by a shankalapnama (deed of gift) dated 4th February 1926. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff for possession of the house. The claim was resisted by the defendants on various grounds. The defence was accepted by the lower Courts and the result was that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs The plaintiff, Muhammad Sher Khan has come to this Court in second appeal.

I think this appeal should be allowed. I am not prepared to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that Raipur is not an agricultural village though silversmiths, Jogis, Julahas and Telis also reside in the village. It cannot be said that a village in which such persons reside beside the tenants is not an agricultural village. It is admitted in this case that Kunwar was formerly a tenant. Though he ceased to be a tenant some years ago the taluqdar allowed him to occupy the house However, the taluqdar brought the present suit when Kunwar transferred the house to defendant 2 by the shankalapnama in question. It was for the defendants to show that the transfer in question was valid as against the taluqdar, but they have failed to do so. The transfer in question amounts to abandonment and I see no reason why the landlord should not be held entitled to possession of the house in suit.

According to the general custom prevalent in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh a person, agriculturist or agricultural tenant, who is allowed by a zemindar to build a house for his occupation in the abadi, obtains, if there is no special contract to the contrary, a mere right to use that house for himself and his family so long as he maintains the house that is, prevents it falling down, and so long as he does not abandon the house by leaving the village. As such occupier of a house in the abadi occupying under the zemindari he has, unless he has obtained by special grant from the zemindar, no interest which he can sell by a private sale or which can be sold in execution of a decree against him, except his interest in the timber, roofing and wood-work of the house. A tenant in the occupation of a house in the village has no right to sell the house with the site and the zemindar owner is entitled to recover possession of the site, the right of ownership embracing within it the right of possession. Such transfer is forbidden by the village custom and the transferee acquires no right under that transfer. His possession is that of a trespasser and the owner of the land is entitled to eject him: see Sri Girdhariji Maharaj v. Chote Lal (1); Azmat-un-nissa v. Ganesh Parshad (2). and Mathura v. Udey Bhan Singh (3). In my opinion the transfer in question is illegal and invalid as against the taluqdar and it is tantamount to a complete abandonment on the part of Kunwar defendant 1 of whatever interest he had either in the house or in the occupation of it, in favour of the donee, defendant 2 The transfer being illegal, the taluqdar is entitled to recover possession of the house. Hence I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Courts give the plaintiff a decree for possession of the house in suit against the defendants. The plain-

Second Appeal No 413 of 1928, Decided on 23rd April 1929, against decree of Second Addl Dist. Judge, Lucknow.

(a) Civil P C., S. 100—Question of fact.

Question whether purchaser had notice of a charge on the property purchased is one of fact and binding on High Court in second appeal. [P 317 C 1]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, Ss. 39 and 40—Decree-holder-purchaser at Court sale, cannot avoid specific charge created by judgment-debtor on property purchased, on the ground of his being bona fide purchaser without notice.

Sections 39 and 40 deal with personal rights in cases where such rights do not arise out of a specific charge on immovable property. But where such a charge is created either by decree or by contract it follows by implication that it would bind the immovable property on which it rests even in the hands of a transferee for consideration and without notice. [P 318 C 1]

Hence a decree-holder purchasing property of his judgment debtor at an auction sale cannot avoid a specific charge created by the debtor on the property purchased on the ground of his being a bona fide purchaser without notice : Cases discussed. [P 319 C 2]

Ghulam Hasan—for Appellant.

Bisheshar Nath—for Respondent 2.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise respectively out of two suits disposed of by one judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Unao, dated 30th July 1927, confirmed by one judgment of the Second Additional District Judge of Lucknow at Unao, dated 18th August 1928. One suit (No. 6 of 1927) was brought by the plaintiffs-appellants Chaudhri Fateh Ali, Chaudhri Sitwat Ali and Chaudhri Muhammad Sultan and by the Deputy Commissioner of Hardoi as Manager of the Court of Wards, Kakrali estate, who is now respondent 4, against one Gobardhan Prasad and two other persons. The relief prayed for was a declaration to the effect that the two annas' zamindari share situate in village Adaura, District Unao, which had been purchased by the defendant-respondent, Gobardhan Prasad, in execution of his money decree against one Chaudhri Ishrat Ali was subject to a charge of Rs. 250 per annum on account of certain religious expenses laid by the award of the Deputy Commissioner of Hardoi, dated 30th June 1918. This award was made a rule of the Court and a decree was passed thereon on 22nd October 1918 A claim for Rs 730 for the said expenses which were due and had not been paid was also made in the suit.

The other suit (No. 109 of 1926) was brought by two ladies, Mt. Razia Begam and Mt. Shafiqunnisa, both daughters of one Chaudhri Nasrat Ali of Sandila, for a declaration that the said two annas share of the village Adaura, which had been purchased by Gobardhan Prasad, as already stated, was liable to a charge of Rs 360 annually in favour of the plaintiffs on account of their maintenance under the award dated 17th June 1921 delivered by one Khan Bahadur Amjad Ali of Hardoi since deceased. This award was also made a rule of Court and a decree passed on the basis thereof on 23rd June 1921 The plaintiffs also claimed a sum of Rs 692-11 ; Rs. 540 on account of arrears of maintenance and Rs 102-2 as interest on the said amount The case of the plaintiffs of both the suits, therefore, is that the liability for these sums of money is a charge upon the 2 annas share of village Adaura and that they were entitled to recover them by sale of the said share.

The main defence of Gobardhan Prasad is that these items were not charged upon the property and even if they were, the plaintiffs could not claim any relief against him because he had no notice of these charges and was a bona fide transferee for value The main questions for trial in the suits were whether the items in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed relief in the two suits were charged upon the two annas share of village Adaura purchased by the defendant, Gobardhan Prasad, and whether he had actual or constructive notice of those charges prior to his purchase ; and further if the former question is answered in the affirmative and the latter in the negative is the share released of the charge in the hands of the defendant ?

The learned Subordinate Judge of Unao held that the two items in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed relief were no doubt charged upon the aforesaid 2 annas share but the defendant had no notice of these charges at the time of his purchase and consequently the share in his hands was not liable to satisfy the charge. In this view of the case he dismissed both the suits. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Lucknow at Unao has upheld the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge and has, therefore, dismissed both the appeals. We have two second appeals before us. Appeal No. 411 of 1928 is in suit No. 6 of 1927 and Appeal No. 413 of 1928 is in suit No 109 of 1926 The questions which arise for decision before us are the same as arose in the Courts below.

Both the Courts below have found that the defendant is not proved to have had actual notice of these charges prior to the date of his purchase. We have been led through the evidence on the record in proof of the said notice and after going through it we have come to the conclusion that the finding arrived at by the lower appellate Court on this point cannot be disturbed. It is a finding of fact binding on this Court in second appeal and it has not been shown to be in any way vitiated by any error of law or procedure. We, therefore, confirm the finding and hold that the defendant had no actual notice of these charges at the time of his auction purchase. The concurrent finding of the Courts below that the liability in question amounted to a charge was not seriously disputed by the defendant before us and indeed on the construction of the two awards the finding is undoubtedly correct.

The last point, namely, whether the said share in the hands of the defendant is liable to satisfy the charges in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiffs in the two suits, is a difficult point We took time to consider our judgment and we now proceed to give it. The question of rights of transferees for valuable consideration will be found to be discussed in books of English Law under the subject of " Equity." Ashburner in Principles of Equity, Chap. 4 (edition 1902) says :

" Where relief in equity is sought in respect of a proprietary right, ... ..... the right follows the property into whatever hands it passes, and is only lost where the person in possession of the property can shelter himself as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice ..... It has long been settled that a judgment-creditor ..... is to be treated as a volunteer under the judgment-debtor."

The same question is dealt with in Halsbury's Laws of England (Vol. 13), S. 8, para. 87, p. 78. Para. 87 runs as follows :

" But the plea of purchase for value without notice still avails against a plaintiff who is not seeking to establish a claim to an equitable estate or interest but merely to enforce an equity, such as an equity to set aside a conveyance. Ordinarily an assignee takes subject to all equities to which the assignor was subject , and this is the case where the assignee is a volunteer, and also where he is a purchaser for value if he has notice of the circumstances which raise the equity. But if he is a purchaser for value without notice, the equity cannot be asserted against him.....judgment or execution creditors take only what was vested in the debtor, hence they do not rank as purchasers, but take subject to prior equities. A vendor's lien appears to be not a mere equity, but an equitable estate, and it avails against the purchaser and persons claiming under him, whether as volunteers or for value, other than a subsequent purchaser who takes the legal estate without notice ; but the vendor may be postponed by his conduct."

In Madell v. Thomas & Co. (1) Key, L. J., observed as follows .

" Nothing is clearer than that on general principles.....an execution creditor would be bound by it just as much as the.....execution debtor himself.....An execution creditor is in privity with the execution debtor. He takes under the execution debtor not like a purchaser for valuable consideration, and it has been decided over and over again that he only takes what was vested in the execution debtor. Where property is subject to any rights by which it would be bound in the hands of the ....execution debtor nothing can be more clear as a general proposition than that it would be subject to such rights as against the execution creditor."

Under the English law, therefore, the execution creditor buys subject to the liabilities created by the judgment-debtor prior to the sale. This being so the question of notice is wholly immaterial. The principle of English law stated above does not appear to us to be founded on any technical rule or any peculiarity of that law. To us it appears that it rests on grounds of public convenience which are of universal application and should be followed by us as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience, unless we find that its application is excluded by any rule of law of this country. So far as the statutory law is concerned we find no provision by the force of which a decree-holder purchasing property of his judgment-debtor at an auction sale can avoid a specific charge created by the debtor on the property purchased on the ground of his being a bona fide purchaser without notice.

In the course of the arguments Ss. 39 and 40, T. P. Act, 1882, were referred to. Textually those sections have no application to the present case. They both deal with personal rights in cases where such rights do not arise out of a specific charge on immovable property. But where such a charge is created it would seem to follow by implication that it would bind the immovable property on which it rests even in the hands of a transferee for consideration and without notice. In a case decided by Richards, J., and reported in Maina v. Bachchi (2), it was held that S. 39, T. P Act, had no application to a case where a suit had been previously brought for recovery of maintenance out of certain property and a decree had been passed incorporating therein a charge upon a particular property.

In a case decided by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court (Ghosh and Rampini, JJ.) and reported in Kuloda Prosad Chatterjee v. Jageshar Koer (3), the same view was taken. It was held that S. 39, T. P. Act, did not protect a transferee for consideration when the immovable property transferred had already been declared by a decree of Court subject to a charge of maintenance. In Bhoje Mahadev Parab v. Ganga Bai (4), the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court (Bachelor and Shah, JJ.) endorsed this proposition as will appear from the judgment of Bachelor, J. on p. 628, where the learned Judge remarked as follows :

"I am also of opinion under the authority of Kuloda Prasad Chatterjee v. Jageshar Koer (3), that the plaintiff's purchase was subject to the charge in favour of defendant 1 irrespective of the question whether the plaintiff had or had not notice of that charge."

In Krishna Pattar v. Ramasami Pattar (5), the learned Judges of the Madras High Court (Tyabji and Spencer, JJ) took the same opinion as will appear from the following passage, which is to be found on p. 56 :

"Had the decree been passed, and had the claim of the transferee arisen after the decree, it is clear that the transferee would have taken subject to the charge."

The case reported in Kuloda Prosad Chatterjee v Jageshar Koer (3), was quoted with approval.

In Kallapa Ramappa v. Balwant Daso (6), the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court (Sir Norman Macleod, Kt. C. J., and Mr. Justice Crump) took the view that in a case where the charge was created by a decree, the full proprietary rights in regard to the property transferred, which was ordinarily in the possession of the judgment-debtor, were reduced from full ownership to a limited ownership, and that if the ownership of the judgment-debtor was thus reduced the execution creditor could not acquire more than what was possessed by the judgment-debtor himself.

In Srinivasa Raghava Aiyangar v. K R. Raganatha Aiyangar (7), the learned Judges of the Madras High Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ) held that where there was a charge on immovable property to secure payment of a sum of money a purchaser of the immovable property although without notice of the charge, took it only subject to the charge. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar observed as follows :

"As regards S. 40 Act 4 of 1882, an obligor who executes a bond creating a charge on specific immovable property does, in my opinion, transfer an interest herein and the obligee is entitled to an interest in the property and not merely to the benefit of an obligation annexed to the obligor's ownership of immovable property within the meaning of S. 40, Act 4 of 1882. The obligation, contemplated in that section is a personal obligation correlative to a personal right in the obligee such as a right to obtain a mortgage-deed or a sale-deed (which deed it is that transfers the interest contracted to be transferred). The subsequent purchaser from a man who has already created a valid charge is as much bound by it as the creator himself on the same principle that the subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration from a simple mortgagor is bound by the mortgage, the question of actual notice to him being immaterial."

the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court (Daniels and Neave, JJ.) held that the position of a charge-holder under the Transfer of Property Act is stronger than that of a person holding a merely equitable charge under English law, and though there might be cases in which a mere equitable claim would not be enforced against bona fide transferees for value without notice, yet it was much too broad a proposition to state that in all cases where by act of parties or by operation of law immovable property of one person was made security for payment of money to another and the transaction did not amount to a mortgage, the security would not be enforced against such transferee.

On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed upon a decision of ours in Hasan Baqar v. Sheo Narain Singh (9). The question for decision in that case was whether the lien which the vendor had under S. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, as against the property sold for the whole or any portion of the purchase money could be enforced against a subsequent transferee for value and without notice of the said lien. It was held by us that this lien was only an equitable lien and could not therefore be enforced against a subsequent transferee for value and without notice.

Reliance was also placed on behalf of the respondents on two cases of the Calcutta High Court, Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (10) and Akhoy Kumar Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (11); one case of the Allahabad High Court, Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (12) and one case of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, Lala Parbhu Dayal v Babban Lal (13). In Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (10) the question for decision was whether an instrument, by which the payment of money is secured on land must be taken to create an interest in specific immovable property. Their Lordships on the interpretation of that document held that an instrument by which payment of money was secured on land, might be treated to create a charge but in order to create an interest in specific immovable property there must be a clear indication to that effect in the deed.

In Akhoy Kumar Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (11) the question was whether a purchaser of a certain property at an auction sale could escape the liability of certain dues payable to the Municipal Board and it was held that the purchaser could not be considered to be a bona fide transferee for value since if he had made inquiries he would have ascertained that the municipal rates had not been paid and were in arrears. In Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (12) the question for decision was one of vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money. In Lala Parbhu Dayal v. Babban Lal (13) Mr. Lindsay, J. C. held on the interpretation of a particular will that although a charge had been created upon the property in respect of a certain maintenance, yet it did not amount to an interest in specific immovable property.

It will thus appear that there is a consensus of opinion in all the High Courts in this country that where the right is charged on a specific immovable property either by decree or by contract, the subsequent transferee though for valuable consideration and without notic takes it subject to that charge. We are therefore of opinion that the decree of the Court dated 23rd June 1921 passed on the award of 7th June 1921 in the one suit and the decree of the Court dated 22nd October 1918 passed on the award of 30th June 1918 in the other suit entitle the plaintiffs of the two suits to enforce their claims against the two annas share of the village of Adaura in the district of Unao now held by the defendant, Gobardhan Prasad The result is that we allow both these appeals, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the reliefs prayed for in the two suits with a direction that the amount of the two decrees shall be paid by the defendant, Gobardhan Prasad, to the plaintiffs of the two suits respectively within three months of today. In the event of default the two annas' share of the village of Adaura shall be sold and the proceeds of the sale shall be utilized for the purpose of satisfying the two decrees. The defendant, Gobardhan Prasad, shall also pay

Second Appeal No 302 of 1923, Decided on 8th November 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, D/- 17th May 1928.

Specific Relief Act, S. 41—Mortgage void ab initio—Heirs of mortgagor must return benefit obtained.

The heirs of a mortgagor cannot recover property mortgaged by a deed which is void ab initio without restoring to the mortgagee the benefit received : 11 O. C. 1, Ref. ; A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 270, Dist. ; 33 All. 779, Rel. on. [P 320 C 2]

H D Chandra—for Appellant.

Ali Zaheer and S. N. Srivastava—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises a single question of law, namely, whether the heirs of a mortgagor can recover property mortgaged by a deed which is void ab initio without restoring to the mortgagee the benefit received. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the plaintiffs and the lower appellate Court has found that they must pay the amount of the original mortgage before they can obtain possession. There is no authority of this Court or of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh bearing directly upon this case though there are certain observations in the case of Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (1) which support the view taken by the lower appellate Court. The case of Dasrath v. Sandala (2) is of a different nature. It is a case in which the mortgagee finding that his mortgage was void sued in a Court of Small Causes for a return of the consideration. In that case it was held that he was not entitled to recover the amount advanced on the void mortgage but only such sum as was due to him by separate transaction prior to the mortgage. The Allahabad High Court has laid down that a case of this kind is governed by the ordinary rule of equity, that he who seeks equity, must do equity, and that the mortgagor cannot come into Court and take back the property while he still retains the mortgage money in his own hands : see Bahoran Upadhya v. Uttamgir (3). This judgment followed several previous decisions of the same Court which were to the same effect and their Lordships particularly stated that the case of a mortgagee in similar circumstances seeking to recover possession from the mortgagor is different. The lower appellate Court considered that S. 65 of the Contract Act, applied to this case but this decision is not one which is free from controversy, as there is a conflict of authority as to whether S 65 refers to an agreement which is void ab initio in view of the fact that the words used are "when an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void" In my opinion it is not necessary to apply the principles of the Contract Act, as the case is sufficiently governed by the rule of equity to which I have referred I cannot differentiate between the case when the mortgagor himself seeks to recover the property mortgaged from that in which the sons of the mortgagor after his death come forward with a similar plea. In a case of this kind the sons who are the heirs of their father are in the same position as their father They have received the benefit from the mortgage through him and they cannot recover possession of the property without returning that benefit to the mortgagee. I accept the view taken by the lower appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

STUART, C. J., AND NANAVUTTY, J.

Hemnath and others—Plaintiff—Appellants.

v.

Wilayat Ahmad and others—Defendents—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 59 of 1928, Decided on 24th-April 1928, against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Sitapur, D/- 6th January 1928.

Court-fees Act, S. 7 (v)—Suit by mortgagee for possession of mortgage property is not governed by S. 7 (v) but fee ought to be calculated on principal money secured by mortgage according to principles of Court-Fees Act, S. 7 (ix).

A suit by a mortgagee to recover possession of the mortgaged property under the terms of the deed, cannot be governed by S. 7 (v) for it is not a suit for possession of land within the meaning of that section. But in such a suit Court-fee ought to be calculated according to the provisions of S. 7 (ix) i. e. on the principal money expressed to be secured according to the mortgage-deed. [P 321 C 1]

H D. Chandra—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The question that we have to decide is whether a plaintiff suing as a mortgagee for possession of mortgaged property should pay a Court-fee according to the money alleged to be due on the mortgage deed or according to five times the land revenue assessed on the mortgaged property. The Stamp Officer is of opinion that they should pay upon a valuation of the amount of money alleged to be due on the deed of mortgage. The Court-fees Act, 7 of 1870, does not expressly cover the case. The case does not fall in our opinion under the provisions of S. 7 Cl. (v), for it is not a suit for possession of land within the meaning of that section. That section is a section which covers suits for the proprietary possession of land Here the possession sought is not proprietary possession but possession as mortgagee in accordance with the alleged terms of a deed of mortgage and it will be open to the mortgagor to recover possession upon redemption of the mortgage. The case ought to be provided for under the provisions of S. 7 Cl. (ix)., but it is not explicitly provided for there. However the principles in that subsection are sufficient to indicate the rule to be applied. We find there that when a mortgagee brings a suit to foreclose a mortgage or where a person holding a mortgage by conditional sale applies to have the sale declared absolute the fee is to be calculated according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. This is a suit by a mortgagee to recover possession under the terms of the deed of mortgage and in our opinion the Court-fee ought to be according to the principal of mortgage. That valuation is not as great as the valuation stated by the office. It is nine thousand rupees. We direct that the amount of Court-fee be calculated on that valuation in both Courts. After the office has prepared a statement of the amount now due the appellants will be allowed till 16th July 1928 to make up the deficit. No further extension will be granted in any circumstances.

 (a) Evidence Act, S. 133—Evidence in corroboration of approver's evidence need not be direct.

It is not necessary for a conviction under S. 401 that the person convicted must have taken part in any one theft or robbery. Evidence showing the actual participation by an accused in any given theft or robbery is evidence both of his association with the gang and of his object in such association. Raza, J.—These four appeals arise out of a case under S. 401, I. P. C. Eight persons, namely, (1) Lale, (2) Sattar, (3) Surajdat Singh, (4) Sadho Saran, (5) Peru, (6) Bansraj Singh, (7) Ram Dat alias Khuddur and (8) Taluq Lal were sent up for trial. It was alleged that these eight men and Badal Chaubey (an absconder) and Badri Narain had formed a gang for committing thefts in the Balrampur town Badri Narain was made an approver. He is the uncle of Sadho Saran accused. Lale, Sattar, Surajdat Singh, Sadho Saran and Peru were convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Gonda on 20th November 1928. Lale, Sattar, Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran were sentenced to four years rigorous imprisonment each. Peru, who is an ex-convict, was sentenced to five years rigorous imprisonment. The remaining three persons, namely, Bansraj Singh, Ramdat alias Khuddur and Taluq Lal were acquitted. Lale and Sattar have appealed through their counsel. Surajdat Singh, Sadho Saran and Peru have submitted their appeal from jail.

Surajdat Singh is related to Bansraj Singh accused. Both of them were employed as sepoys in the Estate Army and had their quarters in the Estate Army Lines. Sadho Saran is the son of a notorious thief, named Kanhai who is said to have left this province for Nepal. Peru is a resident of a village adjoining Balrampur. He was in the service of a prostitute who was a resident of Balrampur. Lale and Sattar are brothers. They are Faqirs by caste and both of them reside in Balrampur. They were known as petty general dealers. Balrampur is an important town in the Gonda District. It is a municipal town some 28 miles away from Gonda. It has a police station with two outposts. There are some important buildings in the town including the palaces of the Maharaja of Balrampur, the premier taluqdar of Oudh.

The case for the prosecution was that the ten persons named above had formed a gang for committing thefts in the Balrampur town, by the end of February 1927 and committed thefts there for about a year up to the middle of January 1928. The evidence on the record shows that 28 thefts were committed during the period mentioned above and there were also 11 attempts to commit thefts and three conspiracies The learned trial Judge found that 28 thefts were committed by this gang and the gang was also responsible for 11 attempts to commit thefts. The alleged conspiracies were not proved. The approver had joined 10 thefts and six attempts to commit thefts. Thus he took part in 16 occurrences out of the occurrences for which the gang was responsible.

This case originated under the following circumstances :

Mt. Budhni alias Gurhan was the mistress of Lale accused. She was living in a house in Mohulla Baluha in Balrampur Lale had rented the house for her and so she was living there. The Balrampur police had information about some of the accused persons assembling at the houses of Mt. Budhni and Badri Narain approver, but was not aware of the existence of any gang of thieves. The police came to know of the existence of an organized gang for committing thefts, when Badri Narain approver was arrested on 21st January 1923. A burglary was committed in the shop of Sita Ram's brother Lachhman Prasad, cloth seller in the Balrampur bazar on the night of 13-14th January 1928 at about 2 a. m. A large quantity of cloth worth about Rs. 800 was stolen away. Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran were caught red-handed by the bazar people. They were found running away with a bundle of stolen cloth at a short distance from Lachhman Prasad's shop. They were brought to the shop and were then taken to the police station. The bundle of cloth which was recovered from them was found wrapped up in a jazim. It was also taken to the thana. Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran were put in the thana lock up. The station officer, Musahib

Ali Khan then proceeded to search Sadho Saran's house and directed his second officer to search the house of Surajdat Singh. A military blanket and two iron mpilements which might be used as implements of house-breaking, were recovered from Sadho Saran's house. It was found that Surajdat Singh had left the blanket there on the previous night. The house of Sadho Saran's uncle, Badri Narain, was also searched, but no suspicious property relating to the theft under investigation was found there. One Ali Jan (an accused of the Utraula gang case and subsequently made an approver in that case) happened to be in the thana lock-up that day. Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran and Ali Jan were kept in the same room of the lock-up and they passed the night there. This was skilfully arranged by the station officer Musahib Ali Khan. Next morning Ali Jan informed the station officer of the conversation which he had with Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran in the lock-up at night. The station officer then questioned Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran also about the talk which they had with Ali Jan. Thus he came to know that Badri Narain, Lale and Sattar also had taken part in the burglary which was committed in the shop of Lachhman Prasad. He found also a clue to the thefts committed at the shops of Lal Muhammad and Ram Bharosey. He came to know also that the bulk of the property which was stolen away from Lachhman Prasad's shop was taken to the house of Mt. Budhni alias Gurhan, the mistress of Lale accused.

The station officer then proceeded to search Mt Gurhan's house Her house was searched, but no suspicious articles were found there. The station officer made enquiries from her about the stolen property and thus came to know that she, Lale and Sattar had removed the property from her house to the house of her friend Mt. Najiban, wife of Munawwar Shah, brother of Gauhar Shah. Mt. Najiban's house was then searched and almost all the cloth stolen from Lachhman Prasad's shop was recovered from that house. Mt. Najiban and Mt. Gurhan both were arrested. Mt. Gurhan then unlocked her house and brought out some utensils which were also said to be stolen property. Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran were then sent to Gonda and their confessional statements were recorded by Mr. Jilani, Magistrate, Gonda. Lale and Sattar were arrested on 16th January 1928 in the evening. The station officer Musahib Ali Khan went to Gonda on 21st January 1928 and met Badri Narain (approver) near the Sabzimandi and arrested him, as he was wanted in connexion with the cases of Lachhman Prasad, Lal Muhammad and Ram Bharosey. Badri Narain admitted that he had taken part in the thefts in question and offered to give information about other cases of theft committed by him and his associates. He named Surajdat Singh, Sadho Saran, Lale, Sattar, Peru, Taluq Lal, Khuddur and Badal as his associates and offered to verify, on the spot, his statement about the places where he and his associates had committed thefts. He offered also to deliver some stolen property kept by him, to help in the arrest of his associates and to point out the places where thefts were attempted to be committed. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, after questioning Badri Narain about the facts mentioned in the reports submitted by the police, directed that he (Badri Narain) should go back into the police custody and appointed Dr. Tajammul Husain, an Honorary Magistrate of Balrampur, to go with Badri Narain to the places which were to be pointed out by him so that his statement might be verified. The places were pointed out by Badri Narain. Badri Narain's statement was recorded by the police. In this statement Badri Narain gave the details of the thefts which he had joined with the members of the gang. He also gave the names of the members of the gang joining each of the thefts. He gave some stolen articles to the police on 23rd January 1928. Peru, Taluq Lal and Khuddur were arrested on that date. Badri Narain gave some stolen property of different thefts on 25th January also. He informed the police on 26th January of some more thefts committed by his gang.

The station officer recorded further statement of Badri Narain on 29th January 1928 in the presence of the Circle Inspector, who was in charge of the investigation of this case. The date of the remand period expired on 30th January 1928. Badri Narain was sent to Gonda on that date. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mr. Jilani, recorded the statement of Badri Narain in the District Jail, Gonda, on 1st February 1928 after keeping him in the jail for two days. Bansraj Singh was then arrested on the information given by Badri Narain. This case was then registered at the thana on the report of the Circle Inspector, on 22nd February 1928. The accused was then sent up for trial. Thus this case came into existence.

Badri Narain, approver, is a Thather by caste. His elder brother was the notorious thief, Kanhai. His statement shows that thieves and men of bad character, including all the accused persons, except Bansraj, Sadho Saran and Badal, used to visit his brother Kanhai at their ancestral house in 1926. Badri Narain took another house on rent behind his ancestral house. When Kanhai was sent to jail in 1926, the accused persons named above did not come to the approver's house for about six months. Then they began to visit him just as they used to visit his brother Kanhai and asked him re join them in committing thefts in place of Kanhai. The approver agreed and eight men, namely, Lale, Sattar, Taluq Lal, Khuddur, Peru, Surajdat Singh, Badal and the approver himself formed a gang to commit thefts in Balrampur. Surajdat Singh and Lale were to find out places where thefts were to be committed. This gang committed the first theft ot the shop of Mathura, son of Domai, on 23rd March 1927. Bansraj and Sadho Saran also joined the gang four or five days after that theft. The approver gives a detailed account of all the thefts which were committed by him and the members of his gang. His evidence shows that the members of the gang had confidence in Lale and that generally the latter used to keep the stolen property in the house in which he was living with his mistress Mt. Gurhan. The stolen property was generally disposed of there. His evidence shows also that the members of the gang used to meet in batches mostly at the house of Mt. Gurhan for the purpose of consultation and planning out thefts. Sometimes they used to assemble for that purpose at the house or shop of Sadho Saran and also at the house occupied by the approver.

There is sufficient evidence on the record to show that the approver participated in the commission of the following thefts:

1. Thefts of the silver Chhattar at the Statue Hall.
2. Theft at the shop of Bachchu son of Nirhu Teli.
3. Theft at the house of Bachchu Halwai.
4. Theft at the shop of Bachcha Ram Teli.
5. Theft at the shop of Ram Bharosey Thather.
6. Theft at the shop of Lal Muhammad.
7. Theft at the shop of Lachhman Prasad.
8. Theft at the shop of Bhagwan Das Barai.

9 & 10. Thefts at Madhuri Saran's shop.

The approver participated also in the attempt to commit the following thefts:

1. Attempt to commit theft at the shop of Baijnath.
2. Attempt to commit theft at the shop of Chunni Lal.
3. Attempt to commit theft at the shop of Nikkamal Gaya Prasad.
4. Attempt to commit burglary at the shop of Hanuman Dass.
5. Attempt to commit theft at the shop of Hasan Ahmad
6. Attempt to commit theft at the private treasury of the Maharani Sahiba in Raj Mahal.

The statement of the approver about his joining these thefts and attempts to commit thefts is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence on the record. Ali Jan, P. W. 88, gives evidence about the conversation which Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran had with him in the lock up at Balrampur police station on the date of their arrest in the case of the theft at the shop of Lachhman Prasad. The confessions made by Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran before the Magistrate on 16th January 1928 (Exs. 101 and 102) are also on the record. They had named several members of the gang in their confessions. This evidence also corroborates the approver's statement about the gang to a certain extent.

The police had made searches and arrests in consequence of the confessions made by Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran. The station officer searched the house of Mt. Gurhan, the mistress of Lale accused, but found no suspicious articles there. In consequence of the information received from her he went to the house of Mt. Najiban, the friend of Mt. Gurhan. Mt. Gurhan herself took the station officer to the house of Mt. Najiban. Mt. Najiban's house was searched and almost all the stolen property of Lachhman Prasad's shop and also some articles relating to the theft committed at Lal Muhammad's shop, were recovered from her house. Mt. Gurhan then herself handed over some utensils including a gagra to the station officer. The gagra was subsequently identified as one of the utensils stolen away from the shop of Ram Bharosey Thather. Lale, Sattar, Surajdat Singh, Sadho Saran and Mt. Gurhan were sent up for trial in Lachhman Prasad's case. Lale, Sattar, Surajdat Singh and Sadho Saran were charged with and convicted of an offence under S. 457, I. P. C. Mt. Gurhan was charged with and convicted of an offence under S. 414, I. P. C. These persons appealed and the result was that the appellate Court upheld the convictions of Surajdat Singh, Lale, Sadho Saran and Mt. Gurhan, but acquitted Sattar. Badri Narain was examined as an approver in that case also. Mt. Najiban was not eventually prosecuted in that case but was examined as a witness for the prosecution. She has been examined as a witness in this case also. Her evidence shows that the cloth stolen from Lachhman Prasad's shop was brought to her house by Mt. Gurhan, Lale and Sattar. Mt. Gurhan had asked her to keep the bundles of cloth in her house as she (Mt. Gurhan) had to go to Gonda with a relation on that occasion.

Mt. Gurhan's evidence shows that Mt. Gurhan, Lale and Sattar had brought a number of bundles of cotton yarn also to her house on another occasion. Mt. Gurhan had asked Mt. Najiban to keep them saying that her own house was not safe. Those bundles were removed from Najiban's house after one or two days. She had brought certain other articles to Najiban's house on certain other occasions also. It appears that Mt. Najiban and Mt. Gurhan were friends and the latter had confidence in the former. Mt. Najiban's evidence shows that she did not know that the articles which were brought to her house from Mt. Gurhan's house were stolen property. The bundles of cloth which related to the theft committed at the shop of Lachhman Prasad were brought to her house by Mt. Gurhan, Lale and Sattar the next day after the theft early in the morning. Mt. Najiban's evidence on this point is fully corroborated by the evidence of Gauhar Shah (P. W. 97).

A silver chhattar was stolen away from the Statue Hall at Balrampur on 17th May 1927. The approver's evidence shows that this theft was also committed by his gang. He and some members of the gang melted the silver of the chhattar and took it for sale to Jasgar, P. W. 15 Idu, at first, expressed his willingness to purchase the silver, but ultimately refused to purchase it Idu's evidence shows that Surajdat Singh, Lale, Badri Narain, Peru, Sattar, Sadho Saran and others had gone to his house to sell the silver on that occasion. His evidence on this point is corroborated by the evidence of Bakridi, P. W. 26. Having regard to the nature and the bulk of the property which was stolen away from the shops of Mathura, son of Domai, Maduri Saran, Ram Bharosey Thather, Lal Muhammad and Lachhman Prasad and from the Statue Hall of the Balrampur estate, I think the learned trial Judge was perfectly right in coming to the conclusion that four or five men, at least, must have joined in committing these thefts.

It is also in evidence that since the arrest of the accused in this case there have been practically no thefts in the town

We have also sufficient evidence of association in this case. Specific association of various accused is satisfactorily proved regarding six thefts at least, namely, at Bachchu Teli's shop, at the shop of Hanuman Dass Marwari, at the house of Bachchu Halwai and at the shops of Ram Bharosey, Lal Muhammad and Lachhman Prasad. Some 52 witnesses give evidence about general association also and the learned trial Judge has relied on the evidence of some 27 witnesses. He did not think it safe to rely on the evidence of the remaining 25 witnesses.

After examining the evidence produced in this case, I am not prepared to disagree with the finding of the learned trial Judge that there was really a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing thefts and that the evidence given by the approver is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence on record. The learned Judge has tried the case with great care and intelligence. He has gone into the evidence pains-takingly and intelligently. He has tested the witnesses strictly (in some instances, too strictly). He has applied his mind carefully to the principles of law also in trying this case. I should like to note that the evidence in corroboration of the approver's evidence need not be direct evidence showing that the accused have committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of their connexion with the crime. As pointed out in the case of Ram Prasad v. Emperor (1) the evidence of accomplices is always admissible and is always relevant, but under a very old practice of the Courts in England such evidence is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny and is not usually accepted against any individual person unless it is corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. The practice in India is the same as the practice in England. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime ; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

The well-known rule criminal law that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars, which is formulated in S. 114. Ill. (b), Evidence Act, is not absolute as will be evident from S. 114 (" as to Ill. (b) ") and S. 133, Evidence Act, but it is only in exceptional cases that the corroboration can be dispensed with. It was held in the case of Khilawan v. Emperor (2) that in a case where a man is tried on a charge of belonging to a gang of dacoits under S. 400 I. P. C., the evidence against a particular accused to prove that he took part in a certain dacoity when it is shown that he has already been tried on the charge of having committed that particular dacoity and has been acquitted, cannot be admitted, it being not a question of habit or association. Once a man has been acquitted on a charge of that nature, it is not open in a subsequent criminal prosecution to prove that he actually committed that offence. The case is of course different where the prosecution is endeavouring to establish an offence with which he was not charged in that case. For example, where a man has been tried and acquitted on a charge of being in dishonest possession of property stolen in a dacoity known or having reason to believe that that property was stolen in a dacoity, it is open to the Crown to prove that he actually took part in the dacoity for the latter was not an offence of which he was acquitted. Even if he has been acquitted on a charge of dacoity it is open to the Crown to prove that the day before the dacoity he was seen in the neighbourhood of the dacoity. In criminal proceedings evidence that an accused person has a bad character is inadmissible unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, in which case it becomes admissible. But S. 54, Evidence Act, does not apply to cases in which the bad character of any person is itself a fact in issue If the evidence of bad character is introduced in order to establish a relevant fact, which cannot be proved aliunde the evidence of bad character is admissible. Where the evidence of previous conviction or the evidence that a man has been bound over under the preventive sections can be considered only as evidence of character it must be excluded, but where such evidence is admissible aliunde, it should not be excluded. Here the provisions of S 14, Act 1 of 1872, have application. Such evidence is admissible, not as evidence of character but as evidence to prove habit and association.

The case before me is a case under S 401, I. P. C , but the principle of decision must be the same as in a case under S 400, I. P. C. In my opinion it is not necessary for a conviction under S 401, I. P. C, that the person convicted must have taken part in any one theft or robbery. Evidence showing the actual participation by an accused in any given theft or robbery is evidence both of his association with the gang and of his object in such association Evidence which though not believed for the purpose of a conviction under S. 379 or S 392, I P. C., may yet be relied upon for the purpose of conviction under S. 401, I P. C. A conviction under S. 401, I. P. C., cannot be considered bad in law merely because the evidence on the record would also have justified a conviction of a specific offence under S. 379 or 392, I. P C., I think the learned trial Judge has not ignored these principles of law in trying this case.

The learned counsel who has appeared for Lale and Sattar has contended that the approver's evidence is not reliable at all, as his confession was not recorded on the day on which he was arrested It is true that the confession was recorded several days after the approver's arrest but there are sufficient reasons for this delay. In the first place the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had directed in the remand order dated 21st January 1928 that the approver should be produced before him along with other accused on 30th January 1928. In the second place it was thought proper and safe that the statement should be verified by inspecting the places where thefts had been committed or attempted to be committed in Balrampur and the police also expected to receive some further information from him about the various thefts for which the gang was responsible. The learned counsel has contended also that it is strange that the police came to know of the gang only when the approver was arrested on 21st January 1928. I am not prepared to accept this contention also. The evidence on record shows that the thefts which were committed by the members of this gang were generally petty thefts The police of course did not know before the arrest of the approver that there was an organized gang for committing thefts. The mere fact that the police did not care to know before the arrest of the approver that there was an organized gang for committing thefts does not establish that there was never a gang as contended by the appellants' learned counsel. (Judgment then considered the evidence in the case of each appellant separately and concluded in each case that the appellant was rightly convicted and punished and that his appeal should be dismissed.)

STUART, C. J., AND MISRA, J.

Fateh Bahadur Singh—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Nagendra Bahadur Singh—Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No 153 of 1927, Decided on 23rd August 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, D/- 21st September 1927.

Lease—Construction—Superior proprietor letting village from year to year and generation after generation—Lessees applying for decree for under-proprietary rights—Settlement Officer ordering that "their claim was dismissed but that they had secured their end"—Lessees not recorded as under-proprietors and not exercising such rights—Lessees had obtained no transferable right under the lease.

The taluqdar, having the superior proprietary rights, executed in favour of K and D a lease of a village which granted them the whole village from year to year and generation after generation (naslan bad naslan). K and D applied to the settlement Court for a decree that they were entitled to under proprietary rights and produced the lease before the Settlement Officer who ordered that "their claim was dismissed but that they had secured their end". They were never recorded as under-proprietors nor did they exercise their rights as such until the transfer in dispute was made.

Held: that no under-proprietary rights i. e. to say hereditary and transferable rights in the village were granted to K and D. The order of the Settlement Officer could only mean that such rights were refused to them. They had therefore no rights of transfer in the village: 14 I. A. 7 and A. I. R 1927 Oudh 74, Dist. [P 328 C 2]

H. Husain—for Appellant

Ganpat Sahai—for respondent

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The decision in the appeal will be solely on the question as to whether under-proprietary rights were conferred on Khanjan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh in the years 1863-1864. It is established beyond doubt and it is admitted on both sides, that Mata Badal Singh and Dhunkal Singh applied in the year 1863 for under-proprietary rights in the Settlement Court in the Partabgarh District. On 15th December 1863 the taluqdar who had the superior proprietary rights executed in their favour a lease Ex 3 It would appear from the subsequent evidence that before he executed this lease he had executed a previous lease for which Ex 3 was substituted. Ex 3 is called a perpetual lease. It grants the whole of the village of Bhagesara from year to year and naslan bad naslan (generation after generation). The lessees agreed to pay a fixed rent to the taluqdar. This lease was produced before Mr. King, Settlement Officer, and he then passed an order on 15th January 1864 (Ex. A-3 ) as follows :

"To-day the plaintiffs produced the lease from which it appears that they have been granted a perpetual lease by the taluqdar generation after generation of the village on an annual jama of Rs. 401 with the exception of fifteen bighas jagir land, etc, Hanwant Lal, general agent of the taluqdar, has made an admission to the same effect. It is, therefore, ordered that in view of the application filed by the plaintiffs the case having been dismissed be consigned to the records. The Sadar Munsarim is to be directed to make entries in the survey papers accordingly."

On the same date Mr. King, Settlement Officer wrote Ex. A-5 .

"Parties present. The deed is reproduced with additions which are intended to secure the benefit of the lease to the plaintiffs' heirs and ancestors" (presumably means successors) for ever. The plaintiffs have thus secured their end and I dismiss their claim to an under-proprietorship by a decree that the plaintiffs' claim is rejected."

This is really all the evidence which we have in the matter. Khanjan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh were never at any time recorded as under-proprietors and there is no evidence to show that at any time did they or their successors attempt to exercise any rights as under-proprietors until their successors made the transfers which are challenged now. The learned trial Judge has found that there are no under-proprietary rights. The learned counsel for the appellant, who contests this finding, lays stress upon a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Thakur Harihar Bakhsh v. Thakur Uman Parshad (1), where their Lordships at p. 16 (of 14 I. A.) have stated that they are unable to find any instance in which a gift with the words naslan bad naslan attached has been held to confer anything less than the absolute ownership. But the transaction here is not a gift, but a perpetual lease. Perpetual leases in no case confer proprietary title, and in many instances they have been found not to confer under-proprietary title. Reliance has also been placed on a decision of a Bench of this Court in Sheo Bahadur Singh v. Bishunath Saran Singh (2), where the Chief Judge, who was one of the Judges composing of the Bench, said that he accepted the view that where a man is proved to have hereditary rights and there is nothing to show that they are non-transferable they must be presumed to be transferable This, however, is not a case in which there is nothing to show that the rights were not transferable for the judgment of the Settlement Court itself shows that the rights were non-transferable. The case is clear. Kanjan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh had applied at the settlement Court for a decree that they were entitled to under-proprietary rights that is to say to hereditary and transferable rights in the village of Bhagesara The taluqdar, the owner of the village, granted them a perpetual lease which gave them hereditary rights. The settlement Court then declared that their suit was dismissed but that they had secured their end This can only mean, in our opinion that their claim for transferable rights was refused. There is no question of presumption remaining as the presumption has been effectively rebutted We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs

Second Appeal No. 242 of 1928, Decided on 1st February 1929, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge. Gonda, D/- 2nd April 1928.

(a) Adverse possession — Talukdar is not required to prove actual user of jungle and waste land.

A taluqdar cannot be required to prove actual user of jungle and waste land and his possession is assumed until there is definite proof of ouster . 8 O. C. 177, Foll. [P 329 C 1, 2]

(b) Adverse possession—Every owner must be presumed to know boundary of his own land.

"Every owner must be presumed to know the boundary of his own land, and if he allows another person to cross that boundary and occupy an area of 25 acres, and plant thereon a number of trees, and forbid the owner's men to enter the land, and his possession extends for a period of over 12 years, a title will be obtained by adverse possession . 8 O. C. 177, Dist. [P 330 C 1]

Radha Krishna and Ali Zahcer—for Appellant.

Ghulam Hasan and Muhammad Ayub —for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises from a dispute between the owners of the two adjoining villages in the District of Bahraich. The plaintiff is the owner of the village Shamshatarhar and the defendant is the owner of the village Gondni Bisahi. It is now found that the land in suit forms a portion of the village of Shamshatarhar, but that it has been in the possession of the defendant, for a long period of years The question which we have to decide is whether the defendant has obtained a title by adverse possession or not. The lower appellate Court decided in favour of the defendant and the plaintiff has appealed.

In appeal he is prepared to concede that the defendant is entitled to the trees which he has planted in this land, but he bases his appeal on the decision of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh reported as Thakur Sheo Narain Singh v. Bodal Singh (1) where it was held that the mere planting of trees does not necessarily dispossess the owner of the land. That ruling however, is not altogether in favour of the present appellant. It goes on to say that "to dispossess the owner" the other party "must assert clearly that he claims the right to hold possession as owner or his conduct must be such as to amount to an assertion of an intention to exclude the actual owner."

It is true that both in the ruling which we have cited and in many subsequent rulings of the Oudh Courts it has been held that a taluqdar cannot be required to prove actual user of jungle and waste land and his possession is assumed until there is definite proof of ouster. In this case the lower appellate Court has considered the ruling to which we have referred in Thakur Sheo Narain Singh v. Bodal Singh (1). He has clearly held that in the present case there is further proof of adverse possession over and above the plantings of trees. As it was not clear from the judgment what this further proof was, we have read the evidence of the witnesses to whom the learned Judge has referred as supporting the defendant's case. The facts that we find to have been proved are as follows:

Years ago the boundary between these two villages was lost. For at least 26 years the defendant has used the land on the west side of the pathway which runs between the two villages During this period he has planted some four hundred shisam trees and five hundred clumps of bamboos. In fact he has created what is virtually a small forest. Thus it is not a case where a man has planted a few isolated trees. He has made regular systematical plantation. In addition to this there is the oral evidence of three persons who were at one time in the service of the plaintiff and whose evidence has not been discredited by any questions put to them in cross-examination. The first of these is witness 14 Zamirul Hasan, who was a munsarim of the plaintiff's estate in the years 1913-1914. He found at that time not only that the defendant was in possession of the land lying to the west of the path, but that he employed two persons as rakhwalas who forbade access to the land to the servant of the plaintiff. He even went so far as to forbid the witness himself from cutting some bamboo shoots in order to determine the boundary. The two other witnesses were a ziladar's moharrir and a sipahi who deposes to the preceding year when a dispute arose because the defendant had impounded the cattle of the plaintiff's tenants for grazing in this area. On that occasion the matter was referred to the Tahsildar who found that the area on the west of the path actually belonged to the defendant and refused to take any action against him These assertions of the defendant's title were made more than 12 years before the suit was brought in

(1) [1905] 8 O. C. 177.

April 1926 In our opinion such action on the part of the defendant's conduct amounts to "an assertion of an intention to exclude the actual owner" It is not open to the plaintiff to say that he did not know where his own boundary was and so to maintain that the possession of the defendant could not be adverse Every owner must be presumed to know the boundary of his own land, and if he allows another person to cross that boundary and occupy an area of at least 25 acres, possibly more, and plant thereon a number of trees, and forbid the owner's men to enter the land, and this possession extends for a period of over 12 years, we must hold that a title has been obtained by adverse possession. Thus in the present case we find that the lower appellate Court came to a correct decision and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeal No 8 of 1928, Decided on 25th September 1928, against order of Assistant Collector, First Class, Kheri, D/- 17th October 1927

U. P. Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), S. 111 —Objector's title admitted— Plea of previous partition does not raise question of proprietary title.

An assertion in an objection that there had been a previous private partition does not make the objection an objection involving a question of proprietary title where the title to the share of the objector is admitted 10 O. C. 204, Ref. [P 332 C 2]

Ram Bharose Lal and Ram Das—for Appellant.

J K. Tandon—for Respondents

Judgment —This is a defendant's appeal. The facts are as follows : Three members of the same family owned between them the whole of the village of Dilawalpur in the Kheri District and fourteen annas of the village of Saraiyan In the Kheri District. The remaining two annas in the Saraiyan village belonged to a distant relation called Gauri Shankar. In Dilawalpur Madho Ram had a share of eight annas which had been partitioned by a regular revenue partition and was designated as mahal Madho Ram The remainder of the village had been partitioned in the same manner and was designated as mahal Matapur. Mata Prasad held four annas in mahal Matapur and Durga Prasad held the remaining four annas. In Saraiyan, Madho Ram held ten annas, Mata Prasad held two annas, Durga Prasad held two annas and Gauri Shankar held two annas. Madho Ram had originally only eight annas and Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad had three annas each, but before 1898 Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad had each transferred one anna to Guman Singh. Guman Singh had transferred these shares to Madho Ram. Thus we have it that in 1898 Madho Ram had eight annas in Dilawalpur and ten annas in Saraiyan. On 8th April 1898, Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad transferred their shares in Saraiyan to Madho Ram Madho Ram in exchange transferred to them four annas and six pies in mahal Madho Ram in Dilawalpur. Subsequently Madho Ram acquired Gauri Shankar's two annas and became the owner of the whole of Saraiyan Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad subsequently transferred their shares of two annas and three pies each in mahal Madho Ram in Dilawalpur to certain persons who are parties to the suit. Madho Ram died and was succeeded by his son Bhagwati Prasad Nandu Lal, one of the transferees already mentioned, applied on 13th May 1927, to the revenue Court under the provisions of S. 107, Local Act 3 of 1901, for a partition of his share in accordance with the provisions of Chap. 7 of the Act. Other transferees subsequently claimed partition of their shares.

The proclamation required by S. 110 called on the other parties (including Bhagwati Prasad) to appear and state their objections on or before the 24th June 1927. Bhagwati Prasad appeared on that day and made an objection which he was permitted to formulate on 2nd July 1927. He formulated his objection on that date. This objection was in the main that no interference should be made with the arrangement arrived at in 1898 when his father had transferred four annas and six pies of his share in mahal Madho Ram, village Dilawalpur, to Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad.

The partition continued as provided by the provisions of the Chapter, the objection of Bhagwati Prasad being retained for decision by the Assistant Collector making the partition. On 17th October 1927, the Assistant Collector found that Bhagwati Prasad was the owner of a three annas six pies share in the mahal in question, but he found that he was not entitled to enforce any arrangement which had been made in 1898. The learned Assistant Collector, however, stated that Bhagwati Prasad should be first allotted the specific plots mentioned in the fard Ex. 7. Fard Ex. 7, contains the arrangements which were stated to have been made in 1898. At first sight it would appear that in these circumstances Bhagwati Prasad, who is the appellant before us, has no grievance and nothing to appeal against as the order could almost be read as complying exactly with his request. But his learned counsel has pointed out that it is possible that if the provisions of S. 117 be complied with exactly, deductions may be made from the lands held by tenants whose rents he is at present collecting alone.

This appeal has been filed to the Chief Court on the allegations the Bhagwati Prasad made an objection raising a question of proprietary title which had not already been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, that the learned Assistant Collector himself inquired into the merits of the objection and decided it, and that therefore, an appeal lies direct to the Chief Court under the provisions of S. 112 of the Act.

The learned counsel on the other side has argued that no appeal lies to the Chief Court as the objection of Bhagwati Prasad did not raise a question of proprietary title. In order to consider the force of this argument of the learned counsel for the respondent we have to look closely at the words of the objection of Bhagwati Prasad. Bhagwati Prasad stated in this objection that he was a cosharer to the extent of three annas and six pies in the village. No one has denied that fact. He is a cosharer to the extent of three annas and six pies, and he has been recorded as a sharer of three annas and six pies He continued that a partition had already been made of that share, and that the partition stood entered in the Government papers and then added the plea that a partition could not be made a second time. His main plea was, therefore, that the share of which he was admittedly the proprietor had already been partitioned in such a manner as precluded its subsequent partition. He added at the end of the application that Nandu Lal could not be entitled to a partition of the plots held by him as he had been for more than twelve years in sole possession and occupation of that share separately in the capacity of absolute proprietor. It is somewhat difficult to understand what exactly he meant by the last portion of this objection. He can hardly be held to set up that his title to the three annas six pies share was based upon adverse possession, for his title to the three annas and six pies was based on something much better than adverse possession, and was not questioned. The effect of the objection, as we understand it, was that as the property had already been partitioned once it could not be partitioned again. Is this an objection involving a question of proprietary title? We should have had no difficulty in deciding this matter, had it not been that the question has become to a certain extent complicated by certain decisions of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court In the first of these decisions Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (1) in an application for partition before an Assistant Collector certain parties raised an objection that they were exclusively entitled to a portion of the land sought to be partitioned.

The Assistant Collector tried the question of title so raised under S. 113, Land Revenue Act—that section has not been materially altered now—and decided it in favour of the objectors. The applicants appealed to the Collector, who entertained the appeal. A subsequent appeal was taken both to the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue Before the partition proceedings were completed the unsuccessful objectors filed a suit in the civil Court praying for a declaration for a decree that the lands in question were their exclusive property. It was held that that suit was maintainable because it had been instituted before the completion of the partition proceedings. It may well be said that the decision in that case does not at first sight appear very material to the point before us, but we quote it as it was referred to in a subsequent decision of the Allahabad High Court In Muhammad Nasar Ullah Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (2) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that, when in a suit for partition of a revenue paying land one of the non-applicants alleged that under a private partition he was in possession of certain lands and claimed those lands for himself, and the Collector in appeal ordered those lands to be given to him, no question of proprietary title was thereby raised, and that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Collector The District Judge having considered that the decision in Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (1) afforded authority for the view that an appeal did lie to him, the Bench quoted that case as distinguishable. They quoted in support of their finding a decision in Tulshi Rai v. Gate Ram Rai (3). There it had been held that, where certain persons intervened in proceedings before a Court of Revenue for the imperfect partition of certain zamindari lands alleging an existing partition and taking exception to the method proposed for the division of the common lands, there was no question of proprietary title raised This decision was thus authority for the proposition that an assertion in an objection that there had been a previous private partition, did not make the objection an objection involving a question of proprietary title But we find that in a subsequent decision in Ram Narain v. Jagannath Prasad (4) a Bench arrived at a decision which appears to us inconsistent with the previous decision. No reference was made to the previous decision. At p 116 it is noted :

"Upon notice being issued to the recorded cosharers, the plaintiff Jagannath raised an objection to the effect that the village had already been privately partitioned, that a definite portion of it had been allotted to his share and that that portion could not be partitioned again. He thus raised a question of proprietary title."

Thus there is no clear authority in the Allahabad High Court upon the point. The opinions appear to be divided. We are not aware that this point has ever been directly raised before the Chief Court We find in the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Ram Autar v. Thakur Jagannath Baksh Singh (5) that the question was considered though not directly. Mr. Chamier at p 207 said :

"According to the finding of the lower appellate Court the parties agreed to recognize each other as the separate owners of the land allotted to them. It is clear enough that Government is not bound to take any notice of such a partition. But are the parties themselves bound by it in case one of them subsequently applied to the revenue Courts for a partition of the estate? I think not. The Land Revenue Act shows that a joint property must on partition be divided up according to the shares of the parties therein. In the present case I do not understand that the private partition was intended to alter the shares of the parties, it was merely an arrangement to prevent constant disputes about the profits. Such a partition holds good till a regular partition is effected but no longer."

This decision does not exactly touch the point before us. We have to consider without assistance from previous decisions what is the meaning of words "involving a question of proprietary title," in S. 111. We are quite clear as to Bhagwati Prasad's position. He owned a share of three annas and six pies. Nobody says he owned less He did not say he owned more. Nobody questions his title to that share. But his case was that the partition officer should not interfere with the allocation of land made between his father Mata Prasad and Durga Prasad in 1898. Does such an objection involve any question of proprietary title? We think not He went on to say, that the partition effected in 1898 was a final partition and good in law. It can be argued that it was not a final partition and good in law as it was not a partition under Chap. 7 which had become complete by confirmation of the Collector under the provisions of S. 131, Local Act 3 of 1901. In any circumstances this suggestion that this partition was good in law did not involve any question of proprietary title His plea that he should be permitted to retain certain land in his separate enjoyment also did not involve any question of proprietary title. In these circumstances we consider that the preliminary objec-

Second Rent Appeal No. 46 of 1928, Decided on 14th September 1928, against decree of Second Addl. Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 20th April 1928.

(a) Oudh Rent Act, S. 127 — Landlord knowing tenant to be dead giving receipts in deceased tenant's name and entering defendant's name only as person making actual payment—Landlord did not wish to treat defendant as tenant — Landlord and Tenant.

The fact, that the landlord after knowing that the original tenant was dead, passes receipts only in the deceased tenant's name, and enters the name of the defendant only in the column headed "name of person actually making payment," strongly shows that the landlord did not intend to treat the defendant as tenant and so landlord's suit to eject defendant is not barred on account of such receipts 7 C. W. N. 132, Rel. on . 1 Cal. 391 (P. C.), Dist. [P 333C 2]

(b) Oudh Rent Act, S. 127—Scope.

Where a landlord, erroneously believing defendant to be deceased tenant's heir sues him for ejectment under S. 62, and issues notice to him of ejectment, no weight can be attached to his erroneous admission that defendant was deceased tenant's heir in a suit for ejectment under S. 127. [P 334 C 1]

R. B. Lal—for Appellant.

Radha Krishna—for Respondents.

Judgment.— This is a second rent appeal by the defendant who has been unsuccessful in both the Courts below. The appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent and ejectment under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act. The facts are that one Sukhnandan was a tenant of certain lands belonging to the plaintiffs. He died a few years ago and was succeeded by his widow, Mt. Jasoda. Mt. Jasoda also died about two years before the institution of the present suit.

It appears that on Mt Jasoda's death the defendant entered into the possession of the holding The defence raised to the plaintiff's claim for arrears of rent and ejectment under S 127, Oudh Rent Act, was that the defendant-appellant had been recognized as a tenant by the landlord and the suit under S 127, was, therefore, not maintainable, Both the lower Courts have rejected this plea of the defendant.

The learned counsel for the defendant-appellant has relied before me in support of the alleged recognition of the defendant as a tenant by the plaintiff landlord, firstly, upon their receipts for rent paid by the defendant; secondly, upon the plaint dated 30th March 1926, in a suit brought under S. 62, Oudh Rent Act, and, thirdly, on a notice of ejectment issued in 1926. The argument is that the facts of the landlord having accepted rent from the defendant, of his having instituted a suit for ejectment against him under S 62, on the ground of his having sublet the holding and of his issuing a notice of ejectment against the defendant show thet he recognized the defendant as a tenant. As regards the payment of rent, it is admitted that two of the receipts relate to payment of rent for years preceding the death of Mt. Jasoda. As regards the third receipt it relates to rent for the year in which Mt Jasoda died. It is important to note that in all these receipts the name of Sukhnandan is entered in the column headed "Name of tenant" and the name of the defendant appears only in the column headed "Name of person actually making payment" It is not denied that the landlord knew of the fact of Sukhnandan being dead when these receipts were issued by him. In my opinion, the fact that the receipts were given in the name of Sukhhandan, the deceased tenant, strongly shows that the landlord did not intend to treat the defendant as a tenant. The case is parallel to the case of Rasamoy Purkait v. Srinath Moyra (1) in which it was held that where the old tenant's name occurred in rent receipts under the heading "tenant's name" and the name of the purchaser from the tenant occurred under a different heading as sarbrakar, the landlord by those receips did not mean to recognize the purchaser as a tenant. The learned counsel for the defendant-appellant relied upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ranee Sonet Koer v. Mirza Himmut

(1) [1903] 7 C. W. N. 132.

Bahadoor (2). The facts of that case are quite distinguishable from the present case. It must depend upon the circumstances under which the rent was accepted whether the acceptance should be construed as an admission of tenancy or not.

Next as regards the suit under S 62, Oudh Rent Act, and the notice of ejectment in 1926. The plaint in the suit for ejectment leaves no room for doubt that it was brought against the defendant under the impression that he was the heir of Sukhnandan. Evidently the notice of ejectment was also issued on the same basis. The suit and the notice both were subsequently withdrawn. No value can, therefore, be attached to any inference which might have been possible to draw from these proceedings if they had not been withdrawn. In any case the only inference which could possibly be drawn from these proceedings was an inference about the defendant being the heir of Sukhnandan. It has been found by both the Courts below and is not denied by the defendant that he is not the legal heir of Sukhnandan in respect of the tenancy in question. The admission, therefore, was clearly an erroneous one and under the circumstances no weight can be attached to it.

For the above reasons, I agree with the lower appellate Court that the defendant-appellant cannot be considered to have been admitted to the tenancy by the landlord and the suit against him under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, was properly maintainable. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 108 of 1928, Decided on 8th November 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Hardoi, D/- 22nd December 1927.

(a) Arbitration—Parties cannot be allowed to show that arbitrator's award was wrong on merits.

The arbitrators are judges of both the questions of fact and of law and the parties cannot be allowed to show subsequently that their decision was wrong on the merits. [P 335 C 2]

Where a holding is claimed by different heirs of a deceased occupancy tenant or where the occupancy tenure forms part of the property of a joint family or of co-tenants and a division takes place among such persons, it cannot be held that the transaction amounts to a transfer from one having a right in favour of one having no right at all: 33 All. 143, Foll.; 23 All. 383 (P.C.), Dist. [P 336 C 1]

A. P. Sen and Naimullah—for Appellants.

Ghulam Husain—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is an appeal in a declaratory suit, which was dismissed by the Munsif of Bilgram, but has been decreed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi The facts of the case are that one Chhutta Singh, resident of village Dabha, District Hardoi, was an occupancy tenant holding land measuring 8 bighas 5 biswas in occupancy tenure and a house and certain moveable property situate in that very village He died on 17th September 1925 After his death a dispute arose in respect of his property between the plaintiff-respondents, who alleged that they were his sons and the defendants-appellants, who alleged themselves to be his next heirs being his cousins. The appellants deny the legitimacy of the respondents. An application was made for mutation of names by both the parties in the revenue Court, which ordered mutation in favour of the appellants on 15th March 1926. Before the respondents could file an appeal the parties agreed to refer their whole dispute to the arbitration of two persons named Gulab Singh and Bakhtawar Singh both of Dabha. The agreement to refer their dispute to arbitration was executed on 22nd March 1926, (Ex. 2) and the arbitrators delivered their award (Ex. 3) on 24th March 1926. After the award both the parties applied to the revenue Court to the effect that their disputes had been settled by the said arbitrators and they accepted the award and prayed for mutation of names to be effected in accordance with the award. This application was filed on 7th April 1926 (Ex. 1). On 2nd May 1926, the revenue Court rejected the application on the ground that the award of the arbitrators amounted to a transfer of an occupancy tenure and was, therefore, invalid and could not be given effect to. The plaintiffs-respondents thereupon instituted the present suit in which the present appeal has arisen on 1st March 1926, asking the Court to declare their title in respect of the property given to them by the arbitrators under their award dated 24th March 1926.

The suit was contested by the defendants-appellants on the ground that the plaintiffs were not legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh and the award of the arbitrators was invalid on the ground that it operated as transfer of an occupancy tenure which was invalid in law. The learned Munsif of Bilgram who tried the suit accepted the defence and held that the plaintiffs were not legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh and the award was invalid since it operated as a transfer of an occupancy tenure. He, however, was of opinion that the award was valid in other respects. In result he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit by his decree dated 6th August 1927. The plaintiffs took the matter further in appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, who took a different view of the case. He has held that the award is good and operative and is binding upon the parties. In this view he allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs-respondents' suit by his decree dated 22nd December 1927. The defendants-appellants have now appealed to this Court and the main point which has been argued in second appeal before me is that the award of the arbitrators should be deemed as invalid and inoperative on the ground that it can only be treated as a transfer of an occupancy tenure in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents who have been held to be illegitimates sons of Chhutta Singh. The case has been argued at great length before me and I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and must be affirmed.

I now proceed to give my reasons for the same. It is clear from the facts stated above that the plaintiffs-respondents' claim to be the legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh and in that capacity put forward their claim to his occupancy holding in the revenue Court. The defendants-appellants denied their legitimacy and advanced their claim to the said holding on the ground that they were the next heirs of the deceased. The revenue Court accepted the objections filed by the defendants-appellants and allowed mutation in their favour. It is obvious that the finding of the revenue Court that the plaintiffs-respondents were not the legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh was not finding of a competent Court and could not be considered to be binding on the parties till the matter had been decided by civil Court. It is also clear that the plaintiffs-respondents wanted to appeal from that decision as would appear from the recitals of the agreement to refer the matter to arbitration.

It was in this stage that the matter had been referred to arbitration. The arbitrators decided to allot a major portion of the holding of Chhutta Singh to the plaintiffs-respondents and the remaining portion to the defendants-appellants who were his cousins. Although they did not state in their award that the plaintiffs-respondents are the legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh, yet it must be held that this was their implied finding otherwise they should not have allowed any portion of the land to the plaintiffs-respondents. The arbitrators were judges of both the questions of fact and of law and the parties cannot be allowed to show subsequently that their decision was wrong on the merits It is also clear from the facts that the award of the arbitrators was accepted by the parties as will appear from the application filed by both of them in the revenue Court on 7th April 1926 : vide Ex 1.

It, therefore, appears to me that the said award is binding upon the parties and in the face of it the defendants-appellants cannot be allowed to prove that the plaintiffs-respondents are not the legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh, and, therefore, not entitled to any portion of his property. The learned Munsif was, therefore, entirely wrong in taking up that question and in giving a finding thereon, contrary to one which was to be implied from the award of the arbitrators. For the purpose of this case the plaintiffs-respondents must, therefore, be held to be the legitimate sons of Chhutta Singh and as such entitled to the portion of the occupancy tenure allotted to them by the arbitrators under their award dated 24th March 1926, (Ex. 3).

As to the next point, namely, that the award is bad in law on the ground that it must be deemed to be a transfer of an occupancy tenure I have come to the conclusion that this contention is not sound. My finding on point 1 which relates to the legitimacy of the plaintiffs-respondents takes away entirely the force of the contention now urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants. Even if it were not so I am not prepared to hold that an occupancy tenure in Oudh, which is non-transferable under S. 5, Oudh Rent Act 22 of 1886, cannot be divided or partitioned amongst the members of the family of a deceased occupancy tenant or amongst several persons who may claim to be the heirs of such a tenant. A division of such a tenure cannot be treated as a transfer. A 'transfer' in law must be deemed to imply a transfer by a person entitled to that property in favour of a person having no title otherwise. Such a transaction relating to an occupancy tenure must, therefore, be deemed to be inoperative. Where, however, the holding is claimed by different heirs of a deceased occupancy tenant or where the occupancy tenure forms part of the property of a joint family or of co-tenants and a division takes place among such persons, it cannot be held that the transaction amounts to a transfer from one having a right in favour of one having no right at all. In such a case all the persons must be deemed to have a right in the holding and when the parties divide it among themselves their action must be considered to refer to the right possessed by each party to whom the land has been allotted on division or partition

I am supported in this view by a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Raghunath Kalwar v. Baladeen Kalwar (1). It was held in that case that where the parties were joint tenants of a certain occupancy holding and disputes arose between them which were referred to an arbitration and the arbitrators partitioned the tenure, it could not be said that the agreement and the partition effected by the arbitrators were invalid in law. It may be as pointed out in that case, that such a partition or division may not be binding upon the landlord unless made with his consent, but it cannot be said that it is not binding among the joint tenants themselves.

On behalf of the appellants reliance was placed upon a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Jafri Begam v Ali Raza (2) It was pointed out that their Lordships of the Privy Council held in that case on p 392 that if the arbitrator in his award laid down a course of devolution in respect of the property which was the subject-matter in dispute different from the ordinary principles of Mahomedan Law such a course must be held to be invalid My attention was drawn to the remark of their Lordships that the property which was divisible in law could not be made by an arbitrator indivisible for ever. I am fully bound by this decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, but I am of opinion that this case does not help the defendants-appellants. The award nowhere lays down anything which is contrary to law The division of an occupancy tenure between the two parties, both of whom claim it as heirs of the deceased, cannot be considered as shown by me above to be contrary to any principle of law. An occupancy tenure is certainly heritable though not transferable. I am, therefore, of opinion that this case can be no authority for holding that the award is invalid or inoperative. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 410 of 1928, Decided on 4th February 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Barabanki, D/- 28th August 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Adverse possession is mixed question of law and fact.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact and it is always open to the Court of second appeal to examine the facts established in the case and to determine for itself whether they are sufficient to establish in law the adverse possession which is claimed on the basis of those facts : A. I. R. 1917 P.C. 33, Rel. on. [P 338 C 2 P 339 C 1]

(b) Adverse possession—Cosharers—Possession of one is not adverse unless there is ouster—Denial of title is ouster.

If a property belongs to several cosharers and one cosharer is in possession of the entire property, his possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to other cosharers. He must be deemed to be in possession on behalf of the other cosharers and adverse possession cannot be founded on the basis of such exclusive possession, unless there has been an ouster of the other cosharers. The ouster takes place when the title of the other cosharers is denied : Cases referred. [P 339 C 2]

(c) Adverse possession — Cosharers— One cosharer mortgaging joint property exempting some plots—Exemption does not prove his exclusive title to them or ouster of other cosharers.

Where a cosharer while mortgaging joint property exempted certain plots therein, the fact of mere exemption of these plots would not indicate that he was in exclusive possession of these plots and therefore, had become exclusively entitled to them, and had power to mortgage them in entirety thus constituting an ouster of the other cosharers with respect to these plots. [P 339 C 2]

(d) Adverse possession—Cosharers—Mutation in the name of one without denial of title of others does not establish.

Mutation in the name of one cosharer cannot be any indication of adverse possession until it is shown that it was obtained after a clear declaration to the effect that the title of other cosharers was denied. [P 340 C 1]

(e) Cosharer—Right against trespasser—One cosharer can sue to eject trespasser from entire property—Suit does not establish ouster or denial of other cosharer's title.

One cosharer can maintain a suit for ejectment in respect of the entire property against a trespasser. The mere fact that a cosharer brings such a suit can therefore be no evidence that he denied the title of the other cosharers. It is a question arising out of his exclusive possession, but can be no evidence of a denial of the title of the other cosharers. The suit brought by one cosharer would in the eyes of law be considered for the benefit of the other cosharers and the latter would be entitled to take advantage of such proceedings. [P 340 C 1]

Judgment.—The question involved in this appeal is one relating to adverse possession. The facts of the case are rather complicated and will be found in detail in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Barabanki. Shortly stated they are as follows :

There is a village named Mamreznagar in the District of Barabanki which was at the time of the Regular Settlement divided principally into two pattis, one patti Afzal Khan consisting of 9 annas and 4 pies share and the other patti Mansab Khan consisting of 6 annas 8 pies share. We are only concerned in this case with patti Mansab Khan. The cosharers of patti Mansab Khan were :

| | A. | P. |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Mansab Khan himself ... | 4 | 11 |
| 2. Muhammad Ali and his two brothers ... | 1 | 5 |
| 3. Azima Bibi ... | 0 | 4 |
| | 6 | 8 |

On the 1st June Mansab Khan mortgaged his whole share consisting of 4 annas and 11 pies to one Muhammad Kasim, by a deed of conditional sale. He, however, exempted from the said mortgage certain plots of land, which were entered in the village papers at the time of the Regular Settlement as sir and khudkasht of the cosharers owing patti Mansab Khan. The numbers of the plots reserved were 332, 334, 344, 350 and 382. It appears that after this mortgage Mt. Azima Bibi died and her four pies share was inherited by Mansab Khan and he, therefore, became the owner of five annas three pies share.

On 17th July 1889, Mansab Khan mortgaged the whole of his share five annas three pies to one Fida Husain including the plots which had been exempted by him from the mortgage-deed in favour of Muhammad Kazim By a series of transactions the mortgagee rights of Fida Husain passed to Lala Purshottam Dass and Ram Prakash who constituted at the time of the assignment members of a joint family. The assignment in their favour is dated 26th May 1892. Muhammad Kazim brought the suit for foreclosure in respect of four annas eleven pies share on the basis of his mortgage-deed dated 1st June 1886. He impleaded Purshotam Das and Ram Prakash in his suit as puisne mortgagees. He obtained a preliminary decree on 26th December 1894, which was made absolute on 16th July 1895.

One Abdul Hafees, father of plaintiffs 1, 2 and 3 brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of four annas eleven pies share which had been foreclosed in favour of Muhammad Kazim. His suit was decreed on 29th August 1898. After the death of Abdul Hafees the aforesaid plaintiffs succeeded to the said share of four annas eleven pies which he had acquired by pre-emption. It may be stated that this foreclosure decree had no concern with the five plots of land mentioned above which had been exempted from the mortgage of 1896.

Parshotam Das and Ram Prakash then put the mortgage of the 17th July in suit and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure in respect of the entire share of five annas and three pies including the plots in dispute on 10th March 1893. This decree was made absolute on 21st December 1897.

It may be stated that Parshotam Dass and Ram Prakash who had been impleaded as defendants to the suit brought by Muhammad Kazim did not pay the money due under the decree as directed by it, and the property covered by the foreclosure decree became the absolute property of Muhammad Kazim, which is now, as stated above, the property of plaintiffs 1, 2 and 3. The result of the transaction was that the foreclosure decree obtained by Purshotam Dass and Ram Prakash in respect of the mortgage of 1889 remained operative only in respect of four pies share and the plots exempted under the mortgage of 1886.

The plaintiffs 1, 2 and 3 have now by a series of transactions acquired the proprietary interest in respect of two-thirds share out of the patti Muhammad Ali which consisted of one anna five pies share. Plaintiff 4 has acquired the remaining one third. Thus the plaintiffs are now the owners of patti Muhammad Ali.

The present suit has been brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration to the effect that the plots 332, 334, 344, 350 and 382 are not the exclusive property of Purshotam Das, but the plaintiffs have also a share them proportionate to their share of one anna five pies out of the entire share of six annas eight pies which was the original extent of patti Mansab Khan. Besides these plots the plaintiffs also claimed a declaration that they were entitled to a six annas four pies share in plot 380.

We might also state that there was a partition effected between the members of the joint family to which Purshotam Das and Ram Prakash belonged. As a result of that partition the property obtained by 17th July 1889, was allotted in equal shares to one Ram Behari who was a member of the family, and to Ram Prakash. Subsequently, by a deed dated 27th March 1905, Ram Behari transferred his half share to Ram Prakash. By deeds dated 13th April 1915 and 19th April 1915 Ram Prakash has sold the entire plots in dispute to defendants 3 to 7. Parshotam Das and Ram Prakash are defendants 1 and 2 in the case.

The suit was mainly contested by defendants 3 to 7, who now claim to be the owners of the entire plots Purshotam Das and Ram Prakash did not put in any defence. They contented themselves by saying that they had no claim now left in respect of these plots and had been wrongly impleaded.

The question, therefore, involved in this case is whether Purshotam Das and his cosharers and their transferees defendants 3 to 7 had perfected their title by adverse possession in respect of the plots in suit. Both the Courts below have decided the case against the plaintiffs on the ground that the title of the defendants in respect of these plots has become perfected by adverse possession

In appeal it is contended before me that the finding of the Courts below regarding adverse possession should not be accepted. On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the finding was one of fact and should not be allowed to be challenged in second appeal.

I am unable to accept that contention. I am of opinion that the question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact and it is always open to the Court of second appeal to examine the facts established in the case and to determine for itself whether they are sufficient to establish in law the adverse possession which is claimed on the basis of those facts. I am supported in this view by a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1). In that case the question involved was one of custom on which both the Courts in India had given a concurrent finding and it was urged before their Lordships that the point being one of fact it was not open for the appellant to raise it again before their Lordships. They, however, rejected this contention and held that the question of custom being one mixed of law and fact it was open to their Lordships to see whether the conclusion arrived at by the Courts in India could be legally sustained. I may state that there is no dispute regarding the facts in the present case. The only question is what is the conclusion to be derived from those facts.

The following facts have been relied upon by the Courts below to prove the adverse possession of the defendants-respondents.

1. Mortgage-deed of 1st June 1886, executed by Mansab Khan, in favour of Muhammad Kazim in which he exempted plots 332, 334, 344, 350 and 382

2. Foreclosure decree passed in favour of Muhammad Kazim on the basis of the said mortgage in 1894 and 1895.

3. Mutation in respect of the plots on the basis of civil Court decree obtained in 1901.

4. Suit brought in civil Court by Purshotam Das and his cosharers for possession of two out of the plots in dispute, namely, Nos. 344 and 388 against one Sahib Din.

5. Sale-deed dated 27th March 1905, executed by Ram Behari in favour of Ram Prakash.

6. Sale-deeds executed by Ram Prakash in favour of defendants 3 to 7 dated 13th April 1915 and 19th April 1915.

I will now examine each of these points in order to find out whether adverse possession can be considered to have been established in favour of the defendants-respondents. Before doing so, however, I must again point out a well-settled rule of law, which has been laid down in numerous cases both by their Lordships of the Privy Council as well as by this Court and the other High Court in India. The rule is that if a property belongs to several cosharers and one cosharer is in possession of the entire property, his possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to other cosharers. He must be deemed to be in possession on behalf of the other cosharers and adverse possession cannot be founded on the basis of such exclusive possession, unless there has been an ouster of the other cosharers The ouster takes place when the title of the other cosharers is denied. I may refer on this point to the following cases:

Corea v. Appuhamy (2); Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (3), Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das (4); Ahmad Raza Khan v. Ram Lal (5); Inderpal Singh v. Thakur Din Singh (6); Mahipal Singh v. Sarjoo Prasad (7); Mahadeo Prasad v. Ramphal (8) and Sheo Raj v. Ajudhia (9)

Taking points 1 and 2 together I must state that they do not amount to an ouster of the plaintiffs or their predecessors from the plots in suit. In the mortgage-deed dated 1st June 1886, Mansab Khan only mentioned the fact that he was exempting the plots mentioned above from the mortgage-deed. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that this exemption showed clearly that he was in exclusive possession of these plots and had denied the title of the other cosharers, in respect thereof. I am not inclined to accept this contention for the reason that the fact of mere exemption of these plots would not indicate that he was in exclusive possession of these plots and that, therefore, had become exclusively entitled to them, and had power to mortgage them in entirety. Even if he was in exclusive possession that fact would not make his possession adverse. It was admitted by the learned advocate for the respondents that no higher value can be attached to the foreclosure decree than the mortgage on which it was based. It was also admitted by him that if the mortgage did not show adverse possession, the foreclosure based thereon could show neither. I may further point out that the foreclosure decree did not cover these plots, nor was any mention made of them therein. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the respondents cannot be allowed to base their adverse possession on the basis of these two facts.

As to the fact of mutation in respect of these plots standing in favour of Purshotam Dass and his cosharers I fail to understand that such mutation can be any indication of adverse possession until it is shown that it was obtained after a clear declaration to the effect that the title of other cosharers was denied. No proof of such a declaration has been given by the respondents, and in the absence of such a proof the mere fact that these plots were entered in the name of one of the cosharers would not entitle him to contend that his possession was adverse. It has been held in Bharat Prasad v. Ganga Bakhsh (10) that mere entry of the name of one cosharer would not be proof of adverse possession.

As to the civil suit brought by Purshotam Das and his cosharer against Sahebdin I may observe that that fact also would not amount to an ouster of the other cosharers. It is a settled rule of law that one cosharer can maintain a suit for ejectment in respect of the entire property against a trespasser. The mere fact that a cosharer brings such a suit can, therefore, be no evidence that he denied the title of the other cosharers. It is a qustion arising out of his exclusive possession, but cannot be no evidence of a denial of the title of the other cosharers. The suit brought by one cosharer would in the eyes of law be considerod for the benefit of the other cosharers and the latter would be entitled to take advantage of such proceedings. I, therefore, fail to understand how the suit brought in the civil Court by Purshotam Das and his cosharers in respect of a portion of the property in suit can be considered to be evidence of adverse possession.

As to the sale-deed dated 27th March 1905, executed by Ram Behari in favour of Ram Prakash it is enough to state that the deed recited that the share together with all the rights appurtenant thereto was being transferred thereby. There is not the least indication in that deed that the title of other cosharers in respect of these plots was denied. As to the sale deed executed by Ram Prakash in favour of defendants 3 to 7 it is admitted by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants that they undoubtedly amount to an ouster of the plaintiffs. The argument advanced was, however, to the effect that the present suit had been brought on 23rd September 1926, which was within 12 years from the date when those sale-deeds were executed. Under these circumstatces the defendants-respondants cannot claim that title had been acquired by them in respect of the plots in suit, since their adverse possession for 12 years before the date of the suit had not been established.

My conclusion, therefore, is that none of the facts stated above, on which reliance was placed on behalf of the defendants-respondents can be considered to have established their adverse possession in regard to the plots in suit

Before finishing this judgment, I may point that it was urged on behalf of the defendants-respondents that the plot actually exempted was 380 and not 382, which is actually entered in the mortgage-deed of 1st June 1886. I think this contention is well-founded In the deed the area shown opposite No. 382 is 3 bighas 12 biswas. Turning to the khasra I find that the area indicated above is the area of plot 380 and not of plot 382. The khasra further shows that the area of plot 380 was actually exempted from the mortgage of 1886 and not the plot 382.

Since the result of my finding is that the plot 380 was actually exempted from the mortgage of the year 1886, it follows that the plaintiff's claim to this plot should be decreed to the extent of one anna five pies share therein as in the case of the plots 332, 334, 344 and 350. The plot 382 should be considered to have been covered by the mortgage of 1886 and the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to claim a share to the extent of six annas four pies in it.

The result is that this appeal is accepted and the decrees of the Courts below set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is decreed with costs in all the three Courts with this modification that they will be given a decree in plots 332, 334, 344, 350 and 380 to the extent of one anna five pies share and in plot 382 to the extent of six annas four pies share.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 39 of 1928, Decided on 17th January 1929, against order of Assistant Collector, First Class, Kheri, D/- 12th September 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., Ss. 10 and 11—Applicability.

Whilst S. 10 bars only a suit, S. 11 bars the trial of both the suit and of issue involved in that suit. 11 All. 148, Rel. on. [P 345 C 1,2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 10—For S. 10 to be applicable, entire subject-matter of two suits must be same—Where former suit relates to declaration of title with regard to certain properties and latter suit is for profits in regard to one of those properties S. 10 will not apply.

In order to attract the provisions of S. 10 it is not enough that the same issue should be involved in the two suits but it is also necessary that the entire subject-matter of the two suits should be the same. So where the former suit is a suit relating to the declaration of title in regard to certain properties and the latter is a suit for profits in regard to a portion of these properties S. 10 will have no application 24 *C. (c) Civil P. C., S. 10—Suit for profits which is solely cognizable by a revenue Court cannot be stayed by prior suit for declaration of title pending in civil Court.

In order to hold that S. 10 is applicable the two Courts must be Courts of concurrent jurisdiction, that is to say, each of those Courts must be in a position to try any one of the two suits and to grant the relief claimed in either of them. So a suit for profits which is solely cognizable by revenue Courts cannot be stayed on account of a prior suit for declaration of title which is pending in a civil Court: 114 P.R. 1919 and 12 N.L.R. 174, Foll. [P 346 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., S. 151—Court can stay suit under its inherent powers even where it does not come within the provision of Civil P. C., S. 10.

The inherent powers of the Court are not to be deemed to be limited or otherwise affected by the express provisions of the Code and so even where a suit cannot be stayed under the terms of S. 10, it can be so stayed by the Court if it is necessary to do so to do justice between the parties: 33 Cal. 927 and In S. 115 Application No. 44 of 1927, Foll. [P 346 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a revision against an order of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Lakhimpur, District Kheri, dated 12th September 1928. This order was one directing that Suit No. 1 of 1928 instituted in his Court by the plaintiffs applicants against the defendant-opposite party should be stayed till the decision of an appeal pending in the High Court at Lahore arising out of a suit brought by the defendant against the same plaintiffs in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Jullundur, Punjab.

The facts of the case are rather complicated and will have to be mentioned in detail. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree:

SARDAR GULAB SINGH

| Sardar Angad Singh, (dead). | Sardar Arjun Singh, (alive). | Sardar Rajeshwar Singh, (dead) | Sardar Dwarka Nath Singh, (dead) | Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh, (dead). |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | Sardar Sahdeo Singh, defendant. | Widow, Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar, plaintiff. | 1. Widow, Sardarni Channan Kuar, plaintiff, and 2. Widow, Sardarni Lajwanti Kuar. |

It would appear from the above pedigree that the father of the defendant, Sahdeo Singh, and the husbands of the plaintiffs-applicants, Sardarni Channan Kuer and Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar were all brothers, the sons of one Sardar Gulab Singh. Sardar Gulab Singh had two other sons, namely, Sardar Angad Singh and Sardar Arjun Singh. The former is dead in the influenza epidemic: Sardar Rajeshwar Singh, father of the defendant-opposite party, Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh, husband of Sardarni Channan Kuar plaintiff-applicant 1, and Sardar Dwarka

Nath Singh, husband of Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar plaintiff-applicant 2 died one after the other within a period of about a month. At this time Arjun Singh was admittedly living separately from his three deceased brothers and the remaining members of the family consisted of the defendant Sahdeo Singh, his father Sardar Rajeshwar Singh and his two uncles, the husbands of the plaintiffs. Though he was a minor yet trouble seems to have arisen between the parties as to the shares left by his uncles Tirloki Nath Singh and Dwarka Nath Singh. He claimed the shares of his two uncles on the ground that they constituted a joint family with him at the time of their death. The plaintiffs-applicants, on the other hand, claimed that their husbands were separate from Sardar Rajeshwar Singh, the father of the defendants, and thus they were entitled to the shares of their husbands. We might also mention that Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh had left two widows One of them was Sardarni Channan Kuar, plaintiff in the present suit, and the other was Sardarni Lajwanti Kuar.

The widows and the defendant applied to the revenue Court for mutation in respect of the shares of Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh and Sardar Dwarka Nath Singh. The revenue Court by its order dated 15th December 1920, directed that mutation of names in respect of the 4 annas share of Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh should be effected in favour of his two widows Sardarni Channan Kuar and Sardarni Lajwanti Kuar in equal shares of two-annas each, and in respect of the four annas share of Sardar Dwarka Nath Singh mutation should be effected in favour of his widow Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar. Being dissatisfied with the order passed by the revenue Court, the defendant Sardar Sahdeo Singh instituted a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Jullundur on 29th August 1921 The suit was brought in the Punjab Court because a portion of the property belonging to the family was situated in that Province. The suit related to the entire property belonging to the family and was one for declaration that the family, consisting of Sardar Rajeshwar Singh the father of Sahdeo Singh the defendant in the present case, and Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh and Sardar Dwarka Nath Singh the husbands of the plaintiffs-applicants, respectively, was a joint Hindu family and that the widows were not entitled to any share in the family property. It was also alleged in that suit by the defendant that there prevailed a custom in his family by virtue of which widows were excluded from inheritance. It may be mentioned here that the properties in respect of which the profits are claimed by the plaintiffs-applicants in the present suit were admittedly included in the suit brought by the defendant in the Court in the Punjab. After a protracted trial the suit was dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Jullundur by his decree dated 23rd June 1927 The defendant has appealed from the said decree to the High Court at Lahore and the appeal is still pending.

We may mention certain other facts which will be relevant for the purpose of understanding the various contentions raised on behalf of the parties in the present application. After the institution of the suit by the present defendant in the year 1921, he applied to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Jullundur for issue of an injunction against the present plaintiffs restraining them from realizing any rent of the share in respect of which mutation had been effected in their favour by the revenue Court. This application was filed on 20th November 1922. The application was granted by the Subordinate Judge on 6th January 1923, and he ordered that the injunction prayed for be issued.

The present plaintiffs appealed against this order to the High Court at Lahore and on 17th May 1923, the High Court set aside that order and remanded the case to the Court of Subordinate Judge for a fresh decision. On 8th November 1924, the Subordinate Judge passed a fresh order by which he revoked the previous order relating to the issue of an injunction and directed that a receiver of the property in the possession of the widows be appointed. The matter was again carried in appeal to the High Court at Lahore and on 27th March 1925, Jai Lal, J., passed a final order the effect of which was that the widows who were defendants in the Punjab Court and are the plaintiffs in the present suit were restrained from making collections and Sardar Sahdeo Singh, the plaintiff in the previous suit and the defendant in the present suit, was directed to deposit the entire income of the property in dispute situate in District Kheri in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, Punjab, and out of the amount so deposited each of the widows was to receive a maintenance allowance of Rs. 300 per mensem. The possession of the widows was, however, maintained in respect of the properties situate in the Districts of Lahore and Jullunder in the Punjab.

In pursuance of the said order of the High Court, Sardar Sahdeo Singh deposited his realizations in the Court, out of which Rs. 43,000 has admittedly been paid to the plaintiffs-applicants. It is argued that a large sum of money is still held in deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur, Punjab. We might also mention here that one of the widows of Sardar Tirloki Nath Singh, namely, Sardarni Lajwanti Kuar, entered into a compromise with Sardar Sahdeo Singh in respect of her 2-annas share out of the share left by her husband. The result of this compromise was that, a decree only in respect of the two-annas of the property forming the subject-matter of the suit brought in the Punjab Court was passed in favour of Sardar Sahdeo Singh but that his suit was dismissed in respect of 6-annas share of that property It may also be mentioned that after the suit brought by Sardar Sahdeo Singh had been decided by the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur, the Judge directed that the balance of the money deposited in his Court might be paid to Sardar Sahdeo Singh. An objection to this was raised but was disallowed by the Subordinate Judge.

The matter was then taken to the High Court at Lahore by the applicants by filing a revision against the said order and on 6th December 1927, the High Court at Lahore passed an order to the effect that the balance of the money held in deposit by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur, should not be paid to Sardar Sahdeo Singh but should be allowed to remain in deposit as it was on the date of the disposal of the suit till the title to the said money had been adjudicated upon by a competent Court. That money, we may mention, is still in deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur. The present suit which is a suit for profits under S. 108, Cl. 15, Oudh Rent Act 22 of 1886, was instituted in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tahsil Lakhimpur, District Kheri. The profits are claimed in respect of certain villages situate in Tahsil Lakhimpur and certain others situate in Tahsil Mohamdi, both Tahsils being in District Kheri. Plaintiff 1, Sardarni Channan Kuar, claims profits in respect of 2-annas share and Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar in respect of 4-annas share in those villages, the total amount claimed being Rs 1,70,000.

The defendant-opposite party has raised a number of contentions as to the maintainability of the present suit but for the purposes of the decision of the application for revision before us it would be necessary to mention only two of them. They are firstly, that the present suit for profits should not be tried till the appeal lodged by the defendant Sardar Sahdeo Singh against the plaintiffs-applicants in the High Court at Lahore had been decided, and secondly, that the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tahsil Lakhimpur, had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the portion of the claim which related to the profits of the villages situate in Tahsil Mohamdi. The learned Assistant Collector in charge of Tahsil Lakhimpur in whose Court the suit was instituted had decided both the points against the plaintiffs. He has held that the suit brought in his Court can be maintained only in respect of the villages situate in Tahsil Lakhimpur and that the plaintiff should institute a separate suit for profits in respect of villages situate in Tahsil Mohamdi in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of that Tahsil. He has further held that in view of the provisions of S. 10, Civil P. C, and also of S. 151 of the same Code it would be neither proper nor just to try the present suit for profits until the decision of the appeal pending in the High Court at Lahore. His order is therefore, to the effect that the present suit brought by the plaintiffs-applicants be consigned to the records till the decision of the appeal before the Lahore High Court and shall be taken up on file after the said decision, on application by either party, if and when necessary. The plaintiffs, Sardarni Channan Kuar and Sardarni Vidyawati Kuar, have now filed an application for revision of the said order in this Court challenging the validity of the order passed by the learned

Assistant Collector on both the points. The two contentions urged on their behalf before us are the same as were urged by them in the Court below. The case was argued at great length on both sides and we have taken time to consider our judgment. We now proceed to give our decision in regard to both the aforesaid points.

Regarding the contention that the order passed by the learned Assistant Collector under S 10, Civil P. C. directing the suit of the applicants to be stayed is illegal and incorrect, we are of opinion that the contention is sound and must be upheld. We proceed to give our reasons for the said view.

Section 10, Civil P. C of 1908 runs as follows.

"No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or in any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council."

On an analysis of the section quoted above it would appear that a Court shall not proceed with the trial of the suit, if first, the matter in issue in the suit is also directly and substantially in issue between the same parties; Secondly, the previously instituted suit is pending; (a) in the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, or (b) in any other Court in British India (whether superior, inferior or co-ordinate) or (c) in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor-General in Council, or (d) before His Majesty in Council; and, thirdly, where the previously instituted suit is pending in any of the Courts mentioned in Cl (b) or Cl. (c), such Court is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit. We have, therefore, to see whether the matter in issue in the present suit was directly and substantially in issue in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur and whether the Court would be competent to grant the plaintiffs-applicants the relief which has now been claimed by them in the present suit.

A large number of authorities were quoted before us during the course of arguments, but we would refer principally to those which have been passed under the present Code of 1908. One of the main differences between the wordings of S. 10 of the present Code and S. 12 of the Code of 1882 is to be found in the omission in the new Code of the words "for the same relief" which occurred after the words "previously instituted suit" of the corresponding section of the previous Code. It would thus appear that according to the present Code the fact whether the relief claimed in the suit subsequently instituted is different from that claimed in the previously instituted suit or whether it is the same, would not make any difference in the applicability of the present section. The only elements which have to be seen are firstly, whether the matter in issue in the subsequent suit is also directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit; secondly, whether the previous suit and subsequent suit are between the same parties or between those who are litigating under the same title and, thirdly, whether the relief claimed in the subsequent suit could be granted by the Court in which the previous suit had been instituted It is evident that the parties in the present suit and in the previous suit are the same and so far as that element is concerned it does exist. It is also admitted on both sides that the property in respect of which profits have been claimed in the present suit formed the subject-matter of the previous suit.

The contention, however, raised on behalf of the plaintiffs-applicants is that though the property is the same yet the subject-matter of the present suit is not the subject-matter involved in the previous suit. The argument is that the words "matter in issue" must be read with reference to the entire subject of controversy between the parties and not merely to one of the matters in issue. It was said that although the present suit related to the profits of the property which formed the subject-matter of the previous suit yet the subject-matter in issue in the present suit was a claim for profits which was not the subject matter in issue in the previous suit. On behalf of the defendant it was contended that though the subject-matter was different yet the real issue involved in the two cases was the same, it being whether the applicants were entitled to the property in respect of which they now claimed profits or whether the defendant-opposite-party was entitled to that property. It was further urged on behalf of the defendant that the words " matter in issue " which were to be found both in S. 10 and S. 11 of the Code should be read in the same sense. Although there is some force in the contention raised on behalf of the defendant yet we feel that the weight of authority is against him, and that it has been consistently held by the different High Courts in India that the words " matter in issue " in S. 10 should not be read as implying any particular issue, but must be read as referring to the entire subject-matter of the subsequent suit

The question now before us came up before the Allahabad High Court in the year 1888 and the Full Bench of that Court, in a case reported as Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (1) took the view that the pendency of a litigation regarding rent, malikana or other demand for one year did not under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure bar a suit between the same parties in which the same demand was made for a subsequent year. The difference between old S. 12 (now S. 10) and old S. 13 (now S. 11) was pointed out in that case. It was observed by Mahmood, J, at p. 154 that the rule in S. 12 related to matters sub judice whilst the rule in S. 13 related to matters which had passed into res judicatam : that whilst S. 12 barred only a suit, S. 13 barred the trial of both the suit and of an issue involved in that suit It is unnecessary to point out that the same distinction still exists in the present Code of 1908.

The Calcutta High Court has adopted the same view and in a case reported as Bepin Behary Mazumdar v. Jogendra Chandra Ghosh (2) Mukerjee, J., observed that the expression " matter in issue " had reference to the entire subject of controversy between the parties and that the object was to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter This case was followed by the same Court in Jamini Nath Mullick v. Midnapur Zamindary Co. (3). In the Patna High Court the same has been held in Kesho Prasad Singh v Shiva Saran Lal (4). It was said that in order to attract the application of S. 10, Civil P. C, the matters in dispute in the previously instituted suit and the subsequently instituted suit must be substantially the same though the reliefs claimed may be different. In the Madras High Court the same view has been taken as will appear from a case reported as Kuberan Nambudri v. Koman Nair (5).

In the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh the same interpretation was accepted in a decision reported as Sital Singh v. Sital Bakhsh Singh (6). The Bench of that Court consisting of Mr Stuart, J C, (now Sir Louis Stuart, C. J .) and Mr. Daniels, A. J. C., observed that the object of the rule contained in S. 10, Civil P C., was to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously entertaining and adjudicating upon two or more parallel litigations in respect of the same cause of action and the same subject-matter, that is litigations in which the matters in controversy are the same, and that the mere fact that the decision of subsequent suit will largly be affected by the decision of the previous suit still pending was not sufficient for the application of S. 10, Civil P. C. The view held in Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (1) and Bepin Behary Mozumdar v. Jogendra Chandra Ghosh (2) was followed in this case. In Sind the same opinion has been taken by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of that Province as would appear from a case reported as Jainarain Babulal v. Nathoomal Manoharlal (7).

It would, therefore, appear that there is almost concensus of authority that in order to attract the provisions of S. 10, Civil P. C., it is not enough that the same issue should be involved in the two suits, but it is also necessary that the entire subject-matter of the two suits should be the same. It is clear that the subject-matter of the present suits is not the same, the former being a suit relating to the declaration of title in regard to certain properties and the latter being a suit for profits in regard to a portion of those properties The second reason why we think S. 10 is not applicable to the facts of the present case is that the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jullundur, which tried the previously instituted suit is not competent to try the present suit and to grant the relief claimed in this suit In order to hold that S. 10 is applicable the two Courts must be Courts of concurrent jurisdiction, that is to say, each of those Courts must be in a position to try any one of the two suits and to grant the relief claimed in either of them If this condition is not present, the section is not to be applicable. This is apparent from the language of the section itself. If any authority were needed we would refer to a case decided by the Punjab Chief Court and reported as Paira Mal & Sons v. Raj Narain & Co. (8) and to another case decided by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur reported as Gopikisan v. Padamraj (9). It is clear from the facts given above that the present suit is one for profits and is solely cognizable by a revenue Court both under the provisions of S 108, Cl. 15, Oudh Rent Act, 22 of 1886, and S. 77, Cl. (k), Punjab Tenancy Act, 16 of 1887. A civil Court either in the Punjab or in Oudh is not competent to take cognizance of a suit for profits. Under those circumstances the trial of the present suit cannot in our opinion, be stayed under the provisions of S 10, Civil P. C., of 1908.

We feel, however, that looking to all the circumstances of the case it would not be just and proper to allow the present suit to be tried on the merits at present As would appear from the defence urged by the defendant in the present case the main contention raised by him is that the plaintiffs-applicants are not entitled to claim any profits since they have no title to the property in respect of which profits are claimed. It is manifest that it is open to a person against whom profits are claimed to contest such a suit by urging that the plaintiff is not entitled to profits on the ground that he does not possess any title to the property in respect of which profits have been claimed In this case the question as to whether the plaintiffs-applicants are possessed of title in the property in respect of which they claim profits is a question which must necessarily be tried. We are also aware that if such a question is again tried in a revenue Court it would entail a large amount of expenditure, and much of the time of the Court would be wasted in trying it It is also evident that the decision of the High Court at Lahore as to the title of the parties in respect of the villages situate in the district of Kheri will operate as res judicata. There can, therefore, be no doubt that it would be in consonance with the ends of equity and justice if the trial of the present suit should be stayed till the decision of the appeal by the High Court at Lahore. We are clearly of opinion that we are possessed of inherent jurisdiction to pass such an order.

In S. 151, Civil P. C. it is clearly laid down that nothing provided in that Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice or preventing abuse of the process of the Court. It was argued on behalf of the applicants that it would not be proper for us to apply the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. when the case clearly does not come within the provisions of S. 10 of the same Code. We regret we are unable to take that view. The very language of S. 151 shows that the inherent powers of the Court are not to be deemed to be limited or otherwise affected by the express provisions of the Code. If the contention of the learned counsel for the applicants were to be accepted as correct, there would be no necessity at all for enacting S. 151 of the Code It is only to meet cases like the present which are not provided for in the Code or to which the provisions of the Code do not apply that the legislature has enacted S. 151. We are supported in this view of ours by two decisions of the Calcutta High Court reported as Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand Singh (10) and Nand Kishore Singh v Ram Golam Sahu (11). The former was a case before the passing of the Code of 1908. It was held in that case that the provisions of Civil Procedure Code, as it then existed, were not exhaustive and that a Court was in a position, in cases to which the provisions of that Code were not applicable to exercise its inherent jurisdiction to do justice between the parties such as may be warranted under the circumstances of that case. The same principle was affirmed in the latter case also.

We may, however, refer to a decision of a Bench of our own Court which was given in a case between the same parties. In S. 115, Application 44 of 1927 decided by Raza and Nanavutty, JJ., on 3rd August 1928, the learned Judges of this Court held that although the provisions of S. 10 could not be applied to the facts of that case yet it would be very inconvenient and undesirable if the suit in which the order of stay was passed were tried on its merits and in the circumstances of that case the Court exercised its inherent powers under S. 151, Civil P. C. and stayed proceedings till the decision of the appeal by the High Court at Lahore. We intend to adopt the same course here. We now proceed to deal with the other point involved in the case, namely, whether the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tahsil Lakhimpur, in whose Court the present suit was filed, was competent to try it in face of the fact that the profits claimed therein related to a portion of the property which was situate in Tahsil Mohamdi.

To us it appears to be clear that in all rent suits in Oudh the provisions of Civil Procedure Code have been made applicable provided they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act itself. This is clear from S. 135, Oudh Rent Act. The first thing we have, therefore, to do is to see whether under the provisions of Civil Procedure Code it would be permissible for the applicants to institute a suit like the present one in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Lakhimpur. Section 17, Civil P C, lays down that where a suit is to obtain relief respecting property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate provided that in respect of the subject-matter of the suit the entire claim is cognizable by such Court. Thus under the provisions of S. 17 the suit can be instituted in either of those two Courts The plaintiffs have instituted their suit in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Lakhimpur, so the suit is clearly maintainable under the provisions of the said section.

We have, however, to see whether there is anything in the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act 22 of 1886, which is inconsistent with the provisions of S 17 of the Code. Our attention was drawn to S. 121, Oudh Rent Act, which provides for the distribution of business in rent Courts. Section 121 of the Act provides that the Deputy Commissioner has power to direct by order in writing that any business cognizable by him and by any Court subordinate to him shall be distributed amongst those Courts in such a manner as he thinks fit provided that a direction given by the Deputy Commissioner did not empower any Court to exercise a power or deal with a business beyond the limits of its proper jurisdiction We do not think that this provision in any way conflicts with the provisions of S. 17, Civil P C Just as in the case of the civil Courts this Court has defined the territorial limits of the different civil Courts in the Province which are subordinate to it, so has the Deputy Commissioner of every district in Oudh been given power to prescribe the territorial limits for each Court subordinate to him and also to distribute various kinds of business amongst the different Courts subordinate to him Just as this Court has no power to direct a subordinate civil Court to try a suit beyond the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction as prescribed by law, similarly the Deputy Commissioner as is stated in the proviso to S 121, has no power to empower any Court to deal with any case beyond the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction. It is admitted that the Court of the Assistant Collector, First Class, in accordance with the provisions of S. 114, is now competent to try and determine suits of every description irrespective of their value. The Sub-Divisional Officer of Lakhimpur was, therefore, in our opinion competent to try the present suit and we have not been able to follow the decision of the learned Assistant Collector, when he says that the present suit for profits is not cognizable by him so far as it relates to the villages situate in Tahsil Mohamdi. We, therefore, hold that the suit brought by the plaintiffs-applicants in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Lakhimpur was properly brought and is maintainable in that Court.

In conclusion we must point out that while we have decided not to interfere with the order staying the trial of the present suit passed by the learned Assistant Collector, we are equally clear in our mind that before we uphold such an order we must put the parties in this case on terms It is admitted on both sides that in pursuance of the decision of the High Court at Lahore passed on 27th March 1925, both the plaintiffs-applicants were to receive a monthly allowance of Rs 300 each and that the plaintiffs-applicants did actually receive allowance according to the said scale up to 23rd June 1927 It is admitted that they have not received any such allowance since that date. We, therefore, direct the learned Assistant Collector to make an inquiry regarding the point and to order the defendant to deposit the money in his Court within a time to be fixed by him for the purpose, sufficient for payment of the monthly allowance to both the applicants at the rate of Rs. 300 per month, from the date that such payment has been stopped up to the date of the passing of this order. We also direct the defendant that after the passing of this order he will deposit every month in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Lakhimpur, Kheri, a sum of Rs. 600 for payment to both the applicants at the rate of Rs. 300 each If he fails to deposit the sum found due on account of past arrears within the time fixed by the Assistant Collector or if he fails to deposit the future maintenance for any two months consecutively, the order staying the trial of the case will stand revoked and the learned Assistant Collector will proceed to try the suit on its merits. If, however, the defendant complies with the order passed by us, the suit shall be stayed till the appeal filed by the defendant-opposite party, Sardar Sahdeo Singh, in the High Court at Lahore against the plaintiffs-applicants, has been decided by the said High Court at Lahore. We, therefore, modify the order of stay of proceedings passed by the learned Assistant Collector, dated 12th September 1928, by declaring it subject to the aforesaid conditions. In the circumstances of the case we do not make any order as to costs in either Court.

Second Appeal No. 271 of 1928, Decided on 1st October 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalganj, D/- 13th April 1928

Landlord and Tenant — Cess — Nankar—Where mere fact that nankar has been granted to persons who were old proprietors is established, presumption will be, unless shown to the contrary, that the grant was in lieu of old proprietary right of a heritable and transferable character.

A right to nankar is, as a rule, to be considered an under-proprietary right of a heritable and transferable nature though a person in receipt of such allowance cannot necessarily be considered to be the under-proprietor of lands of which he may be in possession. This will depend upon the circumstances of each case. [P 350 C 2]

Where a nankar has not been decreed by a Settlement Court or where a person is not shown to have been in enjoyment thereof since the time when he lost his zemindari right and where it is shown that he has been granted those rights at a subsequent time it should be open to the zemindar to show that at the time when such grant was made it did not carry with it an estate of inheritance or transferability but was merely a grant of a personal character, limited to the life or lives of the person or persons to whom it has been granted. If, however, this is not proved by the landlord and the mere fact that a nankar has been granted to the persons who were old proprietors is established then the presumption would be, unless shown to the contrary, that the grant was in lieu of old proprietary right of a heritable and transferable character. This would especially be the case where the person to whom the grant was made happened to be a former proprietor of the village and where the entry of the rights was to be found in the under-proprietary register 1 *O. Judgment.—This is on appeal arising out of a declaratory suit. The plaintiff Lala Prag Narain is the taluqdar and proprietor of village Khajuha, District Unao, and the defendants were admittedly former proprietors of that village. They lost their proprietary rights when the village was included in the estate of the plaintiff. In lieu of the loss of their proprietary rights they were given certain under-proprietary land and muafi lands in the said village. It appears that after the regular settlement the plaintiff's ancestors granted to the defendants a cash nankar of Rs 25 per mensem presumably in lieu of the same rights. The exact date of the grant is not known but the evidence on the record shows that it was granted prior to 1294 Fasli equal to 1886-87 A D In the under-proprietary khewat prepared in the year 1298 Fasli a mention of the nankar was made It is admitted that for a number of years the defendants continued to receive the nankar. It, however, appears that some time prior to the recent settlement which is now going on in the Unao District, the entry was removed from the village papers. It does not, however, appear as to who was responsible for the said removal and under whose orders it took place. When the recent settlement operations started in the Unao District the defendants applied to the Settlement Authorities for correction of the said record and for an entry of the said nankar in the village papers

The Settlement Officer accepted their request and his order has been maintained by the higher Revenue Authorities in appeal. The order of the Assistant Record Officer was passed on the 26th October 1925, and the final order in appeal was passed on 24th September 1926 This has given rise to the cause of action in favour of the plaintiff taluqdar to bring the present suit.

The main allegations in the plaint are to the effect that the nankar rights were granted to the ancestors of the defendants in 1294 Fasli with a condition attached thereto that its continuance would depend upon the pleasure of the plaintiff. The plaintiff stopped the payment of the said nankar in 1294 Fasli and the defendants have no right to insist on the continuance of the payment of the said nankar. In short the plaintiff's case is that it was a grant of a mere personal right to the defendants and liable to be resumed at the pleasure of the plaintiff.

The defence put forward by the defendants was to the effect that the nankar granted by the plaintiff's ancestors to the ancestors of the defendants was not a grant of merely a personal right but was a grant of a heritable and transferable right in consideration of the loss of their old zemindari rights. They further alleged that the plaintiff never took any proceedings in a Court of law to resume the said grant and they had no knowledge that the entry relating to the nankar had ceased to exist in the village papers. They only came to know of it when the settlement operations commenced in the district and as soon as they came to know of it they applied to the Settlement Authorities for an entry of their rights and their application was granted They denied the plaintiff's right to resume the said grant at his will and urged that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration which he had asked for.

The main question for trial in the case, was therefore, whether the nankar allowance in dispute was determinable at the pleasure of the grantor or whether it was a heritable and transferable right of an under-proprietary character. The learned Munsif of Purwa at Unao who tried the case came to the conclusion that the nankar allowance which the defendants and their ancestors used to receive was a heritable and transferable right and not merely a personal right determinable at the pleasure of the plaintiff In this view of the case he dismissed the plaintiff's suit by his decree dated 9th May 1927. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj at Lucknow who heard the appeal took a different view and held that the nankar allowance was a mere personal allowance and not one which could be deemed to be heritable and transferable. He, therefore, by his decree, dated 13th April 1928, set aside the decree of the trial Court and granted the plaintiff the declaration which he had asked for. The defendants have now appealed to this Court and it is now contended again on their behalf that the nankar which their ancestors were in enjoyment of was not a personal grant but was a grant of a heritable and transferable character. The case has been argued at great length before me and I have also taken time to consider my judgment. The conclusion to which I have arrived is that this appeal must be allowed and I now proceed to give my reasons for the same.

I may state at the outset that a nankar allowance is usually an allowance which should be considered as implying a right of an under proprietary nature, which means that it is a heritable and transferable right. The history of the matter was discussed by Mr. Blennerhassett, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, so far back as the year 1898 in Fateh Bahadur Singh v. Sheomber Singh (1). He traced in that case the history of these nankar rights and referred to Sykes' Compendium, p. 168. He also referred to the Gonda, Bahraich and Rae Bareli Settlement Reports, the Oudh Sub-settlement Act 26 of 1866 and also to the explanation given in Carnegy's Kacheri Technicalities In Sykes' Compendium p. 168 the history of the nankar rights is to be found Mr. Sykes describes this right as a subordinate right in taluqas usually enjoyed by under-proprietors.

In para 32, Bahraich Settlement Report, nankar is explained as a drawback allowed to zemindars by the revenue authorities from the demand made on the estate, and as constituting the main portion of the ostensible profits of the zemindars. In the Rae Bareli Settlement Report the matter is dealt with in para 66 and it is stated that the nankar partakes of the nature of an under-proprietary right. In Rr. 10 and 11, Oudh Settlement Act, sir and nankar are treated as rights of an under-proprietary nature In Carnegy's Kacheri Technicalities it is stated that in Oudh the right is recognized as an under-proprietary right. It is on the basis of these authorities that Mr Blennerhassett ruled that nankar was a heritable right and not a personal right which the zemindar could resume at his pleasure In Raja Rudra Pratab Sahi v. Sheo Charan (2) the same view was upheld by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh consisting of Mr Blennerhassett, J C., and Mr. Chamier, A J. C. (now Sir Edward Chamier) They held in that case at p. 165 that they had no doubt that cash nankar granted in lieu of the surrender of zemindari right was an under-proprietary right.

In Nauab Mirza Mohammad Jafar Ali Khan v. Muzaffar Husain (3), Mr Kendall, A. J. C, (now Kendall, J), followed these cases and held that cash nankar granted in lieu of surrender of zemindari rights was an under-proprietary tenure and the holder of it had a heritable and transferable interest therein In Lal Muneshar Bakhsh Singh v. Shahzade Khan (4) the Board of Revenue, however, held that a right to receive a cash nankar does not necessarily connote a right to possession of land as an under-proprietor but may when coupled with other facts go to establish a prima facie case of under-proprietary right.

In Ram Kuar v. Hanoman Singh (5) the Board of Revenue held that the mere fact that certain persons were entitled to cash nankar does not show that they are under-proprietors and the allowance is heritable

In Deputy Commissioner, Gonda v. Bhagwan (6) it was held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that a right to a cash nankar or to dyhak or daswant does not necessarily connote a right to possession of land as an under-proprietor

In Partab Bali v. Bindeshri Prasad Singh (7) it was decided that a right to cash dasaundh in a village was in the nature of a charge on its rents though it could not connote a right to possession of the village and could not be deemed to be an under-proprietary right in its land.

It would thus appear as a result of the decisions quoted above that a right to nankar is, as a rule, to be considered an under-proprietary right of a heritable and transferable nature though a person in receipt of such allowance cannot necessarily be considered to be the under-proprietor of lands of which he may be in possession. This will depend upon the circumstances of each case I am also prepared to go so far that where a nankar has not been decreed by a Settlement Court or where a person is not shown to have been in enjoyment thereof since the time when he lost his zemindari rights and where it is shown that he has been granted those rights at a subsequent time it should be open to the zemindar to show that at the time when such grant was made it did not carry with it an estate of inheritance of tranferability but was merely a grant of a personal character, limited to the life or lives of the person or persons to whom it has been granted. If, however, this is not proved by the landlord and the mere fact that Mt. Samkar has been granted to persons who were old proprietors is established then the presumption would be, unless shown to the contrary, that the grant was in lieu of old proprietary right of a heritable and transferable character. This would especially be the case where the person to whom the grant was made happened to be a former proprietor of the village and where the entry of the rights was to be found in the under-proprietary register (Here the judgment discussed the evidence and concluded) Upon a consideration of the entire evidence I have come to the conclusion that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that the grant was of a personal character cannot be maintained. It appears to me that the learned Subordinate Judge has looked at the case from an entirely wrong point of view. I am inclined to hold the grant, in view of the circumstances which I have mentioned above to be of an under-proprietary nature unless proved to the contrary I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and restore the decree of the learned Munsif The plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the three Courts.

Second Civil Appeal No. 216 of 1928, Decided on 13th September 1928, against judgment and decree of Sub-Judge, Malihabad, D/- 17th March 1928.

Easements Act, S. 41—Grant of easement not stipulating its termination on expiry of necessity—Grant does not terminate on expiry of necessity.

The scope of a grant of easement (right of way) must be determined by the terms of the contract between the parties. Where there is nothing in the terms of the grant that it was to continue only until such time as the necessity was absolute and there was no evidence in support of such agreement it must be held that the grant was not limited till the necessity for it existed. Judgment —This is a second appeal by the defendants arising out of a suit for demolition of a wall ; for removal of certain spouts for flow of rain water and for an injunction in connexion with the above reliefs. The facts which have given rise to the present suit are that one Mt. Samkora owned a plot of land with a kachcha house standing thereon In 1910 she sold the house together with the portion of the land on which it stood to the plaintiff. In 1925 the heirs of Mt Samkora sold the rest of the land to the defendants. The defendants constructed a house on the land purchased by them. The plaintiff's grievance was that a wall constructed by the defendants blocked his passage through a door which he had opened in the house and that the spouts discharged water inside his house. The defendants denied the plaintiff's right to any of the reliefs claimed Both the Courts below have agreed in dismissing the plaintiff's claim as regards the spouts but have passed a decree for demolition of the wall in favour of the plaintiff.

The first point urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants is that the plaintiff has been wrongly held entitled to a right of way through the door which had been opened by him in his house. The learned Munsif had held that the plaintiff had acquired a right of way through the door in question over the defendant's land by prescription The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has upheld the right on a different ground. He has held that the plaintiff is entitled to the right of way under a grant from Mt Samkora. The argument urged on behalf of the defendants is that no grant has been made out and that in any case the grant must be deemed to have terminated now

It is quite clear from the terms of the sale-deed executed by Mt. Samkora that the plaintiff was expressly permitted to open the door in question. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that there could be no object in granting permission for the opening of the door unless the door was intended to be used for ingress and egress from the house. This intention is further supported by the fact that at the time when the sale took place there was no convenient access to the house from the public road. I can, therefore, see no reason to disagree with the opinion of the lower appellate Court that the terms of the sale-deed coupled with the oral evidence fully established the alleged grant. The argument about the grant having terminated is based on the ground that though there was necessity for such a grant at the time of the sale-deed yet no such necessity exists now as the plaintiff can have access to the house from the public road otherwise than by the route in respect of which the right of way is claimed in the suit.

It is urged that the grant must be considered to be a grant of easement of necessity and as there is no longer any absolute necessity for the alleged right of way the grant also must be deemed to have come to an end. I cannot accept this contention. The scope of the grant must be determined by the terms of the contract between the parties. There is nothing in the terms of the sale-deed to limit the grant until such time as the necessity is absolute. If it was intended that the grant should be limited in the sense contended for by the defendants one should have expected some express provision in the sale-deed to the effect that the door was to be closed when the necessity was no longer absolute. In the absence of any such provision in the sale-deed and in the absence of any other evidence in support of such agreement I must hold that the grant cannot be limited as the defendants would wish to limit it. I must, therefore, overrule the contention. Next it was contended that the grant is invalid for want of registration. It was held in Bhagwan Sahai v. Narasingh Sahai (1) that an easement can be imposed without the grant being embodied in a written deed. Assuming that a registeeed deed is necessary, the grant in the present case is contained in the sale-deed which is a registered document. The contention, therefore, has no force.

Lastly reference was made to the case of Ram Lal v. Makhan Lal (2) and it was contended that this Court should limit the plaintiff's right of way to the passage shown as APOU in the Commissioner's map which was sufficiently convenient for the requirements of the plaintiff and least onerous to the defendants This matter also seems to me to be concluded by the findings of the lower appellate Court. The contest in the Courts below was whether the plaintiff is entitled to a right of way by the route shown as ABCD or by route shown as APOU in the Commissioner's map.

The lower appellate Court after discussing the evidence of the witnesses examined by both parties has found it as a fact that the passage granted by Mt. Samkora at the time of sale in 1910 and which has been used by the plaintiff ever since is represented by ABCD. Under the circumstances the plaintiff is legally entitled to use the passage granted to him at the time of his purchase of the house. The matter is, one of contract between the parties and no question of my exercising any discretion in the case arises. This disposes of all the arguments argued in support of the appeal

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has drawn my attention to the fact that the letter T as given in the decree of the Munsif to describe the door is a mistake for the letter L A copy of the Commissioner's map which has been attached to the decree correctly gives the letter L against the door in question. The learned Subordinate Judge has also referred to this mistake in the beginning of his judgment but did not give any directions for necessary correction being made. I direct that the letter T as used in the decree of the first Court should be corrected and letter L substituted in place of it. With the above remarks I dismiss the appeal with costs.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 2 (ii)—Auction-purchaser in execution of decree for sale on mortgage of under-proprietary tenure is not legal representative of original under-proprietor.

The auction-purchaser in execution of a decree for sale on a mortgage of an under-proprietary tenure cannot be called the legal representative of the original under-proprietor because the term legal representative only denotes the class of persons on whom the status of a representative is fastened by reason of the death of a person whose estate they are held to represent. Further such an auction-purchaser cannot be called the representative of the original under-proprietor in respect of a liability arising subsequent to the mortgage on which the decree for sale is founded and in execution of which decree he becomes the purchaser, though he is certainly a representative of the under-proprietor qua the rights and liabilities which stood on the date of the mortgage ; 9 *O. C., S. 146.

The combined effect of S. 154, Oudh Rent Act and S. 146, Civil P. C. is to render an auction-purchaser of an under-proprietary tenure in execution of a mortgage decree liable to satisfy a decree for arrears of rent obtained against the original under proprietor. Because the provisions of S. 154, Rent Act not only make the transferee-purchaser liable for the rent subsequently accruing but they make him so liable in consequence of the act of omission to pay the rent on the part of the original under-proprietor. That being so he must be held to be a person claiming under his transferrer, and, as such, the decree against the original under-proprietor can be rightly executed against him under S. 146, Civil P. C., although he is not a judgment-debtor on the record of that decree: 9 O. C. 185, not Appr. [P 354 C 1, 2]

Ghulam Hasan and Saiduddin Ahmad—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This case has come before us for decision on a reference by our learned brother G. N. Misra, J. The facts are as follows :—

The respondent, Rai Bajrang Bahadur Singh, obtained a decree on the 23rd August 1924 for arrears of rent in respect of an under-proprietary tenure against Muhammad Ishaq and Muhammad Yasin. In the years 1911 to 1914 the appellant, Bisheshar Dayal, had obtained several mortgages in respect of the same tenure from the persons mentioned above or their predecessors-in-interest. These mortgages were put in suit and a decree for sale of the tenure was obtained by Bisheshar Dayal against the under-proprietors. Eventually in execution of that decree the tenure was put up for sale and purchased by Bisheshar Dayal on the 20th December 1926. In the month following the sale was confirmed. The respondent, Rai Bajrang Bahadur Singh, now desires in the proceedings, out of which this appeal has arisen, to execute his decree for rent by sale of the under-preprietary tenure as against Bisheshar Dayal. Bisheshar Dayal objects to this procedure but his objection has been overruled by the Courts below. Hence this second appeal before us.

The argument advanced on behalf of the appellant is that the law as enacted in S 154, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, imposes a liability on the appellant to pay to the respondent the rent which has fallen due in respect of this under-proprietary tenure subsequent to encumbrances or the auction purchase but that the liability stops and there is no justification in law or in the principle to make the appellant liable for the satisfaction of the decree, which the respondent had obtained long before the sale in favour of the appellant, in a process of execution of the said decree. It was suggested rather than argued that having regard to the liability under S. 154 aforementioned the respondent may bring a separate suit for the recovery of the same arrears of rent for which he had obtained a decree in 1924 against the original under-proprietors if the claim happens to fall in time on the date of the second suit.

The argument, which we have just now noticed, derives support from the judgment of Mr. Ross Scott in Mt. Atam Dei v. Bakht Narain (1), while he was Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. In the same case, however, Mr Wells, Additional Judicial Commissioner, expressed a different opinion. The opinion, which we have formed in this case, after, hearing arguments on both sides at great length, is in accord with the opinion expressed by Mr. Wells, though we do not find ourselves in agreement with him in the reasons for that opinion. Mr. Wells says that the transferee becomes by operation of law representative of the judgment-debtor. If that were so there could be no question of the appellant being brought on the record of the case either in addition to or in substitution of the original judgment-debtors and execution proceedings being taken as against him for the satisfaction of the decree in question. But we are unable to see how in the circumstances in which the appellant is placed he can be treated as the representative of the judgment-debtor by operation of law. The term "legal representative" as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure only denotes the class of persons on whom the status of a representative is fastened by reason of the death of a person whose estate they are held to represent. The present case is not such a case. Further the appellant cannot be held to be the representative of the original judgment-debtors in respect of a liability which had arisen subsequent to the mortgages on which the decree for sale was founded and in execution of which decree the appellant became the purchaser of the under-proprietary tenure. He is certainly a representative of the judgment-debtor qua the rights and the liabilies which stood on the date of the mortgages We do not think that the last-mentioned proposition requires any authority in support of it. But it may as well be to refer to a decision in the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Pratab Bahadur Singh v. Maheshwar Bakhsh Singh (2). Nor was the proposition questioned at the hearing of this appeal by the learned advocates on the side of the appellant and the respondents both

On what grounds the appellant can he held to be liable to satisfy the decree for arrears of rent obtained in the year 1924 in process of execution of the same decree though the appellant is not a judgment-debtor on the record of the decree? It seems to us that the combined effect of the provisions of Ss. 154, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, and 146, Civil P. C., 1908. furnishes such grounds. The liability of the appellant is admitted and this is by reason of S. 154, Oudh Rent Act. It appears to us that the provisions of S. 154 not only make the transferee or the incumbrancer as he is described in that section liable for the rent subsequently accuring but they make him so liable in consequence of the act of omission to pay the rent on the part of the original under-proprietor. If the liability therefore arises by reason of such an omission it must be held, we think, that the transferee is a person claiming under, if such a term can be used in respect of a liability, the transferror. This brings us to S. 146, Civil P. C. It is a new section in the sense that there was no provision similar to it in the old Code of 1882 The section is as follows :

"Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him."

It follows as logical corollary, if we may say so, that the proceedings now being taken in execution of the rent decree of 1924 may be and are rightly taken against the appellant. This disposes of the suggestion that a second suit may be open to the respondent against the appellant for the recovery of the same arrears of rent for which the decree had been obtained in the year 1924 against the original under-proprietors. If the appellant is a person, claiming under the original under-proprietors as we think he is, the second suit as against him will obviously be barred by the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The facts are as follows. The plaintiff Chaudhury Sajid Husain is the son of the late Chaudhury Kazim Husain, a Shia gentleman of position, who was the brother of the late wife of the late Raja of Mahmudabad. Chaudhury Kazim Husain died on 30th September 1913. He died possessed of a share in the village Palhri, a share in the village Parathia, the whole of the village Bahadurpur and a house at Muftigunj, Lucknow. It appears that the whole of this property descended to his sons Chaudhury Mustafa Husain and Chaudhury Sajid Husain Shortly after his death Mustafa Husain applied to be made guardian of the person and the property of his younger brother Sajid Husain and on the 16th October 1914, he was appointed (Ex. 8) the guardian of his brother's person and property by the District Judge of Lucknow. When he applied for the guardianship he stated that Sajid Husain had been born on the 25th April 1903, and this statement was accepted by the District Judge. The property of the late Chaudhury Kazim Husain was heavily-encumbered and he had in addition left unsecured debts. It is quite clear on the evidence that the property was practically bankrupt property. All the villages were encumbered, Bahadurpur being mortgaged with possession for Rs. 28,000 The income available for family use consisted only of the profits of Rs 2,060 a year from Palhri and Rs. 782 from Parathia, that is to say, Rs. 2,842, Bahadurpur produced a profit of Rs. 950 a year but that was, of course, enjoyed by the mortgagee in possession and the family could derive no benefit from Bahadurpur until Rs. 28,000 had been paid. We find that on 21st September 1915 (Ex. A-17) Mustafa Husain approached the District Judge with an application in which he stated that the total debts were then Rs 77,466-2-0 out of which Rs. 49,466 were bearing interest. The rate of interest charged was something more than 5 per cent but even at 5 per cent the interest on the Rs. 49,466 would have come approximately to Rs. 2,500 and this would have left Rs. 342 only for the support of the two sons and their family In these circumstances Mustafa Husain submitted a very reasonable proposal that such rights as the family retained in Palhri should be sold. Ex. A shows that the office of the Judge reported favourably on the proposal and in Ex. A-26 the District Judge on 28th September 1915, sanctioned the sale as far as the minor was concerned. However, no one was found who was ready to purchase Palhri and on 24th January 1916, the District Judge then holding the office was approached by Mustafa Husain in an application (Ex. 6) with an alternative suggestion that Bahadurpur should be sold.

In Ex. A-8 the office wrote a report as to this application and (Ex. A-9) Mustafa Husain was examined before the Judge and he stated that he could get Rs. 37,000 for Bahadurpur In Ex. 2 the District Judge sanctioned the sale of Bahadurpur for Rs. 37,000 but Bahadurpur was eventually sold on 21st February 1913 under Ex. A-1 for Rs. 37,200. By this sale the estate satisfied the mortgage on Bahadurpur and obtained for the equity of redemption after paying the costs of the transfer a sum of nearly Rs. 9,000. As we have already stated the income of Bahadurpur was only Rs. 850. Thus the property was sold for cash for nearly 40 years' purchase. Palhri was already mortgaged under a simple mortgage. A suit had been brought on the mortgage and a decree was passed on 15th June 1916, and it was found impossible to redeem. The share in the village was not actually sold until the 21st May 1919, when (see the sale certificate Ex. A-57) the actual price obtained was Rs. 56,573 which satisfied the decretal amount and left nothing over Palhri thus was sold for about 28 years' purchase. Before that sale, however, a third sale had taken place. Bahadurpur had gone. A decree had been passed against Palhri but there was no means of satisfying it and the share in Parathia, which was also encumbered, alone was left On 8th January 1918, the Maharaja of Mahmudabad who is a relation of these persons, purchased the share in Parathia for Rs. 23,400. At this time as a result of the sale of Parathia the family was left with their house in Muftiganj, their debts paid and a few thousand rupees over. As we have already noted Mustafa Husain had in his application (Ex A-5) stated that Sajid Husain had been born on 25th April 1903. After the debts had been paid and a certain amount of money had accumulated an application was presented to the District Judge on behalf of Badrunnisa, a sister of Sajid Husain, to the effect that Sajid Husain had really been born about 1900 and was over 20 years of age at the time. Sajid Husain countersigned this application It is Ex. A-26 and dated 15th December 1921. In addition Sajid Husain presented another application (Ex. A-14) on 16th December 1921, to the same effect. A medical certificate was produced from a certain Captain E. G. Pandali. This certificate is Ex. A-12. Captain E. G. Pandali was called as a witness (see Ex. A-16). He deposed on 20th December 1921, that he had examined Sajid Husain who was over 20 years of age and as a result the District Judge Mr. Sherring passed the order (Ex. A-15) on 20th December 1921

"Sajid Husain is declared a major. The Bank to be informed that Sajid Husain is now major and can deal with his own property. The guardianship now ceases to exist. File."

Sajid Hussain obtained a substantial amount of money on the finding that his age had been incorrectly recorded. He was then taken to have been born about 1900. Any suit to set aside the sale of Bahadurpur would have had to be filed before the end of 1924. After any such suit had become timebarred on this computation, Saijd Husain executed a sale-deed on 29th May 1925, in favour of Bhola Prasad, a Kurmi who resides in Lucknow District, by which he agreed to transfer to him four annas out of his eight annas in Bahadurpur for a consideration of Rs. 500 upon the understanding that Bhola Prasad would finance all litigation to get the sale of Bahadurpur set aside. The sale-deed in question is Ex 3, After he had executed this sale-deed he apparently changed his mind, for we find that on 22nd May 1926, he brought a suit against Bhola Prasad to have this sale Ex. 3 set aside on the ground that its execution had been obtained from him by duress. Then he changed his mind again and withdrew that suit on 14th July 1926. On 1st September 1921, he applied to the District Judge of Lucknow who was then Mr. Cuming to correct the date of his age We have little difficulty in understanding how Mr. Cuming formed the conclusion that he had any right to interfere in the matter when he was clearly functus but he passed on 28th October 1926, an order Ex 4. This is his order:

"The above statement of ex-guardian is supported by the record. Let the age be corrected accordingly. The age originally stated in the guardianship application of 22nd (sic) September 1914, being restored. The parties having come to terms on the other matters between them the papers can be filed".

Now it is to be noted that in these proceedings Chauduri Mustafa Husain was a party. This is noticeable in view of the fact that Chaudhuri Mustafa Husain although summoned three times to give evidence in the present case refused to appear The next stage in these proceedings was the filing of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. It was filed on 13th January 1927. The learned trial Judge arrived at the conclusion that the suit should succeed on the merits, but that it had to be dismissed because it had been filed more than three years after Sajid Husain had attained majority. The dismissal would of course, be unavoidable ,however good the case had been in the matter, if it had been filed after limitation. But in such event some sympathy might have been excited. But we are not disposed to extend any sympathy to either of the plaintiffs in the present matter, as we find that the suit should not have succeeded on the merits even had it been filed within limitation. The learned counsel for the respondents have taken in our view a very proper course in supporting the judgment of dismissal on grounds which were decided against him in the trial Court. The view taken by the learned trial judge upon the merits is as follows. He considers that there were two defects The first defect was that Mr. Sherring had made no inquiry, and this abstention in his opinion vitiated the permission to sell under S. 31 (1), Guardians and Wards Act (8 of 1890). He further went on to find that the order of Mr Sherring was defective in form in certain particulars because it did not recite the advantages to be gained by the minor, and because it did not describe with particularity the property to be sold. He considered the first objection fatal to the validity of the transfer. He considered the second objection immaterial. He added, however, a conclusion that the transaction had not been for the benefit of the minor and that both legally and fairly he ought to be permitted to set aside but as he also arrived at the conclusion that the vendee Abdul Rahim had acted perfectly honestly and had paid up the price in full, his view was that the minor could not set the transaction aside as far as he was concerned without refunding a moiety of what Abdul Rahim had paid. To take the last point first as we consider it the most important, we are unable to follow the learned Judge's reasoning or his view in respect of the transaction To us it appears that Mr. Sherring acted in the best possible interest of the minor and secured an extraordinarily good price for Bahadurpur.

The learned trial Judge has said that as Bahadurpur is near Lucknow and is connected with it by a metalled road the property there is likely to increase in value. There is no doubt force in this remark, but the learned Judge has failed to satisfy us, even if the property was likely to increase in value that a vendor should be dissatisfied with a price equivalent to forty times the annual value of the property, that is, the rate which Sajid Husain received from Abdul Rahim We consider that Mr. Sherring managed this bankrupt estate of Kazim Husain with great intelligence. If matters had been allowed to take their course and no property had been sold, the result would have been that Palhri and Parathia would have passed out of the hands of the family having been sold in execution of civil Court decrees, the house in Muftiganj would have gone also and the family would have been left with nothing except the equity of redemption in Bahadurpur and would have been kept out of possession until they had been able to obtain Rs. 28,000. The equity of redemption in Bahadurpur was no doubt worth something but it is quite possible that if the interest had been allowed to accumulate too long on the other debts the equity of redemption in Bahadurpur would also have been attached and sold. Thus a business management which resulted in the payments of all the debts, the preservation of the house in Muftiganj and an accumulation of a reasonable amount of ready money was a business arrangement to be commended and not to be condemned We look at the transaction of sale of Bahadurpur as eminently in the interests of Sajid Husain.

We now take the next point. The learned trial Judge is of the opinion that the permission given by the District Judge was worthless because he made no proper inquiry. We do not propose to go into the question, as to how far the previous decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court have laid down the law correctly as to the necessity of such inquiry or the manner in which it ought to be conducted. It is clear enough on broad principles that where a Judge in a case in which an enquiry is necessary allows through his remissness a transaction to take place to the detriment of the minor the sanction which he has given is not a bar to a re-opening of the transaction. But apart from the fact that the law itself does not order an inquiry, absence of inquiry would not vitiate the transaction, if the Judge has been able to conclude a good bargain. To suggest that such transaction should be set aside when the Judge had obtained for the property having had sufficient intelligence to obtain such a price without making an enquiry, is not in our opinion justified by anything in the Guardians and Wards Act or anywhere else. However, it is not necessary for us to expatiate on this point as we are of opinion that on the facts the Judge made sufficient inquiry. It is only necessary to look at the inquiry that was made before Mr. Hamilton in 1915 to show that at the time that Mr. Sherring passed his order he had on the file materials compiled in a previous inquiry which were sufficient for the purpose of his order. As to the formal defects to which the learned trial Judge adverted but which he did not consider sufficient to invalidate proceedings we have only to say that those defects were formal and that we agreed with the view of the law taken by the learned trial Judge in respect of them. We find that even if the suit had been in time it would have failed not only under the provisions of S 48, Guardians and Wards Act but because on the merits the transaction was eminently for the benefit of the minor and was conducted in a regular and proper manner. Why Sajid Husain and the speculator, who is financing these proceedings should have wished to institute them we are not in a position to say Possibly the learned Judge is correct and the property has risen very much in value since 1916.

We now come to the last point which in view of our previous decision is really unimportant Has the suit been rightly dismissed as time barred? While we consider that there is force in the argument that there was very little reason for Mustafa Husain to mis-state his brother's age in Ex 8 we find that upon the facts it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion different from the conclusion of the learned trial Judge. The evidence in support of the allegation that Sajid Husain was born in 1902 is oral evidence consisting of the evidence of Mumtaz Husain, Akbar Ali, Usman Ali, Sughra Begum mother of Sajid Husain and Sajid Husain himself. The learned trial Judge has disbelieved the evidence of Mumtaz Husain We consider that he has disbelieved him rightly The statement of this witness appears to us to be completely unreliable We have examined the evidence of Akbar Ali and Usman Ali and we find their statements equally unreliable. The lady Sughra Begum was disbelieved by the learned Judge and rightly disbelieved.

It is difficult to describe the evidence of Sajid Husain dispassionately, as upon his own showing he was ready to perjure himself upon any occasion when he thought it suited him. His evidence was of course worthless. There remains nothing except the fact that in the original application and in the original order he was stated to have been born in 1903. The statement was that of Mustafa Husain, who has constantly refused to give evidence in the case. Against this there is the evidence of Dr. Varma D W. 6 to the effect that in his opinion Sajid Husain was at least 29 years old when he examined him in 1927. We see no reason to distrust Dr. Varma's evidence We have considered all the evidence on the question of age and we have no hesitation in agreeing with the view of the learned trial Judge. One point remains There was filed before us to-day an application to file certain documents and to produce witnesses to prove them. This is an application under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C to produce additional evidence in the appellate Court. The evidence in question was not put before the trial Court and so there was no question of the trial Court having refused to admit it. We certainly do not require this evidence. Sajid Husain has stated that he was not aware that these documents were in existence at the time that he filed his appeal. We have only his word for it and we have found no reason to trust him upon any subject It is perfectly clear to us that he had every opportunity of knowing of the existence of these documents before the case was decided in the trial Court. We refuse to permit him to produce this additional evidence. As a result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendant, the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda, in his capacity as representative of the Court of Wards managing the Ajudhia Estate against the decision of both Courts that the plaintiffs-respondents have under-proprietary rights in Pura Saif Khan hamlet of Umedjot, Gonda District. The title of the plaintiffs-respondents is based solely upon a decree of the Settlement Court of Gonda District, dated 30th September 1871. Under this decree their predecessors-in-interest were given certain rights in that hamlet. The supperior proprietor of the hamlet was the Maharaja of Ajudhia. These rights were continually challenged by the Ajudhia Estate. A history of the attacks upon the plaintiffs and thair predecessors-in-interest is given in the decision of Mr. Pim, Junior Member of the Board of Revenue dated 25th August 1925, (Ex. A-4). The decree was passed in 1871. In 1875 the Ajudhia Estate endeavoured to eject the decree-holders. The Estate failed. In 1898 the Ajudhia Estate again endeavoured to eject one of their number. That attempt again failed. In 1903 during the progress of the then settlement the plaintiffs' predecessors who claimed to be under-proprietors in the hamlet and admitted their liability to pay rent to the superior proprietor, applied to the Settlement Officer asking him to fix their rents. The Ajudhia Estate objected. The case for the Ajudhia Estate was that the estate had a right to fix the rents of these persons as it pleased and that no Court should be allowed to interfere with that right. The question was decided against the estate and no appeal was preferred. In 1905 the Estate again endeavoured to challenge the title. It came into Court and asked for a declaration that the plaintiffs' predecessors were ordinary tenants and such birt rights as they might have had lapsed. That suit was dismissed. It, however, happened that at no time had the plaintiff's predecessors been recorded as under-proprietors. They have been recorded as birtdars. In the 1903 Settlement an entry had been made in the khewat which was opposed to the terms of the 1871 decree and the decision of the Settlement Officer. This entry was that they were ordinary tenants. The omission to enter them as under-proprietors affected them in 1914 when they attempted to partition the mahal The Board of Revenue found that they were not under-proprietors. The last attack made by the Ajudhia Estate upon the plaintiffs is thus described by Mr. Pim in his judgment :

"In the present litigation the Estate has tried new tactics. Abandoning the obviously hopeless attempt to eject by notice it served a notice on the appellants to pay an enhanced rent which, however, had been found in the first Court to be reasonable and on their refusal to pay it, have brought a suit under S. 52 on the basis of the conditions of re-entry laid down in the settlement decree of 1871."

This attempt has been successful as far as the revenue Courts are concerned for in spite of the fact that the Settlement Court in 1903 had laid down distinctly that the rents were to be fixed by the revenue Courts and not by the Estate, the refusal of the plaintiffs to pay a rent, which whether reasonable or not, the Estate on the previous decision had no right to fix has resulted in a decree for their ejectment. But they have not been ejected actually and are still in physical possession of the property. They then instituted the present proceedings in the civil Courts for a declaration that they are not tenants but under-proprietors. They have succeeded in obtaining a declaration that they are under-proprietors. If this decree is upheld they cannot be ejected by the revenue Courts and will be permitted to hold the land as they have all along held it. The Courts below have devoted considerable trouble to the decision of he somewhat complicated facts and have displayed great skill in considering the evidence and applying the law thereto.

The decision of this appeal turns in the main on the construction to be placed upon the decree of 1871. Before we consider its terms it is necessary to note the definition of "under-proprietor" in the Oudh Rent Act. An under-proprietor is a person possessing a heritable and transferable right of property in land for which he is liable or but for a contract or decree would be liable to pay rent. We now come to the litigation of 1871. The judgment on which the decree is founded gives a sufficiently full account as to how that case came into being. The plaintiffs in that case who were the predecessors-in-interest of the present plaintiffs came into Court on the assertion that in the year 1203 Fasli (a year which corresponds to 1796 A. D.) a certain Rani Bhagwant Kuar had, in consideration of the payment of Rs. 500, given to their ancestor unnamed a birt right in the hamlet. The right carried with it the privilege to the birtias of deducting by way of dahyak one-tenth of the rent assessed on the hamlet. The plaintiffs in that litigation continued that as the Ajudhia Estate, which had since acquired the village refused to recognize their rights they had come to the Settlement Court to have their rights defined and enforced. The reply of the Estate was a complete denial. The judgment continues that the plaintiffs were unable to produce any document granting them such rights such a failure would not be surprising if the rights had been granted in the year 1796, and that as there had been no real proof one way or another, the parties had consented to abide by the statement of the Patwari Shiam Lal and that Shiam Lal had deposed, after examining such papers as he had in his possession, that it was an undoubted fact that the plaintiffs were the birtdars of the village. He continued that Saif Khan was the founder of the hamlet Pura Saif Khan that he was the ancestor of the plaintiffs and that he had founded the hamlet some seventy years before, having obtained a birt contingent on his cutting down the jungle and reclaiming the land. The terms of the birt were that the birtdars were to retain possession on payment of the rent fixed by the taluqdar. The rent was to be fixed in the following way. Tue jama was to be at prevailing rates and the birtdars were entitled to deduct from the prevailing rates one-tenth on account of their dahyak right. This was the statement of the patwari and upon this statement the Settlement Officer decreed the case. The words of the effective part of the judgment are these :

"Therefore, the plaintiffs' birt rights and possession within limitation having been established on the evidence in the manner required by Circular No 2 of 1861, it is ordered that a decree may be passed in favour of the plaintiffs Fateh Khan and Amir Khan and their co-sharers for continuance of their possession over Pura Saif Khan included in Umedpot, Pargana Gonda, the dahyak rights to be deducted. The defendant shall have power to assess and alter the jama. The plaintiffs' right of dahyak shall be calculated. If the plaintiffs decline to accept the rate assessed by the taluqdar he will have the power to take the village under his direct management, but in that case the plaintiffs shall be entitled to recover one tenth as dayhak from the jama so collected. The taluqdar will have to pay this "dahyak at the close of the year."

To a certain extent the question as to the nature of the birt rights so conferred has been decided between the parties for in the litigation of 1905 to which we have already referred in an appeal brought by the Ajudhia Estate against the predecessors-in-interest of the present plaintiffs it was decided in the Judicial Commissioner's Court on 3rd September 1907 (Second Civil Appeal No. 565 of 1906) that the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs had the rights of birtias (or birtdars) under the decree of 1871. The Second Additional Judicial Commissioner, who decided the appeal, said in his judgment :

"It does not appear to me to be open to question that the present defendants have acquired heritable rights under the Settlement decree of 1871. The fact that the defendants were not recorded as birtdars or under proprietors until the year of 1903 is of little importance. The rights conferred by the decree of 1871 cannot be affected by the ommission to have the decree-holders recorded in the village papers as birtdars."

It is true that the Judicial Commissioner's Court did not arrive at any decision as to the exact state of the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs. In other words while deciding that they had hereditary rights the Judicial Commissioner's Court expressed no opinion as to whether they had transferable rights.

In determining whether in addition to hereditary rights they had also transferable rights, apart from the argument that where a man is proved to have hereditary rights, and there is nothing to show that they are non-transferable they must be presumed to be transferable, it is necessary to examine the decree of 1871 from another point of view. That decree was passed under the provisions of Circular No. 2 of 1861 which the Settlement Officer has misdescribed as Circular No. 2 of 1862. It is a Circular which was known as the Record-of-Rights Circular and refers in paras. 22 to 25 particularly to birts It is possible to criticise the Chief Commissioner's description and definition of birts which appears to us not to be accurate altogether But we are not concerned whether he, appreciated the nature of birts accurately or not. We are concerned with the effect of the circular in respect of Settlement decrees declaring the existence of birts. The paragraphs having bearing upon the case will be found at p. 174 et seq, of Sykes' well-known Compendium of the Taluqdari Law. It is quite clear from these articles that the Chief Commissioner considered what he called birts to be under proprietary tenures. He said that these tenuree when granted by the taluqdar for money received, will be maintained as representing the proprietary rights of the birtias who by purchase have acquired the position of intermediate holders, and as constituting the portion of the profits left them by the taluqdar. Here he was considering only the case of what are known as bai birts. He proceeded to discuss what he called birts conferred by favour or raiyati birts and says these birts conferred by favour or raiyati birts, as they are styled in contradistinction to the former or bai birts are not birts in their essential characteristics, but are identical with the rent fee grants made by the taluqdars and are, therefore, liable to resumption by them at the Regular Settlement when the Government will take its full share of the rental. He continued in para. 24

"Where the birtia has lost possession there is no more to be said. We are not to restore him. But the Chief Commissioner is clearly of opinion that the birtias who were found in direct engagement with the Estate at annexation or who have uninterruptedly held whole villages on the terms of their pattahs under the taluqdar must be maintained in the full enjoyment of their rights in subordination to the taluqdar."

These extracts are sufficient to justify the conclusion at which we arrive that the Chief Commissioner did not intend recognition of the rights of birtias unless those birtias were under-proprietors as opposed to tenants. Thus the mere fact that the decree of 1871 was in accordance with Circular No 2 of 1861 is sufficient to show that the Settlement Officer intended to declare the existence of under-proprietary rights. It is true that the Patwari knew nothing about the existence of the bai birt which the plaintiffs' predessors had put forward in the proceedings of 1871. All that he knew was that Sail Khan had cut down the jungle A birt obtained from a taluqdar in consideration of cutting down jungle and clearing the soil was known as a ban kati birt or ban tarashi birt The Chief Commissioner in the circular in question had not taken into account specifically the existence of such birts which were clearly not what he called raiyati birts or rent free grants made by the taluqdar But if a Settlement Officer forming his own opinion as to what the Circular meant proceeded to give title as birtias to persons under the provisions of that Circular that title, in our opinion, can only be held to be title as the under-proprietor. The learned counsel for the defendant-appellant has asked us to distinguish this case from the case of Mohammad Abdul Hasan v. Lachmi Narain (1).

Mr Pim distinguished this case from that case and it was on the distinction that he made that he ordered the ejectment of the plaintiff We are not of opinion that we should distinguish this case from that case (1) and we consider that the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in that case so far from going against our views support our views That case was a case of a ban kati birt. It was also a Gonda case. It was not the same estate. A certain person had claimed rights under a ban kati birt The Settlement Court had decided that he had made out those rights and gave him a decree upholding his possession and occupation under the provisions of Circular No 2 of 1861 subject to the condition that the taluqdar should always have the power to renew the patta and to assess the jama according to the practice observed during the Shai times. The Settlement Officer further declared that the jama should be fixed at prevailing rates and that birtdar should be entitled to deduct from it ten per cent. as dahyak dues. Further it was stated that if the birtdar took any objection to the payment of this jama the taluqdar should be allowed a right of reentry, should take the village under direct management and that the birtdar should in these circumstances be only entitled to receive ten per cent. as dahyak on the jama. The similarity up to this point is very marked. But there is one distinction on which the learned counsel for the appellant has laid great stress. In that decree the birtdars were described as under-proprietors and the present decree says nothing on the subject one way or the other. Their Lordships of the Privy Council while holding that the birt holder was an under-proprietor took into consideration the fact that he was described as under proprietor. But at p. 278 of 48 I. A. [Mohammad Abul Hasan Khan v Lachmi Narain (1)] a reference is made to the Circular No 2 of 1861, which supports our view, that a decree granting birt rights under the provisions of that Circular is necessarily a grant of under-proprietary rights whether under proprietary rights are or are not specially mentioned.

We finally revert to the argument that where a man is proved to have hereditary rights and that there is nothing to show that they are non-transferable they must be presumed to be transferable. What are the facts here? It is admitted that Saif Khan at the beginning of the nineteenth century brought the land under cultivation and cleared the forest, that he settled the hamlet and populated it and that for over seventy years he and his descendants held this hamlet on payment of rent at a privileged rate to the superior proprietor This position has continued ever since. The rights enjoyed by Saif Khan have descended as hereditary rights subsequently. In the decree there is not one word said restricting the power of transfer. It is unnecessary to establish a power of transfer by outside evidence. Where a man has rights of a hereditary nature it is a good legal presumption that those rights are transferable. Such a presumption can of course, be rebutted, but there is no rebuttal here.

For the above reasons we find ourselves in agreement with the conclusions of the Court below and we find that upon the evidence the plaintiffs are under-proprietors and entitled to under proprietary rights in Pura Saif Khan. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 200 of 1928, Decided on 5th November 1928, against decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Sitapur, D/- 21st April 1928.

 Civil P. C., S. 11—Land Record Officer ordering that mortgagor should be recorded as ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land—His order will operate as res judicata in subsequent civil suit, Land Record Officer having exclusive jurisdiction to pass such order.

The judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point is conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court for a different purpose. Hence the order of the Land Record Officer declaring that a person who had mortgaged his village should be declared as ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land will operate as res judicata and the question cannot be opened again in a Civil suit, although provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C., are not applicable to such a case, the Land Record Officer having exclusive jurisdiction to pass such an order : A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 175, Dist. [P 363 C 1, 2]

Judgment —This is the plaintiffs' appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, dated 21st April, 1928, reversing the decree of Munsif of the same place dated 23rd December 1927 The facts necessary for the decision of this appeal are as follows. In virtue of a mortgage of 25th August 1886 executed by the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant-respondents in respect of the village of Harraya in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs appellants the mortgagee entered into possession of the mortgaged property on 29th June 1904, under a decree of Court. At the time when the mortgagee entered into possession the mortgagors held 56 bighas 16 biswas sir land in the village of Harraya. At the instance of the mortgagors the Court of Revenue on 26th October 1910, fixed rent in respect of 9 bighas 2 biswas of the sir land awarding the status of ex-proprietary tenant to the mortgagor's representatives-in-interest. In the course of settlement operation in the year 1924, the defendants claimed that the entire 56 bighas 16 biswas of the sir land was their ex-proprietary tenancy land and that the entries in the revenue papers should be so corrected as to cover the entire area of the sir land as the ex-proprietary holding of the mortgagees. The Land Record Officer eventually passed an order on 28th September 1924, as between the mortgagors and the mortgagees that the entire 56 bighas 16 biswas should be recorded as an ex-proprietary tenancy of the mortgagors One part of the order just now mentioned is important and may with advantage be reproduced here.

"They (mortgagors) are admittedly in possession of it (the entire area of 56 bighas 16 biswas). Hence it is to be recorded as their ex-proprietary holding."

The plaintiffs made an infructuous attempt to obtain a review of this order and finally instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiffs for possession over the lands in suit which are included within the area of the 56 bighas 16 biswas mentioned above. On appeal by the defendants the lower appellate Court holding that the order of the Court of Revenue dated 28th September 1924, constituted a bar to an adjudication of the plaintiffs' right to the possession of the land in suit allwed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff' suit.

The quesion in appeal, therefore, is as to the effect of the order of 28th September 1924 on the relief claimed by the plaintiffs. We are of opinion that the said order constitutes res judicata in favour of the defendants-respondents and consequently the decree of the Court below must be maintained. There is no doubt that the Land-Record Officer had jurisdiction to pass the order of 28th September 1924. He was seized of that jurisdiction first under the express provisions of S. 36, Land Revenue Act, (3 of 1901) and secondly under the general provisions of the Oudh Rent Act relating to the determination of ex-proprietary rights under S 7-A, Oudh Rent Act, 1886. Further the Land Record Officer was not only possessed of this jurisdiction but his jurisdiction was exclusive Obviously the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C, 1908, relating to res judicata are not applicable to this case but the provisions are not exhaustive, and what is applicable to this case is the second rule of the rules stated in Duchess of Kingston's case (1) and it is as follows:

"That the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is···conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose."

The plaintiffs cannot get actual possession of the lands in suit unless they obtain a finding that those lands do not constitute the ex-proprietary tenancy of the defendants. This finding we are precluded from giving in favour of the plaintiffs by virtue of the rule of res judicata just now mentioned

As against this view two points were urged by the learned advocate, who appeared on behalf of the appellants· (1) That the provisions of S 7-A, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, were inapplicable to the present case for the reason that the original mortgage was of 25th August 1886, while the ex-proprietary rights under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act were given only in case of alienations after the first day of January 1902, and (2) that the claim made for ex proprietary rights in the year 1924 was barred on that day by one year's rule of limitation prescribed by S. 129. In support of the second ground it was pointed out to us that in the present suit the defendants had admitted, "that the plaintiffs were in possession of the property in suit until the order of the revenue Court dated 28th September 1924 was passed."

We are of the opinion that both the grounds are untenable. As to the first ground, it is not necessary to decide, but it may well be argued as it was, before us, that the provisions of S. 7-A, Oudh Rent Act come into operation in this case not on the date of the mortgage but on the date when the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged property under the decree of Court in the year 1904.

(1) [1776] 2 Sm. L. C. (11th Ed.) p. 791.

The fatal answer to the argument is that the order is conclusive though it might have been wrong. As to the second ground it appears to us that we must accept the statement as to possession made in the order of the Land Record Officer 28th September 1924, that both parties were agreed that the mortgagors were in possession of the entire area of the land now in suit That there might have been change of possession since is immaterial. What is material is that the defendants are to-day in possession. No question of limitation can arise under such circumstances. Here again the order is conclusive, though it may be wrong.

We were asked to go behind the order of 28th September 1924, on the authority the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Secretary of State v. Jatindra Nath Chowdhury (2). That decision was given with reference to the provisions of S 6 of Act 9 of 1847 relating to the boundary disputes in cases of alluvion The section provided for the finality of the orders of the Board of Revenue on those matters.

"Their Lordships desire to make it clear, however, that the proceedings of the assessing authorities may be still subject to being quashed in the ordinary Courts of law if they have been tainted by fundamental irregularity."

The finality imposed by the provisions of S. 6 of the said Act upon the orders of the Board of Revenue obviously did not affect and raise the question of jurisdiction, but this is the question which arises in the present case. Further the two mistakes, if they were mistakes, which the Land Record Officer is said to have made and which we have already mentioned, cannot, in our opinion, amount to fundamental irregularity. The decision relied upon is, therefore, inapplicable. Accordingly we dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 28 of 1928, Decided on 8th August 1928.

Hindu Law—Widow—Costs in litigation incurred by her to protect her title to the estate are binding on reversioners but not those undertaken with any other object.

The law applicable in cases where a reversioner is sought to be bound with costs of litigation incurred by a Hindu widow is that if she has incurred debts to meet the costs of litigation brought against her, in order to protect her title to the estate, the debts so incurred would be binding on the reversioner. If, however, she has incurred debts in litigation undertaken by herself not with the object indicated above, those debts will not be binding on the reversioner 4 All. 532 ; 12 Cal. 52 , *A. I. Radha Krishna—for Appellant.

Pirthvi Nath—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a declaratory suit. The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit to the effect that the mortgage-deed, dated 24th July 1926, executed by one Mt. Rachhpal Kuar, widow of Darshan Singh, respondent 2 in the appeal before us, in favour of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh, respondent 1 for Rs 6,000 be declared as inoperative and not binding on him as having been executed without any legal necessity The plaintiff alleged himself to be the next reversioner of the husband of the said lady It was alleged that two prior mortgages had been executed by Darshan Singh, in favour of respondent 1, one on 2nd June 1908, and the other on 11th June 1909, which the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to redeem, but in order to deprive him of that right a fresh deed of mortgage had been executed by the lady in favour of respondent 1, fixing a long period of redemption, namely 50 years before which the property could not be redeemed. The plaintiff also sought for a declaration to the effect that this condition be declared not to be binding on him

The widow did not put in any appearance in the suit, which was mainly contested by defendant-respondent 1. He denied the plaintiff's reversionary title, his right to redeem the two prior mortgages and pleaded that the deed was binding upon the plaintiff since it had been executed for legal necessity The Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli, who tried the suit, held that the plaintiff's reversionary right was fully established and that the mortgage-deed was only binding upon the plaintiff so far as its consideration went to pay off the two previous mortgages executed by her husband and which have been stated above, and further to the extent of a sum of Rs. 1,200 which had been according to his opinion spent by the lady on account of legal necessity. He also held that the term of fifty years provided in the mortgage-deed in suit was an unreasonable term and would not be binding upon the plaintiff-appellant, and that he would be entitled to redeem the two mortgages executed by Darshan Singh ignoring the term fixed in the mortgage-deed in suit.

The plaintiff has come to this Court in appeal against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and the point raised by him in appeal before us is that the amount declared by the learned Judge to have been borrowed by defendant 2 for legal necessity is not proved by the evidence on the record to have been so justified. We now proceed to determine how far the contention raised by the plaintiff-appellant can be maintained.

Turning to the mortgage-deed in suit we find that its consideration consists of the following items :

| | Rs. |
|---|---|
| (a) On account of pro-note dated 28th May 1925, executed by defendant 2 in favour of one Maharaj Bukhsh ... ... ... | 1,960 |
| (b) On account of the prior mortgage-deed dated 11th June 1903, executed by Darshan Singh (Ex. 5) ... | 200 |
| (c) On account of the prior mortgage deed dated 2nd June 1908, executed by Darshan Singh (Ex. 4) .. | 175 |
| (d) On account of the pleader's fee due to one Pandit Satyanarain Shukla pleader, Rae-Bareli ... .. | 2,200 |
| (e) On account of the pro-note dated 11th June 1925, executed by defendant 2 in favour of one Chandra Pal Singh ... .. . | 1,165 |
| (f) For purchase of stamp and registration expenses ... . | 200 |
| (g) For another mortgage-deed dated 10th November 1903, executed by Darshan Singh in favour of Maharaj Bukhsh ... ... ... | 100 |
| Total ... | 6,000 |

The Subordinate Judge disallowed items (a), (e), and (g) altogether, allowed (b) and (c) in full and allowed item (d) to the extent of Rs. 1,100 and item (f) to the extent of Rs. 100. In result he declared that the deed was binding to the extent of Rs. 1,575. The plaintiff-appellant admitted the two mortgage-deeds executed by Darshan Singh constituting the items (b) and (c) and there is no dispute regarding them here.

The main dispute centres round items (d) and (f) under which the learned Subordinate Judge allowed Rs. 1,100 and 100.

We proceed to deal with each of these two items separately. Regarding the item (d) we may point out that it is an item relating to the fee due to a pleader named Pandit Satyanarain Shukla of Rae Bareli on account of the various suits conducted by him on behalf of Mt. Rachpal Kuar The learned Subordinate Judge found that out of this a sum of Rs. 400 had already been paid to the said pleader and the rest was still due out of the total amount which under the mortgage-deed in suit she had asked defendant 1 to pay to the said pleader. The learned Subordinate Judge held that a sum of Rs. 1,100 out of this entire amount should be considered as binding upon the plaintiff. We regret to observe that the learned Subordinate Judge has not approached this question from a proper point of view. What the learned Subordinate Judge should have in our opinion done is to consider the nature of each litigation separately by itself and to determine whether the expenses incurred by defendant 1 in connexion with that litigation could be considered as being justified by legal necessity. We, however, now proceed to do so ourselves.

The evidence regarding these litigations is to be found in the deposition of Pandit Satya Narain Shukla, who was examined in the Court below as D. W. 1. According to his evidence we find that the fee due to him was in connexion with seven pieces of litigations, the details of which we give below :

(1) 2 Suits of profits brought in the revenue Court by Mt Rachhpal Kuar against Jagdutt Singh plaintiff-appellant in respect of which a fee of Rs. 475 was settled ; (2) A declaratory suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Jagdutt Singh, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, against Mt. Rachhpal Kuar, on the ground that the lady was not entitled to possession of the property left by her husband. The fee settled in this case was Rs. 250, which is the legal fee in the case and which comes to the same figure if allowed for ten hearings which the pleader did at the rate of Rs. 25 per hearing; (3) Appeal in the above declaratory suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Jagdutt Singh, in the Court of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, against the said Mt. Rachhpal Kuar The fee settled in this case was Rs. 250 but Rs 100 only was paid by the lady; (4) Mahadeo Singh v Jagdutt Singh and Mt Rachhpal Kuar in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli. What the nature of the litigation was does not appear to have been stated by Pundit Satya Narain Shukla, nor is there any evidence on the record to prove it The fee of Rs 850 is alleged to have been settled in this case; (5) Execution proceedings taken by Mt. Rachhpal Kuar for recovery of costs of the declaratory suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant against her in the Subordinate Judge's Court, Rae Bareli. Rs 25 are claimed as fee due to the pleader in these proceedings; (6) Mt. Rachhpal Kuar v. Jagdutt, a suit instituted by the lady in the revenue Court for removing the plaintiff-appellant from the post of the lambardar. A sum of Rs. 125 is alleged to have been settled to have been payable to the pleader; (7) Execution proceedings in Mt. Rachhpal Kuar v. Jagdutt, the two suits brought by her for profits in the revenue Court, in which a fee of Rs. 475 is alleged to have been settled.

The total amount of the fees settled according to the statement of Pandit Satya Narain Shukla comes to Rs. 2,450 out of which he admitted a receipt of Rs. 200. The balance left due to him was Rs. 2,250. He stated that he had relinquished a sum of Rs. 75, which would reduce his dues to Rs. 2,175 We do not understand how in the mortgage-deed a sum of Rs. 2,200 was stated as payable to him. However, that is a small matter, which cannot affect the decision of our case.

Before taking each of these items it is necessary that we should consider the law applicable in cases where a reversioner is sought to be bound with costs of litigation incurred by a Hindu widow.

The first case on the subject, which has always been followed, is a case decided by Brodhurst and Mahmood, JJ. of the Allahabad High Court, reported in Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad Singh (1). Mahmood, J in delivering the judgment observed on p 543 that in his opinion a distinction should be drawn between litigation undertaken to protect the property and litigation the object of which was to obtain a possible benefit for the estate, the former relating to the security of that which has already been acquired and in actual possession, and the latter relating to that which may possibly be acquired.

According to his decision the former class of litigation would no doubt amount to legal necessity but in regard to the latter class of litigation the costs of such litigation would only be binding, if it has ended in bringing an actual benefit to the estate. In the latter case, according to the opinion of the learned Judge, any alienation to meet the costs would be binding on the reversioner on the analogy of the maxim—he who enjoys the benefit ought to bear the burden also

In Amjad Ali v. Moniram Kalita (2) it was held that the legal expenses incurred by a Hindu widow in defending her life estate in her husband's property constitute such a charge on the property as to make a sale therefor by her binding as against the reversioner.

The question of what constitutes "benefit to the estate" was discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara (3). Lord Atkinson in delivering the judgment of their Lordships observed on p. 155 that it was impossible for their Lordships to give a precise definition of "benefit to the estate" applicable to all cases and that they would not attempt to do so. It was, however, observed that the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of its portions from injury, or deterioration by inundation, these and such like things would obviously be benefits. It would, therefore, be clear from this decision that it would constitute legal necessity for a Hindu widow to incur debts in order to meet the costs of the litigation for the purpose of defending herself against the hostile litigation.

The matter was considered again in the Allahabad High Court by Rafiq and Lindsay, JJ. in a subsequent case reported in Bhagwan Das Naik v. Mahadeo Prasad Pal (4), in which it was held after a discussion of those different cases that the effect of the decisions was that an act for which the character of "legal necessity" or "benefit to the estate" could be claimed must necessarily be a defensive act—something undertaken for the protection of the estate already in possession and not an act done with the purpose of bringing a fresh property into possession and which may or may not be successful under the chances happening upon litigation—vide p. 394.

This principle seems to have been followed in the same Court in a subsequent case reported in Jado Singh v. Nathu Singh (5)

The Calcutta High Court has recently held that costs of litigation are not always a legal necessity, if the costs have been incurred for the purpose of protection of the estate and the limited owner has incurred debts for the purpose of meeting these costs, then only the costs of litigation could be considered as legal necessity—vide Upendra Nath v. Kiram Chandra, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1046.

The same view appears to have been followed by the Punjab Chief Court in a case reported in Abdul Ghaffur Shah v. Pir Muhammad Khan (6).

The rule of law deducible from the above cases, in our opinion, appears to be that if a Hindu widow has incurred debts to meet the costs of litigation brought against her, in order to protect her title to the estate, the debts so incurred would be binding on the reversioner. If, however, she has incurred debts in litigation undertaken by herself not with the object indicated above, those debts will not be binding on the reversioner. It is this test that we are bound to apply in this case in order to determine how far the plaintiff-appellant can be considered to be bound by the debts borrowed by defendant 2 under the mortgage-deed in suit.

As to the two profits cases it appears to us from the evidence that they were suits in no way connected with the protection of her estate. The property which Mt. Rachhpal Kuar had inherited from her husband seems to have been a joint property, and the only way how her husband or she could recover the profits thereof was by instituting suits for the purpose in the revenue Court. We do not see how such suits can be considered to be litigation for the purpose of protecting the estate, which was in her possession These suits were suits for recovering only the profits to which she was entitled We are, therefore, of opinion that the costs incurred by her in this litigation cannot be allowed.

As to the costs incurred by her in the declaratory suit and in the appeal relating to that suit, we are of opinion that the said litigation comes within the rule of law laid down by us as deducible from the reported cases. The suit was obviously brought by the plaintiff-appellant himself against the lady for declaration that she had no title to the property in suit and it was her clear duty to protect her estate, and if she incurred debts to meet costs of that litigation, the plaintiff-appellant must be bound by the said debt We, therefore, hold that the sum of Rs. 400 which remained to be paid on account of the fee due to Pandit Satya Narain Shukla in this case is a valid charge on the estate and the plaintiff is bound by it.

We may mention here that it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that there was no proof on the record showing that the costs awarded to her in that suit had not been realized by her from the plaintiff-appellant and consequently the said amount should not be declared as a charge. We regret we are unable to accept this contention. It was for the plaintiff-appellant himself to prove whether the debts incurred by the lady had been paid off by the amount of costs realized by her in execution proceeding, if any. The appellant has given no evidence to that effect. He was the best person to give such evidence, because he himself was the person, from whom such costs must have been realized if at all.

As to the case of Mahadeo Singh v. Jagdutt we are unable to declare that any debt incurred by the lady on account of the costs of litigation in this case can be held as binding on the estate, since no evidence has been given in the course of the trial proving the nature of the said litigation. In the absence of such proof we regret we cannot hold any debt incurred in respect of the costs of that litigation to be binding on the reversioner

As to the execution proceedings taken in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, for recovering the costs of the declaratory suit, we are of opinion that any such costs would not be costs incurred for the benefit of the estate. but incurred by the lady only for the purpose of recovering costs for her own benefit

As to the lambardari case filed by Mt. Rachhpal Kuar against Jagdutt we are clearly of opinion that the said litigation cannot in any way be considered to have been undertaken for the purpose of protecting her estate. The object of that litigation was obviously to get the plaintiff-appellant removed from the post of the lambardar. This cannot, therefore, be considered a litigation coming within the definition of the words "for the benefit of the estate."

As to the execution proceedings taken in the two profits cases we must point out that when we have held that the suits for profits themselves could not be considered as litigations, the costs of which would be a charge on the estate, the execution proceedings in those very cases cannot be considered to be of a character, the costs of which should be declared to be justified by legal necessity.

The result of these findings is that out of the sum of Rs. 500 which was incurred by the lady as costs of the litigation in the declaratory suit and the appeal in connexion therewith should be considered to be those justified by legal necessity. The evidence, however, shows that Rs. 100 out of the said costs have already been paid by Mt Rachhpal Kuer out of her own pocket and the only sum which defendant 1 has been asked to pay to Pandit Satya Narain Shukla on that account is a sum of Rs 400. We, therefore, declare, that item to be binding on the plaintiff-appellant as a reversioner of the husband of Mt. Rachhpal Kuar.

We now proceed to discuss the other item (f) which has been partially awarded by the learned Subordinate Judge, that being on account of the costs and expenses incurred in the execution and registration of the deed. The learned Subordinate Judge has allowed a sum of Rs. 100 on that account. This sum he has allowed on the basis that the deed which had been executed by the lady was for a sum of Rs 6,000 According to our finding the sum which is justified for legal necessity consists of the sum due under the two previous mortgage-deeds which amounts to Rs 375 and the sum of Rs. 400 on account of the costs due for the litigation in respect of the declaratory suit The total amount for which the widow was justified to execute the mortgage-deed in suit comes therefore only to Rs 775. In our opinion Rs. 25 would be quite ample to meet the costs of the stamp and registration of the deed executed for that sum.

We, therefore, hold that the mortgage-deed in suit is only operative to the extent of Rs. 375 due under the two mortgages executed by Darshan Singh, one dated the 2nd June 1908, and the other dated the 11th June, 1909 and to the extent of Rs 400 on account of the costs of the declaratory suit and Rs 25 on account of the costs incurred in executing the deed in suit. The total of this sum, therefore, comes to Rs. 800.

The plaintiff-appellant has in his grounds of appeal to this Court admitted his liability to that extent.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and modify the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge to this extent that the deed in suit dated 24th July 1926, executed by Mt Rachhpal Kuar, defendant 2 in favour of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh, defendant 1, shall be declared as binding and operative against the plaintiff-appellant only to the extent indicated above.

The defendant-respondent Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh will bear his own costs in this Court as well as in the Court below but will pay $\frac{3}{4}$th of the costs of the plaintiffs in the Court below and the plaintiff's entire costs of appeal in this Court.

Criminal Revn No 42 of 1928, Decided on 10th July 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 23rd May 1928.

Penal Code, S. 447—Complainant must be in actual physical possession.

Akhlak Husain—for Applicants.

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Rai Bareli, upholding the order of Munshi Ali Husain, Honorary Magistrate of Rae Bareli, dated 10th April 1928, sentencing the applicants Bismillah and Faujdar under S. 447 I. P. C. to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment. I have heard the learned counsel for the applicants, as also the learned Government Pleader at considerable length and perused the evidence on the record. The facts out of which the present application arises are briefly as follows: On 2nd September 1924 Abdul Wahab mortgaged plot 872 and others to Shamsher, brother of the applicants. On 23rd December 1926 Abdul Wahab's cosharers sued for cancellation of the mortgage. On 20th July 1927 their suit was decreed and on 4th October 1927, joint possession of plot 872 and of other plots was given to the complainant, who is the agent of the cosharers of Abdul Wahab. A fortnight later on 18th October 1927 the complainant Mashadi Husain brought the present complaint under S. 447 against Shamsher, Bismillah, Faujdar and others.

The first point for determination is whether the complainant has proved that he was in actual physical possession of plot 872 in respect of which the applicants are alleged to have committed criminal trespass. There is no evidence on the record to prove that the complainant was in actual physical possession of plot 872. All that has been proved is that the complainant was given joint possession over this plot along with Shamsher the brother of the applicants. The civil suit for damages, to which reference has been made in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, is in respect of plot 746 and it is not shown that this plot 746 is the same as plot 872 in the present case

No useful purpose, therefore, can be served by referring to the pleadings and the judgment in that suit for damages The learned Honorary Magistrate discharged Shamsher of the offence under S. 447. On the same ground that Shamsher was discharged the applicants were also entitled to a discharge or acquittal. Shamsher was in actual possession of plot 872 and through him the applicants were also in possession. The offence of criminal trespass can only be committed against a person who is in actual physical possession of the land in question In the present case the complainant was not in actual physical possession of the land in suit and, therefore, no offence of criminal trespass could possibly be committed against him by the applicants. The learned Government Pleader invited my attention to a ruling of the Allahabad High Court. Ram Prasad v. Emperor (1) That ruling has no applicability to the facts of the present case. In that ruling it was laid down that a joint owner of land who entered upon the land with the intention or knowledge that he was about to do an act which was wrongful to his fellow-owners had committed trespass. Here obviously the intention of the applicants was not to do any wrongful act injurious to their fellow-owners, but was merely to maintain their possession undisturbed. A person who is in joint possession, if he wishes to have actual possession, has got his remedy by bringing a suit for actual partition The complainant instead of suing for partition and actual possession decided to to take forcible possession of the plot in suit No. 872 by arbitrarily dispossessing the applicants. It is not the applicants who are at fault but the complainant in the present case The ruling reported in Sarbadan Singh v. Emperor (2) has also no applicability to the facts of the present case. The complainant not being in actual possession of the plot has no right to assert actual possession by show of force. Shamsher's mortgage had only been cancelled to this extent that the complainant was given a decree for joint possession along with Shamsher. The ruling in Somadurai Mudaliar, In re (3) has also got no applicability to the facts of the present case.

For the reasons given above I allow this application for revision, set aside the judgments of the lower Court and acquit the applicants of the offence charged. The applicants are on bail. Their bail bonds are cancelled

Second Rent Appeal No. 39 of 1928, Decided on 11th September 1928, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 19th March 1928.

Landlord and Tenant—Adverse possession —Entry as tenants bila faisla is inconsistent with adverse possession—Mere possession for long time or non-payment of rent cannot establish adverse possession.

The entry in village papers of the defendants as tenants bila faisla is inconsistent with their possession being adverse. These entries must be presumed to be correct unless they are rebutted. The mere fact that the defendants have been in possession for a long time or that they had not paid any rent for the land cannot establish title by adverse possession: A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 442; 8 O. L. J. 495, Ref. [P 371 C 2]

H. N. Misra—for Appellant.

H. Husain—for Respondent.

Judgment.—These are three appeals arising out of suits for arrears of rent and ejectment under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act. The defence raised in all the suits was that the defendants had acquired proprietary title by adverse possession extending to a period of over 12 years. The trial Court held that as the case involved a bona fide dispute regarding a question of title the revenue Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under S 127 and on this preliminary ground dismissed the suit. On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda has disagreed with the opinion of the trial Court. He has, therefore, set aside the order of the first Court and remanded the case to the Court for trial according to law.

Two contentions have been urged before me in support of the appeal The first is that the revenue Courts have no jurisdiction under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, to determine questions of disputed title between persons who are bona fide claimants to the same land It is urged that if a defendant in a suit under S 127 sets up a proprietary title to the land and if the Court is satisfied that such claim is made bona fide, it will at once oust the jurisdiction of the revenue Courts to proceed with the suit and reliance has been placed on two decisions of the Board of Revenue, namely, Nisar Ali v. Megh (1) and Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh v. Shafiq-uz-zaman (2), in support of this contention If the Board of Revenue mean to lay down that the mere fact of a question of title being raised in defence in such suits is sufficient to exclude the jurisdiction of the revenue Courts if the claim is a bona fide one, I feel very doubtful of the soundness of this view In my opinion it is the duty of revenue Courts to decide every question raised before them, an adjudication of which is necessary for the complete decision of the suit even though the decision of the revenue Courts may not be final or binding upon the parties in the civil Court. I am supported in this view by the decision of Mr. (Now Sir Edward) Chamier in Sheikh Talib Ali v. Basant Rai (3). However, if it were necessary for me to arrive at a definite decision on this question in the present case I should have preferred to refer this matter to a Bench of two Judges but I consider it unnecessary to do so in view of the provisions of S 124-C, Oudh Rent Act This section provides that in a case like the present if the appellate Court has before it all materials necessary for the determination of the suit it shall dispose of the appeal as if the suit had been instituted in the right Court. There was a distinct issue framed in the case regarding the defendants having acquired ownership by adverse proprietary possession for over 12 years. The parties had full opportunity to adduce all the evidence which they wished to produce on this issue. The lower appellate Court had referred to the evidence bearing on this question. I am not prepared to say that the evidence referred to by the lower appellate Court does not afford sufficient material for the determination of the suit on the merits. For these reasons I think that the question of jurisdiction raised by the learned counsel for the defendants-appellants cannot help him in view of the provisions of S. 124-C, Oudh Rent Act.

The next contention is regarding the finding of the lower appellate Court about the defendant being within the meaning of S. 127, Oudh Rent Act. The lower appellate Court has relied on the evidence of the patwari, the statement of Sheo Narain (D. W. 5) and the entries in the village papers in support of its finding. I am not prepared to attach much importance to the statement of Sheo Narain (D. W. 5). It can be explained as meaning that he had been in possession of the land in suit as a proprietor believing it to be included in his thok. But apart from his statement I think the statement of the patwari and the entries in the village papers are quite sufficient to justify the finding arrived at by the learned Additional District Judge. The patwari deposed that in this village there are thoks and pattis of which the land and revenue are quite separate. The village khasras support the statement of the patwari. Thus the finding of the lower appellate Court, being supported by legal evidence, cannot be questioned in second appeal There is ample authority for the view taken by the learned Additional District Judge that the entry of the defendants as tenants bila faisla is inconsistent with their possession being adverse: see Nageshar Singh v. Baldeo Singh (4) and Durga v Rampadarath (5) These entries must be presumed to be correct unless they are rebutted. Nothing has been shown to me in rebuttal of these entries The mere fact that they have been in possession for a long time or that they had not paid any rent for the land cannot establish title by adverse possession.

"a person taking or retaining possession of the land without being entitled to such possession"

For the above reasons I uphold the finding of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the appeals with costs

Judgment—This suit arises out of insolvency proceedings. One Chaudhri Rasul Bakhsh presented his application to the Court of the Additional District Judge of Lucknow at Bara Banki for being declared an insolvent. The application was presented on 3rd March 1928. Along with the application the insolvent gave a list containing his debts, which according to that list amount to Rs 9,679. He has also attached along with his application another list containing moveable and immovable property of which he alleged that he was possessed. The value of the said property as given in the list amounts to Rs 271-8.

There are three creditors whom he made parties to this application, namely, Gulab Rai, Balgovind and Guley Ram.

The debts entered in the list attached to the petition are alleged to be in favour of these creditors. A notice of application was issued to all the creditors who were present in his Court on 13th April 1928. On that date the applicant entered into the witness-box and deposed on oath that he was indebted to the extent of about Rs 10,000 and was unable to pay his debts as his assets were not worth more than Rs 250. He also stated that the list of the debts and of the assets filed by him was a correct one and that he had not concealed any property. The petitioner was cross-examined on behalf of the creditors and certain facts were elicited from the statement of the insolvent. The learned Additional District Judge on the strength of those statements has held that the application presented by the applicant was not a bona fide one nor was he satisfied that the applicant was unable to pay his debts.

Against that order the insolvent has lodged the present appeal. On behalf of the insolvent it is contended that the finding of the learned Additional District Judge that he (the insolvent) was not unable to pay his debts was not justified on the evidence on the record. It was further urged on his behalf that if the applicant had concealed any property it was open to the Court to consider this matter at a later stage when the insolvent applied for a discharge under S 42, Prov Ins. Act (Act 5 of 1920)

After hearing the parties in this case we are of opinion that the materials placed before the learned Additional District Judge were not enough to let him come to the conclusion that it was established that applicant was unable to pay his debts At this stage the enquiry should be confined in our opinion, merely to the question whether the insolvent was unable to pay his debts. This could very well be ascertained by finding out what the assets of the insolvent are and what are his debts. If the debts entered in the list attached to the application are not bogus debts and if it is found that the property which the insolvent is now possessed of is not enough to pay his debts he would clearly be entitled to present the application for insolvency under S. 10 and the Court will be bound to adjudicate him as insolvent under S. 25, Prov. Ins. Act. If it is brought to the notice of the Court that the insolvent has transferred some property with the intention of defeating the creditors the Court can direct the receiver to take possession of such property and declare the transfer to be bad and not binding on the creditors under S 53 of the said Act. What we mean to suggest is that this would be a matter relevant to the proceedings taken after the insolvent has been adjudged as such and not at the initial stage at which the proceedings were in the present case before the learned Additional District Judge

We are fortified in this view of law by the decision of their Lordships of the Bombay High Court reported in the case of the Laxmi Bank, Ltd Poona v. Ram Chandra (1) and by a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhatrapat Singh v. Kharag Singh (2)

We are fully aware that these cases were decided under the old Act but they are a useful guide in determining the question as to what would be the proper stage at which the fraudulent acts of insolvent and the mala fide transfers made by him are to be enquired into by the Court It appears to us that the intention of the legislature in adding the words "unless he is unable to pay his debts" in S 10, Prov. Ins. Act (Act 5 of 1920) was that if a Court found that a debtor had failed to establish this preliminary intention he could not be held to be insolvent and, therefore, was not entitled to be adjudged as such. It must, however, be borne in mind that in arriving at a conclusion regarding this matter it would not be relevant to consider whether a particular transfer made by the insolvent was bona fide or otherwise. This, as we have remarked above, must be reserved for a subsequent stage. We have examined the record in this case and find that apart from the examination of the insolvent no particular opportunity was given to any of the creditors to prove that the insolvent was really in a position to pay his debts. Nor was one given to the insolvent to show what the real nature of his position in regard to the alleged brick kiln in respect of which he was alleged to have received some money actually was. In the ends of justice we, therefore, think it necessary that in order to arrive at a correct conclusion regarding this matter of the inability of the insolvent to pay his debts, the learned Additional District Judge must give a full opportunity to the insolvent and to the creditors named in the application to prove their respective cases. If on an enquiry the learned Additional District Judge arrives at the conclusion that the insolvent is unable to pay his debts he should adjudicate him as such, otherwise he would be justified in dismissing his application on the ground that he had failed to establish the preliminary condition We, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Additional District Judge dated 13th April 1928 by which he dismissed the applicant's application for insolvency and direct that the said application be again restored to its original number and decide in accordance with law as indicated above. The costs of these proceedings will be the costs in the case.

(1) A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 80=46 Bom. 757.
(2) A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 64 = 44 Cal. 535 = 44 I. A. 11 (P.C.).

Second Appeal No. 89 of 1926, Decided on 23rd August 1928, from decree of Addl Sub-Judge, Gonda, D/- 10th December 1927.

(a) Family arrangement—True test regarding validity—Claims adjudged and disputes settled is sufficient consideration for upholding the family settlement.

It is a wrong principle of law to test the validity of the agreement by having recourse to the expedient of finding out whether the claims of the parties to the agreement were good. The true test is whether the parties had laid any claim against each other and whether those claims had been settled by virtue of the agreement termed the "family settlement." If a settlement was arrived at, the strength or validity of the claims of the parties has nothing to do with the validity of the family settlement. The fact that the claims of the parties had been adjudged and that the disputes between them had been settled would amount to a sufficient consideration for the upholding of the family settlement *A. Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents in pursuance of an order of the Court of Revenue in proceedings for partition instituted on an application for partition filed by them. The dispute relates to one hundred bighas kham of land situate in village Ramanpur, District Gonda. In the partition proceedings the plaintiffs claimed this land as their exclusive property and the revenue Court had directed them to bring a suit in the civil Court for a declaration of their exclusive rights in respect of the said land. The plaintiffs have now brought the present suit for the purpose. Their allegation is to the effect that custom of haq jethansi prevails among the Bandhalgoti Thakurs and that at the time of the preparation and verification of the wajib-ul-arz by the Regular Settlement Court, Hardat Singh, father of defendant-appellant Sital Singh had agreed to give to their great-grandfather Drigbijai Singh the said one hundred bighas kham as his haq jethansi. They alleged that the agreement arrived at before the Settlement Court was of the nature of a family settlement and had been subsequently given effect to by the ancestors of the defendants and that the said land had been in their possession continuously since that time. They further alleged that their right to this haq jethansi in respect of the one hundred bighas land had been recognized in a will executed by Jagat Singh, their grandfather, by means of which he had given the said land exclusively to the plaintiffs and apportioned the rest of the land among them and the defendants. The defendants contested the suit and contended in defence that no such custom prevailed in the family and that the agreement arrived at between the parties at the time of the regular settlement was inoperative since it was without any consideration and no suit could now lie for enforcing the said agreement. They also contended that the agreement being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence and could not be the basis of the suit.

We might mention here that the plea of custom was given up by the plaintiffs during the trial of the case and no issue was, therefore, framed in respect thereof. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda by his decree dated 4th March 1926 held that the agreement was invalid and inoperative in law and therefore dismissed the suit The learned Additional District Judge of Gonda by his decree dated 10th December 1927 has reversed the finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge and has held that the agreement arrived at between the parties at the time of the settlement was of the nature of a family settlement and did not therefore require any registration He also held that the agreement had been acted upon by the parties and it was now too late for the defendants to challenge its validity On this view of the case he decreed the plaintiffs' suit and granted them the declaration asked for. The defendants have now appealed to this Court and it is now again argued on their behalf that the agreement is invalid and inoperative in law and the plaintiffs' case, having been exclusively based on it, should be dismissed

We now proceed to consider how far this contention raised on behalf of the defendants-appellants can be upheld.

The agreement is embodied in the wajib-ul-arz of village Ramanpur, which is on the record of the case and which is Ex 11 The wajib-ul-arz mentions it clearly that Amar Singh the eldest son of Pirthipal Singh was to obtain haq jethansi in the village Riwan, and that Jai Narain, son of Baiju Singh was to get a similar haq jethansi against his brother, Sheo Ratan Singh. The document then proceeds to state that Hardat Singh, father of Sital Singh, the defendant-appellant, had willingly agreed to give one hundred bighas kham as haq jethansi to his elder brother, Drigbijai Singh in village Ramanpur. This wajib-ul-arz was verified by the cosharers of the village and purports to bear the signatures of both Hardat Singh and Drigbijai Singh The verification clause has been filed in the case and is Ex 13. This leaves no doubt in our mind that the agreement was complete and fully accepted both by Hardat Singh and Drigbijai Singh. We are further of opinion that it operates as a family settlement. It was argued that there was no consideration for this agreement since the plaintiffs had given up the plea relating to the custom of haq jethansi, the effect of which was that no such custom had ever existed. Whatever may be the effect of the plaintiff's abandonment of the plea relating to haq jethansi during the course of the trial of the present suit, we cannot ignore the fact that several members belonging to the family of the parties had claimed haq jethansi at the time of the settlement and it had been conceded to them This was in the case of Amar Singh and of Jai Narain Singh If the members of the family came to a settlement among themselves by conceding the right of haq jethansi to such of them as were entitled to it, we are not justified in testing the validity of the agreement on the ground that no such custom had existed since the plaintiffs-respondents have given up the plea regarding the said custom in the present case. The plaintiffs might have thought it proper to give up the plea of the said custom thinking that their case, as it rested on the family settlement, was quite a good case and could succeed apart from the question of custom itself.

It has been pointed out in several cases decided by the various High Courts in India that it is a wrong principle of law to test the validity of an agreement by having recourse to the expedient of finding out whether the claims of the parties to that agreement were good. The true test is whether the parties had laid any claim against each other and whether those claims had been settled by virtue of the agreement termed the "family settlement." If a settlement was arrived at, the strength or validity of the claims of the parties had nothing to do with the validity of the family settlement. The fact that the claims of the parties had been adjusted and that the disputes between them had been settled, would amount to a sufficient consideration for the upholding of the family settlement. We may refer in this connexion to a decision of a Bench of this Court decided by Stuart, C J., and Hasan, J., reported in the case of Mahabir v Dwarka (1). The principle of law laid down in that case is clear and we are in full agreement with the view of law taken in that case. It therefore appears to us that the family settlement was a good agreement binding upon the parties to this case who claim either under Hardat Singh or under Drigbijai Singh both of whom were parties to the original agreement. As to the argument that the agreement is bad on the ground that it was not registered we may point out that an agreement of the nature of a family arrangement does not require either writing or registration. This principle has been followed both by the Allahabad High Court and the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in a series of cases. It would be sufficient for our purposes to refer to a decision by one of us which is reported in the case of Tej Bahadur Khan v. Nakku Khan (2), where all the cases on the subject have been discussed We are in entire agreement with the view taken in that case, and are therefore of opinion that the family settlement embodied in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of the regular settlement is operative and binding in spite of the fact that it was not registered (The judgment then discussed other transactions and holding that the agreement was given effect to, proceeded.) We would like to point out that the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (3) and in Malraju Lakshmi Venkayyamma v. Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao (4) applies fully to the facts of the present case In Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (3) a compromise was made in a suit in 1873 by virtue of which certain properties had been allotted to a particular party. The agreement, however, was not registered nor had a transfer been executed in his favour as contemplated by the compromise. It was, however, found that the parties had acted upon the terms of the compromise and had in effect arranged their rights in the property in terms of the compromise Lord Shaw delivering the judgment of their Lordships observed as follows .

"Their Lordships, in view of the argument strongly pressed upon them, think it right further to say that even although the razinama and the decree taken together were considered to be defective or inchoate as elements making up a final and validly concluded agreement for the extinction of the equity of redemption, the actings of parties have been such as to supply all such defects. * * * * * * * From these authorities one dictum quoted by Lord Selborne from Sir John Strange (1 Ves. Sen. 441) may be here repeated . "If confessed or in part carried into execution it will be binding on the parties, and carried into further execution as such, in equity." Their Lordships do not think the law in India is inconsistent with these principles. On the contrary it follows them."

In Malraju Lakshmi Venkayyamma v. Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao (4) the facts were that upon the marriage of the appellant in that case in 1886 her aunt, a wealthy Hindu widow with whom she had resided since childhood had promised that if the appellant and her husband would reside with her she would purchase unspecified immovable property for the appellant. The appellant and her husband accordingly resided with the aunt. In 1893 the aunt purchased a village in her own name, but, as she stated, for the appellant. Dissatisfaction subsequently arose because the village was not transferred to the appellant and the appellant and her husband consequently ceased to reside with the aunt. In October 1893 the aunt again wrote to the appellant stating that the village had been purchased for her and would be transferred to her The appellant and her husband thereafter resided with the aunt until the aunt's death in 1899. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the letter of October 1893 constituted a binding contract by the aunt and the appellant was entitled to possession of the village. It was observed by their Lordships in this case that after the terms had been acted upon, the parties could not avail themselves of locus penitentiæ or the power of resiling from the agreement Their Lordships followed Mahomed Musa's case quoted above The principle laid down by their Lordships in the cases quoted above has been followed in this Court in two cases reported in Bismilla Begam v Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan (5) and in Udairaj Singh v. Shankar Singh (6). therefore of opinion that in accordance with the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the above cases it is no more open to the appellants to raise any question regarding the validity or otherwise of the agreement recorded in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of the regular settlement, and that the plaintiffs' case as based on that agreement has been rightly decreed by the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Special Manager, Court of Wards, Ajodhya Estate, Gonda—Respondent.

Second Rent Appeal No. 27 of 1928, Decided on 7th November 1928, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 2nd February 1929.

(a) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1866), S. 127—Appeal.

There is no appeal against an order of ejectment under S. 127 following a decree for arrears of rent. [P 377 C 2]

(b) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), S 108 (2)—Person declared tenant by decision of competent Court must be sued for rent as tenant under S. 108 (2) as also in suit under S 127—He cannot be ejected on decree for rent.

Where in the course of a judgment of a competent Court a person is described as a tenant and declared liable to pay certain sums by way of rent, he should be treated as a tenant and not a trespasser. He should be sued for rent as tenant under S. 109 (2) and not trespasser who should be held to have been treated as tenants for the purpose of the suit under S, 127 and no order of ejectment can follow as a consequence of a decree for rent. [P 378 C 1]

K. N. Chak and H D. Chandra—for Appellant,

H. K. Ghosh—for Respondent.

The appeal was originally heard by Srivastava, J., who referred it for decision by a Bench of two Judges by his order reproduced below.

Srivastava, J.—All these four appeals arise out of suits for arrears of rent under S. 108, Cl. (2), Oudh Rent Act, brought by the Special Manager of the Court of Wards of the Ajudhia Estate against certain tenants The learned Additional District Judge of Gonda has disposed of the appeals out of which Rent Appeals Nos. 27 to 29 of 1926 arise by one judgment and the appeal out of which Rent Appeal No. 30 of 1928, arises by a separate judgment but the parties before me are agreed that the points involved in all the appeals are common and that they can be disposed of together.

The relevant facts are that notices of ejectment were issued by the Court of Wards against the defendants-appellants in 1915 The tenants sued to contest the notice of ejectment but were unsuccessful and the Court of Wards obtained delivery of possession against them but as a matter of fact the tenants appear to have continued in possession in spite of the formal delivery of possession. In 1917 the Court of Wards instituted suits against them in the civil Court for possession of part of the lands which formed the subject of the notices of ejectment and dakhal dahani of 1915. These suits resulted in a compromise under which the tenants were allowed to retain possession of the lands in dispute together with certain other lands at a rent specified in the compromise. In 1918 the Court of Wards instituted two suits against each of the tenants one for getting them to execute a qabuliat in pursuance of the compromise mentioned above and the other for arrears of rent. The suits for compulsory execution of qabuliats were eventually dismissed by the Commissioner whose order was upheld by the Board of Revenue The suits for arrears of rent were decreed.

In 1926 the present suits were instituted for arrears of rent for the years 1330 to 1333 Fasli under S 108, Cl (2), Oudh Rent Act. These suits were decreed by the Court of the Assistant Collector. A few days later applications were made by the Court of Wards to the Assistant Collector under Cl. 2, S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, praying for a decree for ejectment of the defendants-tenants from the land in their possession. The applications were granted the same day on which they were made Subsequently the defendants appealed against the decrees passed by the Assistant Collector. The main point argued before the lower appellate Court in support of the appeals was that the defendants were holding the land with consent of the Court of Wards and, therefore, they were not liable to ejectment under S. 127. The learned Additional District Judge repelled the contention and dismissed the appeals. The defendants have come to this Court in second appeal.

The initial difficulty in the way of the appellants strikes me to be regarding their right to contest the validity of the order for ejectment in the appeals before the Additional District Judge and this Court. S. 119, Oudh Rent Act, allows appeals from decree passed by an Assistant Collector to the District Judge and to this Court only in suits of the description specified in the section. In the present case appeals were filed in the Court of the District Judge on the ground that the suits were under S. 108, Cl (2). But it is admitted by the appellants that they do not dispute their liability to pay rent nor do they question the amount of rent which has been decreed against them Their whole grievance is against the ejectment. The question whether the order for ejectment passed by the Assistant Collector was appealable to the District Judge or whether an appeal against it should have been made to the Commissioner is one not free from difficulty. The parties are unable to cite any authority on the point. While on the one hand the policy of the Oudh Rent Act seems to be that appeals in matters of ejectment should lie to the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue yet on the other hand the matter deserving of consideration is that the proceedings in ejectment under Cl. (2), S. 127, Oudh Rent Act are only in the nature of a consequential relief following the decree for arrears of rent which forms the real substance of the suit. It would lead to some anomaly and possible confusion for the forum of appeals against one part of the decision relating to arrears of rent being different from the forum regarding appeals against orders relating to ejectment passed in the same suit. As the question is one of considerable importance on which there is no authority one way or the other, I consider it desirable that the appeals should be heard by a Bench of two Judges and I certify accordingly.

Stuart, C. J. and Pullan, J.—These four rent appeals have been referred to a Bench by an order of a single Judge of this Court mainly on the ground that there has been no decision by this Court as to whether an appeal raising the question of ejectment under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, lies to a revenue or a civil Court. We have already expressed our opinion on this question in Ram Bahadur Singh v. Dharam Raj Singh (1). Generally speaking, there is no appeal against an order of ejectment under S 127 because this order merely follows upon a decree for arrears of rent in the case of a person who although not a tenant has been treated as a tenant under the first clause of S. 127. In the present case the appellants have been treated by the Courts below as trespassers and the Courts below have, therefore, dealt with them under S 127 and after passing a decree for arrears of rent have ordered that on the application of the plaintiff, the defendants will be ejected from the land This is a case in which the plaintiff is the Court of Wards of this province representing the Ajudhya Estate and we are constrained to remark that the plaints in these suits have not been drawn up in a manner which gives the Court a clear idea of the facts in issue.

It appears that since the years 1915 there has been litigation off and on between the Court of Wards on the one side and the appellants on the other. In that year notice of ejectment was served on these persons namely, Mahabir, Mata Din, Chandrika and Ram Das in respect of 218 plots. Their ejectment was ordered by the Assistant Collector and his order was upheld both by the Commissioner and by the Board of Revenue. But both the higher Courts made observations in their judgments to the effect that the Court of Wards would be better advised to accept these persons as tenants. Probably as the result of these remarks the appellants refused to vacate the land although dakhal dehani wss obtained and in 1917 the Court of Wards sued them in the civil Court for ejectment as trespassers These suits resulted in a compromise according to the terms of which the land in suit, along with other land would be given on lease to the defendants Apparently no leases were executed and there was further litigation both in the revenue and civil Courts. There is a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner dated 20th January 1921 in which it appears that the Court considered the question as to whether the enhancement of rent sanctioned by the compromises which must be the compromises of 1917 was valid. In the course of the judgment these persons were referred to as tenants in the land which is described as the bila faisla land and it is also stated that they have been reinstated in some other portions of the holding As a result they were declared liable to pay certain sums by way of rent. The net result of this decision seems to be that the present appellants have been treated by the Courts as being tenants and not as trespassers We cannot find a way to differentiate between the numbers which were contained in the compromises and the number which appear in the plaints in the present suit nor can we distinguish either of them from the numbers in regard to which order of ejectment was served in the year 1915. As far as we can see the holdings have been all along substantially the same although there may have been certain differences in detail. In our opinion it was for the plaintiff to have shown us clearly how he maintained that the defendants were trespassers in one part of the holding and tenants in another and this the plaintiff-respondent has failed to do. In our opinion these persons should have been treated as tenants It is not for us to say to what class of tenants they belong but they were tenants who should have been sued for rent under S. 108, Cl. (2) and not trespassers who should be held to have been treated as tenants for the purpose of the suits by the plaintiff under S. 127 This being so no order of ejectment could follow as a consequence of the decree for arrears of rent and the decrees of the Courts below should be held to be decrees for arrears of rent only

The result is that we allow these appeals to the extent prayed for, namely that the decrees of the Courts below shall read as decrees for arrears of rent only and there shall be no order for ejectment. The appellants in each case will get their costs throughout.

Second Rent Appeal No. 58 of 1928, Decided on 5th December 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Sitapur, D/- 21st August 1928

(a) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1866), S. 127—S. 127 applies only when person in possession cannot show himself to be a bona fide tenant — Another person claiming to be owner—Person in possession as tenant — S. 127 does not apply.

Where parties claim to be entitled to a particular land and one of them is in actual possession of the same, the other party cannot be allowed to take possession of that land by bringing a suit for arrears of rent against the tenant in actual occupation of the land under S. 127 The section was never intended by the legislature to cover such a case. That provision of law is only intended to cover a case where the person cannot show himself to be a bona fide claimant of the land in dispute and where his possession must be held to be that of a pure trespasser. In that case it would be upon the landlord to either sue the person in possession for ejectment in the civil Court or to treat him as tenant and sue him for arrears of rent in the revenue Court. Where, however, another person claims to be the owner of the land and has been in possession thereof for a long time and a tenant is in occupation of that land on his behalf, proceedings under S. 127 cannot be availed of in order to obtain possession of the same land . *A. The test of the bona fides of a tenant when he pays rent to a particular person is whether he has paid rent to him before or not. If he paid rent to a person to whom he has been paying rent hitherto, his good faith will be considered to have been established and he cannot be held to be liable to pay rent again to another person who lays claim to the said land. [P 380 C 1]

Radha Krishna—for Appellant.

Hyder Husain and B. K Bhargava—for Respondents.

Judgment.—These four appeals arise out of four suits brought by the plaintiff-appellant Mt. Umrai Kuar for arrears of rent against the defendants-respondents.

The facts of the case are that there are two villages named Dulapur and Khairandeshnagar, situate in district Sitapur, adjacent to each other. Village Dulapur belongs to the plaintiff-appellant and village Khairandeshnagar belongs to one Babu Krishna Kumar who is also a respondent before me In 1926 the Assistant Record Officer of Sitapur had the demarcation effected and included some small pieces of land, in respect of which rent is claimed in the four suits, within the boundary of village Dulapur It is on the basis of this order of demarcation that the plaintiff-appellant claims these lands as appertaining to her village Dulapur and has in that capacity brought the present suits for arrears of rent under S 127, Oudh Rent Act, against the defendants-respondents in the four appeals These respondents are in actual cultivation of those pieces of land The rent is claimed in respect of the year 1335 Fasli

The defence put forward by the tenants in these cases is the same and it is to the effect that the lands belong to Babu Krishna Kumar who is the zamindar of Khairandeshnagar and they have paid rent to him for the year in dispute They further allege that they have been doing so for a long time past and are not liable to pay the arrears of rent claimed by the plaintiff. Babu Krishna Kumar who is the zamindar of the contiguous village of Khairandeshnagar was made a party to these suits.

The learned Assistant Collector who tried the case held that the demarcation proceedings effected by the Assistant Record Officer were binding on the parties and in view of those proceedings the defendants could not be heard to say that the land appertained to any village other than Dulapur. He also held that in those circumstances the payment of rent to Babu Krishna Kumar by the tenants could not be considered to be bona fide. Consequently the suits brought by the plaintiff were decreed.

On appeal the learned District Judge has taken a different view. He has held that at the time the Assistant Record Officer took the demarcation proceeding and included the land in dispute in the village Dulapur he made it quite clear by his order that he did not in any way purport to interfere with possession. He was also of opinion that S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, was not intended to cover such cases. He therefore allowed the appeals and dismissed the suits brought by the plaintiff, Mt. Umrai.

In second appeal it is contended before me by the plaintiff-appellant that she is entitled to get decrees for arrears of rent inasmuch as the order passed by the Assistant Record Officer in the demarcation proceedings is binding upon the zamindars of the two contiguous villages until it is set aside by the civil Court.

After hearing the arguments in this case I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the learned District Judge dismissing the four suits must be maintained and that these appeals should be dismissed.

It appears to me after reading the order of the Assistant Record Officer, dated 30th October 1926 that the said Officer did not intend to disturb the possession of either party He expressly stated in his order that regarding the fact of possession he was not going to pass any order nor was he in any way concerned with it Under those circumstances the force of the order is altogether destroyed so far as the question of possession is concerned. The order as to demarcation passed by the Assistant Record Officer must be read subject to this condition and if this is done, the appellant in my opinion has no case. These small pieces of land may have been shown in the map of the village Dulapur but beyond this no other effect can be given to the order of the Assistant Record Officer. The argument, therefore, based on S 44, U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, has no force.

I may also point out that I have always been of opinion that in cases like this S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, has no application Where parties claim to be entitled to a particular land and one of them is in actual possession thereof the other party cannot be allowed to take possession of that land by bringing a suit for arrears of rent against the tenant in actual occupation of the land under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act. That section was never intended by the legislature to cover such a case In my opinion that provision of law is only intended to cover a case where the person cannot show himself to be a bona fide claimant of the land in dispute and where his possession must be held to be that of a pure trespasser. In that case it would be open to the landlord to either sue the person in possession for ejectment in the civil Court or to treat him as a tenant and to sue him for arrears of rent in the revenue Court. Where, however, another person claims to be the owner of the land and has been in possession thereof for a long time and a tenant is in occupation of that land on his behalf proceeding under S. 127 cannot in my opinion be availed of in order to obtain possession of the said land. I am supported in this view by a recent decision of this Court reported in Ishar Din v. Sambhu Dat (1).

I find from the evidence of the patwari of the village who was examined in this case on behalf of the defendants that the latter have been paying rents of the land in dispute to Babu Krishna Kumar respondent 2 for the last 14 years during the time he has been patwari of the village. There can therefore be no doubt that the defendants as tenants of the land in dispute were justified in making payments to Babu Krishna Kumar The test of the bona fides of a tenant when he pays rent to a particular person is whether he has paid rent to him before or not. If he has paid rent to a person to whom he has been paying rent hitherto, his good faith will in my opinion be considered to have been established and he cannot be held to be liable to pay rent again to another person who lays claim to the said land.

I am of opinion that the plaintiff-appellant must if she wishes to get possession of these lands, establish her claim, if so advised, in the civil Courts. Until, however, that is done she cannot be allowed to secure her object by bringing a suit under S 127, Oudh Rent Act.

All the four appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 322 of 1928, Decided on 8th November 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, D/- 19th July 1928.

Wajib-ul-arz—Construction.

Where a clause in the wajib-ul-arz provides that 'no tenant grove-holder can plant new trees after the trees in the grove have been cut or fallen down", it means that the tenant cannot in fact plant any new trees at all without the permission of the taluqdar.

[P 380 C 2, P 381 C 1]

K. P. Misra and B. Singh Paul—for Appellants.

M. Wasim—for Respondent.

Judgment—This is a second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki modifying the judgment of the Munsif, in a suit brought by a taluqdar for the removal of certain trees from a grove in the possession of the defendants. As the case stands at present the suit has been decreed in respect of 100 trees on No. 746, one tree on No. 744 and 45 trees on 745/2. The main ground of appeal is that plots 74 and 405, on the first of which fresh trees have been planted, are in the ownership of the defendants as landholders and they are not tenant grove-holders The lower Courts went into this point at great length and discussed certain decisions prior to the year 1868, but there was no need for the lower Courts going beyond the first regular settlement and the subsequent entries in the village records. The defendants have always been recorded as tenant grove-holders and that must be taken to be their position in respect of the land in suit. As tenant grove-holders they were bound by the terms of the wajib-ul-arz which lay down definitely the rights of tenant grove-holders in their grove These rights are merely a right to maintain the trees existing and to take their fruits but they cannot cut or sell the trees without paying malikana and they cannot plant new trees to replace those that have fallen unless they have obtained permission of the taluqdar. The object of these clauses in the wajib-ul-arz is clear. It is to enable the taluqdar to obtain possession ultimately of the groves of those persons who do not obtain his permission for planting fresh trees. I cannot read the second clause which runs:

"No one can plant new trees after the trees in the grove have been cut or fallen down."

As meaning that no new trees can be planted after the whole grove has been cleared. Such a clause would be meaningless or at least otiose in view of the subsequent clauses which give the taluqdar absolute right to resume the whole grove-land when it is cleared of trees. This clause clearly means that the tenant cannot replace fallen trees with new ones and so cannot in fact plant any new trees at all without the permission of the taluqdar.

The last question raised is one of limitation. The suit is clearly within limitation on the finding of facts of the Courts below that the trees in suit have been planted within two years of the institution of the suit. There is only one point in which the lower appellate Court appears to have gone wrong; that is, in granting a decree for possession of the remaining portion of plot 746 which is not occupied by trees. The mistake appears to have arisen from a misreading of the last clause in the wajib-ul-arz which should run:

"If out of the grove all the trees have been cut or have fallen down and no trees stand, then so much land as becomes vacant can be put under cultivation by the taluqdar or given on rent."

The lower appellate Court appears to have thought that some trees could stand after all the trees had been cut down or had fallen down, but as this is impossible I conclude that the word read as "hon" by the lower appellate Court is "na hen" which appears to be the case from the copy before the Court and I accordingly amend the decree of the lower appellate Court to this extent that possession shall not be given to the taluqdar of any portion of plot 746. No objection is raised to giving of possession of plot 406, and as to the other numbers the only question is whether the trees which have been recently planted should or should not be cut. On this point I uphold the decision of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

(b) Criminal Trial—Opinions of recording Magistrate, on guilty conscience of accused and demeanour are not admissible in Sessions trial.

In a Sessions trial the opinions of the Magistrate who recorded the confession as to his impressions about the demeanour of the accused, that it showed that he had done something wrong or seen something wrong being done, that he was suffering from guilty conscience are not admissible. [P 382 C 2]

Judgment.—Nawab Khan has been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich of an offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. He appeals. The reference in confirmation is also before us The offence of which he was convicted, mas the murder of a Bania called Lachman. Lachman's dead body was discovered on 5th December 1928, lying in an arhar crop some distance from the house in which he resided in the Fakhrpur village. He had disappeared from his home some days before. The medical evidence was unable to discover the cause of his death as the corpse was greatly decomposed before it was seen by the medical officer. Suspicion fell on the appellant. He was arrested on 8th December 1928, and two days afterwards on 10th December 1928, he made a confession before Mr. Bhagwati Prasad, a Magistrate of the First Class of Bahraich. As a result four persons were put on their trial for committing murder and a woman called Haliman was put on her trial under Ss. 201 and 202, I. P. C. Three men and the woman were acquitted The appellant alone was convicted According to his confession he and other persons combined in murdering the deceased man on account of an intrigue which he was carrying on with the woman who has been acquitted. The appellant was clear and distinct in his confession as to what had happened. He gave full details. He stated that the deceased man had been murdered by throttling in the house of the woman and that the dead body had then been placed in a corn bin. After a few days the stench of the corpse was so intense that it had to be removed. He stated that he then with other men had taken away the corpse and thrown it into the place where it was subsequently discovered. The Magistrate who recorded this confession took great care to see that Nawab Khan should not be prejudiced. He kept him in his Court room for an hour after his arrival in the charge of two orderlies. He allowed no police officers to come near. The Magistrate then explained to him clearly that he was not bound to make any confession and that any statement which he would make would be used against him The appellant then made this full and detailed confession. In addition he took the police officer to the house in which the woman Halıman lived and searched in a bin where there was fodder. He produced from the fodder a rag of cloth. The Imperial Serologist found traces of human blood upon this rag. According to the confession this rag was used to gag the deceased at the time of the murder.

The learned counsel for the appellant has pointed out to us that there is nothing in throttling which would ordinarily cause blood to be shed. That is so; but there is nothing incompatible in throttling with blood being shed. The deceased might have bitten his tongue and that could have caused blood to come on the rag. It is impossible to say what happened owing to the decomposition of the corpse but the fact remains that the rag was found and the appellant has to answer the question how did he know that there was a blood stained piece of rag in the fodder in the bin in the woman's house? The confession has been retracted but the appellant has not been able to give any satisfactory reasons as to how he came to make it He stated that the investigating officer kept him seated for four days and beat him. Now it is clear that he was only arrested two days before he made the confession and that he remained in police custody for a very short time being handed over speedily to the jail authorities. When asked to explain how he knew anything about the rag he said that he knew nothing about it and that he had never given it to the Sub-Inspector. Balmakund (P. W. 7) deposed that he was present at the time of the search and that Nawab Khan brought out the rag from the fodder. The investigating officer gave evidence. The appellant did not ask him in cross-examination whether he had or had not beaten him. The appellant produced no witnesses in his defence. There are a few details in the confession which are not shown to be correct. But there is nothing in the evidence to detract from the main details which are to the effect that certain people conspired deliberately to murder the deceased, that they enticed him into a certain place and that there they throttled him, that the corpse was kept for some time in a corn-bin but that when it became very offensive it was taken away and thrown into the place where it was subsequently found.

There are several decisions of this Court which are to the effect that a retracted confession is sufficient for the conviction of person making the confession even although certain parts of the confession are not found to be true. Here we have a clear detailed confession made by a man of 30 years of age. He was warned to be careful. It was explained to him what would be the result Nevertheless he made the confession. We consider that the learned Sessions Judge should not have questioned the Magistrate who wrote the confession as to his impressions. The Magistrate's opinion that the appellant's demeanour showed that he had done something wrong or seen something wrong being done was not admissible and so was the Magistrate's opinion that the appellant was suffering from a guilty conscience. Further the learned Judge should not have stated that in his opinion the appellant looked like a murderer. We have attached no value of any kind to these impressions of the Judge or the Magistrate but on the confession, as it stands, made as it was by an adult man who understood what he was doing, we consider the conviction amply justified. He has been unable to explain this confession away. The discovery of the rag undoubtedly corroborates the confession The murder was on the appellant's own admission a cold-blooded and cowardly one It was premeditated. We accordingly are unable to mitigate the sentence. We dismiss the appeal, uphold the conviction, confirm the sentence and direct that Nawab Khan be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

Revn. Appln. No. 33 of 1928, Decided on 21st November 1928, from order of Sm. Cause Court Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 7th May 1927.

(a) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), S. 108 (a) —Suit against lambardar for illegal realization of rent lies exclusively in revenue Court.

Suit by a tenant against lambarder for the recovery of money illegally and wrongfully realized by him from the tenant on account of land revenue is exclusively cognizable by a revenue Court. [P 383 C 2]

An application for revision should not be entertained when filed after considerable delay unless good cause is shown for delay in filing it. [P 383 C 2]

(c) Jurisdiction — Consent cannot confer, nor can waiver make for defect or lack of jurisdiction—Party to proceeding can challenge it subsequently.

If a decree is passed ex parte by a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it, the defendant, judgment-debtor, can challenge it on the ground that it was passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction. The general principle is that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties and any waiver on their part cannot make for the lack or defect of the jurisdiction: 38 Cal. 639, Rel. on. [P 384 C 1]

Radha Krishna—for Applicant.

Moti Lal Saksena — for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision in a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur for recovery of a sum of Rs. 764 on account of money illegally and wrongfully realized by the defendant for him. The suit was decreed ex parte on 7th May 1927. The defendant failed in getting the decree ex parte set aside and also failed in a declaratory suit brought by him for the purpose of getting a declaration to the effect that the decree passed in this case was without jurisdiction.

It is admitted by the parties in this case that the suit relates to the money illegally and wrongfully realized by the defendant as lambardar from the plaintiff on account of the land revenue and that it is exclusively cognizable by a revenue Court. It is, therefore, clear that the civil Court in this case had no jurisdiction to try the case or to pass a decree for the amount claimed.

It is, however, contended on the other side that the application for revision should not be entertained because it has been filed after the expiration of a year and five months from the date of the decree. Several rulings were quoted before me by the learned advocate for the respondent which go to show that the High Court should not ordinarily interfere in revision when the application is filed after a great delay I am fully alive of this principle and would not have interfered were it not that good cause has been shown for the delay in filing the present application. The cause shown in the case is that soon after the ex parte decree was passed, the defendant tried to get that decree set aside He failed in his attempt. Thereupon he filed a regular suit for a declaration to the effect that the decree was passed without jurisdiction and therefore inoperative and should be set aside. The Courts which tried that case held that although the suit had been filed in a Court without jurisdiction yet because the defendant had absented himself and the decree had been passed ex parte, there was no sufficient ground for the grant of a declaratory relief. After the plaintiff failed in that attempt he has filed the present application for revision. The circumstances are in my opinion sufficient to explain the delay which has occurred in filing the application for revision.

It was also contended on behalf of the respondent that this Court should not interfere in revision unless it was satisfied that injustice had been done in the case. The suit has not been tried out on the merits and there are no materials before me which would satisfy me that the claim of the plaintiff was a good one. Under these circumstances the only remedy left to the applicant is to get a trial of the claim brought against him in the proper Court.

It was further contended on behalf of the respondent that if the defendant-applicant did not appear and the decree passed against him was ex parte he should not now be allowed to challenge the decree on the ground that it was passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction I do not think that this contention has any force It has been often held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that consent of a particular party to a litigation cannot confer jurisdiction upon the Court. In Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (1) it was held that jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a Court by consent of parties and any waiver on their part cannot make up for the lack or the defect of the jurisdiction.

I am therefore, of opinion that this application for revision must be allowed and the plaint should be directed to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. I would not, under the circumstances, make any order as to costs in this case

Inder Kunwar Rani—Respondent.

Second Rent Appeal No. 19 of 1927, Decided on 19th November 1928, against the decree of the 3rd Addl. Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 11th April 1927.

Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1866), S. 7-A—Tenant holding sir land as exproprietary tenant has to pay rent fixed by law.

A person holding sir land of which he is an exproprietary tenant within the meaning of S. 7-A is liable to account for the rent of the same only at the rent fixed by law and that is "four annas in the rupee less than the fair and equitable rate payable by statutory tenants for land of the same class or classes of soil."

[P 384 C 2]

S. N. Roy—for Appellant.

Rajeshwari Prasad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is the defendant's appeal in a suit by the respondent for his share of profits under Cl. 15, S. 108, Oudh Rent Act, 1886. The defendant is also the lambardar of the village. One of the questions in the case is as to the rate of rent at which the defendant is liable to account in respect of his sir lands which he holds in the character of an exproprietary tenant

The Courts below have assumed that the defendant holds land of that nature and are of opinion that until determination of rent in respect of such lands has taken place in favour of the defendant as an exproprietary tenant of the same he is liable to account for rent at the chauhaddi rate This opinion is clearly erroneous If the defendant holds sir lands of which he is an exproprietary tenant within the meaning of S. 7-A, Oudh Rent Act, he is liable to account for the rent of the same only at the rate fixed by law and that is:

"four annas in the rupee less than the fair and equitable rate payable by statutory tenants for land of the same class or classes of soil."

At the hearing of the appeal a question has arisen as to what land (and the area thereof) is sir land within the meaning of the section just now mentioned. Before us the parties are in controversy on this matter and in the Courts below no finding was recorded. We are, therefore, unable to decide this appeal to-day We accordingly direct the Court of first instance, through the lower appellate Court, to try the issue stated below after admitting relevant evidence

How much land the defendant holds as sir land within the definition of the word 'sir' in any of the paragraph of Cl 17, S. 3, of para. 3, of S 7-A of the same Act ?

The finding arrived at by the Court of first instance will at first be submitted to the lower appellate Court. The lower appellate Court will then after consideration of the merits give its own finding. Ten days after the finding recorded by the lower appellate Court will be allowed to the parties for filing objections. The finding together with the evidence will be returned to this Court on or before 15th April 1923 (Their Lordships then considered the finding and evidence thereon and reduced the decree by Rs. 117).

Order of Reference.

Misra and Srivastava, JJ—This is an application in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C, against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated 10th November 1928 dismissing an application made by the applicant (Mohammad Raza) under Ss 151 and 152, Civil P. C. One Debi (Badri?), Prasad father of Ram Sarup and others (opposite party) brought a suit against Saiyid Ali Haider, Mohammad Raza and others on the basis of a mortgage-deed dated 23rd October 1918, Mohammad Raza was defendant 4 in that suit. The claim was resisted by the defendants including defendant 4 (Mohammed Raza) Defendant 2 was discharged and his name was struck off the plaint

The Court recorded some proceedings on different dates and then two compromises were filed on 28th January 1927. One compromise was filed by the plaintiff and defendant 5. The other compromise purports to be a compromise between the plaintiff and defendants 3 and 4. This is the compromise which we have to consider in this case A decree for sale of the mortgaged property was eventually passed in terms of the compromise against defendants 3 to 5 and ex parte against defendant 6 and against defendant 1 on his admission on 31st January 1927. Though the compromises were filed on 28th January 1927, the decree was passed on 31st January 1927. There is nothing on the record to show why the suit was not disposed of on 28th January 1927, the date on which the compromises were filed. The decree which was passed on 31st January 1927 was a preliminary decree

Ram Sarup and others (sons of Badri Prasad since deceased) applied for a final decree under O. 34, R 5, Sch. 1, Civil P. C., on 17th March 1928 This application was opposed by Mohammad Raza (defendant 4) on the ground that he was no party to the compromise dated 28th January 1927 and that his name had been wrongly entered in the preliminary decree and should not be entered in the final decree. He contended that the decree dated 31st January 1927 was not anyhow binding on him and asked the Court to take action under Ss 151 and 152, Civil P. C The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed defendant 4's application on the ground that it was not maintainable under Ss. 151 and 152, Civil P. C He did not dispose of the application on the merits. The result was that the final decree was passed on 10th November 1928 Mohammad Raza has now applied for revision challenging the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 10th November 1928.

We have examined the record and find that Mohammad Raza defendant 4 was not really a party to the compromise in question. His name was of course noted in the petition of compromise, but the fact is that the compromise was not signed either by him or his pleader or agent on his behalf. Saiyid Zaigham Ali had appeared as pleader for defendants 3 and 4 in that suit, but it is noticeable that he did not sign the compromise in question on behalf of defendant 4. We should like to note also that he had no authority to compromise the suit on behalf of defendant 4 as his vakalatnama did not authorize him to compromise the suit on behalf of defendant 4 and he did not actually compromise the suit on behalf of the said defendant Defendant 4 was not personally present on the date on which the compromise was filed. We regret that the learned Subordinate Judge did not take the trouble of seeing whether the compromise was duly signed by defendant 4 or his duly authorized agent or pleader. He ought to have seen that the compromise was duly signed by or on behalf of defendant 4. The endorsement on the compromise shows that Mr. Zaigham Ali, who had appeared as pleader for defendants 3 and 4 had admitted simply the contents of the compromise, but the admission does not and cannot make the compromise binding on defendant 4 Defendant 4 never authorized Mr. Zaigham Ali to enter into the compromise in question on his behalf. It is quite clear that the compromise is not binding on defendant 4 and the decree which was passed on the compromise is void as to him. Defendant 4 never gave his consent to the compromise in question The question is:

Can defendant 4 now ask the Court to remove his name from the decree or reopen the case so far as he is concerned by making the application under consideration?

There is no doubt that the Court has an inherent power to correct its own proceedings. As pointed out in the case of Devendra Nath v. Ram Rachpal (1), every Court has an inherent power to correct its own proceedings. It can set aside its own decree based on a compromise found to have been filed by a person having no authority to make or present the compromise. It is immaterial whether this power is to be found in S. 151 or S. 153, Civil P. C., or whether it is a power in review. The decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Basangowda Hanmantgowda v. Churchigirigowda Yogandowda (2), was followed in that case. We should like to note that the question of limitation was not considered in those cases. We have sent for the record of the case reported in Devendra Nath v. Ram Rachpal (1). The record shows that the decree in respect of which the application was made under S. 151, Civil P. C. was passed by the District Judge on appeal on 21st January 1925 The application under S 151, Civil P. C, was made on 20th March 1925. The application was thus made in that case within the period of limitation provided for appeal (or review) from the decree passed in that case and the decree had not become final till then.

The respondents' learned counsel contends that the present application for revision is not maintainable as an appeal lies to this Court from the final decree passed by the lower Court in this case. We are not prepared to accept this contention. The learned counsel has referred to S 96, Civil P. C., but the applicant having preferred no appeal from the preliminary decree was precluded under S 97, Civil P C, from disputing its correctness in any appeal which could be preferred from the final decree It appears of course that the applicant could appeal from the preliminary decree as that decree was not passed with his consent, but he failed to do so. The preliminary decree was passed in this case more than two years ago and no appeal was preferred from that decree within the period provided by law. Though the decree in question is void as to the applicant as stated above, but the fact remains that no steps were taken for setting aside that decree before August 1928. Mohammad Raza made his first application under Ss 151, 152, Civil P. C., on 4th August 1928. He thus made his application under Ss. 151 and 152, Civil P. C., long after the period of limitation provided for appealling from the preliminary decree had expired The Court has of course an inherent power to correct its own proceedings, but the question is:

"Has the Court such power to correct its decree which is in conformity with the judgment simply on the application of a party though the decree was appealable but no appeal was preferred from the decree within the period of limitation?"

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 315.

(2) [1910] 34 Bom. 408=5 I. C. 968=12 Bom. L. R. 223.

It was held in the case of Tota Ram v. Panna Lal (3), that the Court cannot ignore the provisions of the law of limitation by appealing to S. 151, Civil P. C

The questions involved in this case are questions of some difficulty and also of importance. We have therefore thought it proper to refer the following questions to a Full Bench of this Court under S. 14 (1), Oudh Courts Act (Act 4 of 1925):

(1) Is it open to a party to a suit to appeal from the decree passed in the suit on the basis of a compromise purporting to be on his behalf when the person verifying or admitting the said compromise had no authority to enter into it on his behalf?

(2) Is it open to such a party in the suit to invoke the inherent power of the Court to get the judgment and the decree amended under Ss. 151, 152 and 153, Civil P. C., so that his name might be removed from the decree after the period of limitation prescribed for appeal or review has expired and the judgment and the decree have thus become final?

Opinion

Stuart, C. J.—The two questions which have been referred to the Full Bench under the provisions of S. 14 of Local Act 4 of 1925 are these:

"(1) Is it open to a party to a suit to appeal from the decree passed in the suit on the basis of a compromise purporting to be on his behalf when the person verifying or admitting the said compromise had no authority to enter into it on his behalf?

(2) Is it open to such a party in the suit to invoke the inherent power of the Court to get the judgment and the decree amended under Ss. 151, 152 and 153, Civil P. C. so that his name might be removed from the decree, after the period of limitation prescribed for appeal or review has expired and the judgment and the decree have thus become final?"

The application under S 151 covers much ground. Before it can be decided it would appear that information should be given to the Bench which at present is not before it. The applicant has not so far filed an affidavit stating when he received information that the preliminary decree had been passed against him and there is need for explanation as to why his counsel agreed to an adjournment for a fortnight in order to discuss an amicable settlement, why he put before the Court the terms of the amicable settlement at which he said both the parties had arrived, why he committed those terms in writing and why he agreed to them on behalf of his client when according to the applicant his counsel never informed him of any of these facts. But I have no difficulty in answering the two questions propounded without going into these matters It is not for this Full Bench to decide on the merits. The merits will be discussed before the Bench which has made the reference My opinion on the points before us is as follows. It is open to a party to a suit to appeal from a decree passed in the suit on the basis of the compromise purporting to be on his behalf on the ground that the person verifying or admitting the compromise had no authority to enter into it on his behalf. In regard to the second question I consider that it is open to a party in a suit to invoke the inherent power of the Court to get the judgment and the decree amended under the provisions of Ss. 151, 152 and 153 of the Code quite apart from the limitation, applicable to the institution of an appeal or a review. He has a right to make the application but it is for the Court to decide whether he has made out a case justifying interference. An unjustified abstention may well be held on the merits to afford sufficient ground for refusing relief. This, however, is a question of merit. He has a right to apply, but it is for the Court to see whether his application deserves consideration

Wazir Hasan, J.—The two questions referred for decision to the Full Bench are as follows:

"(1) Is it open to a party to a suit to appeal from the decree passed in the suit on the basis of a compromise purporting to be on his behalf when the person verifying or admitting the said compromise had no authority to enter into it on his behalf?

(2) Is it open to such a party in the suit to invoke the inherent power of the Court to get the judgment and the decree amended under Ss. 151, 152 and 153, Civil P. C. so that his name might be removed from the decree, after the period of limitation prescribed for appeal or review has expired and the judgment and the decree have thus become final?"

On the first of these questions the argument of the learned counsel for the applicant is that having regard to the provisions of sub-S. 3, S. 96, Civil P. C an appeal from the decree passed in this case being a decree with the consent of the parties was excluded by those provisions The argument in answer is that having regard to the facts which exist behind the decree and the circumstances in which it came to be passed the decree in question in this case must be treated as a decree not passed with the consent of the parties. Speaking for myself I am inclined to accept the argument advanced on behalf of the applicant It is admitted that the decree on the face of it is a decree passed with the consent of the parties. It is true that if we are to enter into the merits of the circumstances in which the decree in question came to be passed it might be found that the decree is a nullity ; but I should think that the proper procedure for discovering the nullity or otherwise will be to initiate proceedings under S 151 or by way of review of judgment But if the decree exfacie is a consent decree it seems to me that an appeal is barred. It appears to me to be wholly immaterial as to whether the decree can be shown by proof of circumstances aliunde to be not a consent decree. But when it is shown, it is only then that it would cease to be a decree without consent. The present proceedings are clearly intended to bring about the last mentioned result. The proceedings may fail or may succeed If they succeed the decree will only then cease to be a consent decree.

In the present case, however, it is not necessary for me to commit myself definitely to the view stated above. I will assume in answering the first question that an appeal could be preferred and would therefore answer that question in the affirmative This answer, however, does not lead me to the conclusion that because a party can get an error in a decree rectified by appealing therefrom and if he does not appeal, his other remedy, if it is open to him under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, must also be shut against him This brings me to answering the second question which again I would answer in the affirmative. The fact that no appeal has been preferred while it could be preferred and the further fact that an appeal, if now preferred, would be barred by limitation are wholly immaterial. Considerations such as these may or may not weigh with the Court when deciding the application on merits. I can well conceive of cases where a Court would be amply justified in correcting its errors in spite of the fact that the same error could have been corrected by the Court of appeal if an appeal had been preferred In this connexion a case where a decree passed by a Court turns out to be a nullity may well be stated as an example. Where a decree is a nullity no proceedings are required to set it aside either by way of an appeal or otherwise : see Khairajmal v Daim (4). Any person may draw the attention of the Court to the error which has resulted in making a decree a nullity and the Court would be well advised in correcting that error even after a lapse of 100 years I am not at all fantastic when I say hundred years I very deliberately use that expression. Time is of no consequence in matters like these I had occasion to decide a similar point in the case of Sheodarshan Singh v. Matadin Singh (5). The question of limitation can only arise in this way. Will an order passed under S. 151, Civil P C. rectifying an error injuriously affect the other party where he has obtained an advantage in his favour by lapse of time If this question is answered in the affirmative that may be a reasonable ground on merits to refuse relief under that section In the present case though the applicant does not state specifically in his application to the Court below the ultimate relief which he claims but obviously he cannot get more than an order setting aside the so-called compromise decree in so far as he is concerned and restoring the suit in which that decree came to be passed for trial de novo on merits as against him. If he were asking for the dismissal of that suit altogether and thus compelling the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for obtaining the same relief and if the Court were of opinion that a fresh suit would be barred by time or otherwise I am quite clear in my mind that such a prayer would be refused. But none of these considerations arise at the present stage of the case As observed by the Hon'ble Chief Judge these matters and matters similar to them are the grounds on which the Court would be justified in basing its opinion when it comes to form it on the merits of the application.

Raza, J —I accept and adopt the judgment of the Hon'ble the Chief Judge and therefore answer both the questions in the affirmative.

Kalap Nath— Defendant — Opposite-Party.

Revn. Appln. No. 49 of 1928, Decided on 19th July 1929, against order of Dist. Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 18th August 1928.

 (a) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), Ss. 108, 119, 119-B and C and 135 (Per Full Bench)— Suit for arrears of rent—Second appeal decided by District Judge—District Judge is not subordinate to Chief Court and no revision lies from his order (Wazir Hasan, J. Contra).

Where a suit for arrears of rent is filed under S. 108 (2) before an Assistant Collector and a second appeal from such suit is filed before the District Judge, the District Judge in such case is not subordinate to the Chief Court and the order of the District Judge in such second appeal is not subject to revision by the Chief Court under S. 115, Civil P. C.: A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 214, Affirmed. [P 390 C 1]

Per Wazir Hasan, J.—The District Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction over appeals under S. 119, Oudh Rent Act is not a Court of Revenue. The District Judge in such cases being Civil Court, his order passed in such appeals is subject to revision by the Chief Court under S. 115, of Civil P. C., [P 391 C 1]

(b) Interpretation of statutes—Exception.

Per Wazir Hasan, J.—It is a well recognized principle of interpretation that an exception does not affect the general rule and it must be confined within its own limits and strictly to the subject matter entrusted within it. [P 392 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 115—Power of revision explained.

Per Wazir Hasan J. — Where there is no right of appeal the High Court's power of interposition is provided by the creation of its revisional jurisdiction and that jurisdiction is extremely narrow and limited. It only arises in cases of an error of a Court below when such error affects its jurisdiction. Such revisional jurisdiction can be destroyed only by an express legislative enactment. [P 393 C 2]

Order of Reference

Wazir Hasan, Ag C. J — This is an application in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., from an order of the District Judge of Fyzabad in the following circumstances.

A suit for recovery of rent under the provisions of S 108, Cl. 2 Oudh Rent Act, 1886, was instituted by the Applicant in the Court of an Assistant Collector of Second Class. The suit was dismissed. On an appeal by the plaintiff the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. From the decree of the Deputy Commissioner the defendant, opposite party, preferred an appeal to the District Judge of the same place. The learned District Judge accepted the appeal, set aside the decree of the Deputy Commissioner and restored the decree of the Court of first instance. As against this decision of the District Judge the present application is preferred.

On behalf of the defendant, opposite party, a preliminary objection has been taken by his learned advocate to the effect that no application for revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. is maintainable for the reason that the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad is not a Court subordinate to the Chief Court in the circumstances of this case. In support of this objection the learned advocate has referred to the decision of a Bench of two learned Judges of this Court in the case of Narayan v. Baldeo Singh (1). This decision was followed by a learned Single Judge in the case of Fateh Bahadur Khan v. Chhotey Khan (2). In the ordinary circumstances I should have followed the decision of the Bench in Narayan v. Baldeo Singh (1) and upheld the objection but I am of opinion that the matter should further be considered by a Full Bench of this Court. Accordingly under S. 14, sub-S (1) Oudh Courts Act, 1925, I refer the following question of law for decision to a Full Bench.

Is the Court of the District Judge in the circumstances of this case subordinate to the Chief Court?

Opinion

Stuart, C. J — The following question has been referred to a Full Bench of this Court for decision :

"Is the Court of the District Judge in the circumstances of this case subordinate to the Chief Court ?"

The circumstances have been set out sufficiently in the referring order. The decision in question is a decision of a District Judge passed in second appeal under the provisions of S. 119, Oudh Rent Act. The Court of the District Judge is under the provisions of this section the final Court of appeal. Under the provisions of S. 3 (1) "Court" means any judicial officer presiding in a Court of revenue for the disposal of matters under this Act. Thus it appears to me that the Court of the District Judge must be considered in this connexion to be a Court of revenue and not a civil Court. This view is strengthened by the fact that in S. 119-C of the same Act it is stated that for the purpose of deciding appeals under this Act a District Judge shall have the powers conferred on a Court by this Act In these circumstances I do not consider that the Court of the District Judge sitting as such Court of appeal is a Court subordinate to the Chief Court within the meaning of S 115, Civil P C It is to be noted that the Chief Court is not here sitting as a Court of revenue It has powers as a Court of revenue under S. 119-C but only for the purpose of deciding appeals. Thus in so far as the Court of the District Judge is concerned in this connexion, it is a revenue Court over which the Chief Court sitting in any capacity has no authority. So the Court is not subordinate to us. These are the views which I have already taken in Narayan v. Baldeo Singh (1) I would answer this reference accordingly.

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 214=3 Luck. 150.
(2) [1928] 5 O. W. N. 457.

Wazir Hasan, J —The circumstances case are as follows :

A suit for arrears of rent was laid by a landlord against his tenant in the Court of an Assistant Collector of Second Class under S. 113, and Cl. (2) S. 108, Oudh Rent Act, 1886 The suit was dismissed. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad. The appeal was allowed and a decree for the recovery of the arrears was passed in favour of the plaintiff Thereupon the defendant preferred a second appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad. The learned District Judge allowed the appeal, set aside the decree of the Deputy Commissioner and restored the decree of the Assistant Collector. The present application for revision challenges the correctness of the decision of the learned Judge on the grounds stated in S 115, Civil P. C. Against this application the argument is that the District Judge in the exercise of his appellate jurisdiction in the present case is not a "Court subordinate to ' this Court. The question, therefore, which has been raised for decision in this reference is :

" Is the Court of the District Judge in the circumstances of this case subordinate to the chief Court ?"

My answer is in the affirmative and my reasons are as follows :

1. Section 115, is a rule of adjective law and is incorporated in the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. For the purpose of determining the question of subordination of Courts in relation to one another recourse must primarily be had to the provisions of the code itself. S 3 of the Code is as follows :

" For the purpose of this code, the District Court is subordinate to the High Court, and every civil Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of Small Causes is subordinate to the High Court and District Court."

I am unable to conceive the possibility of an argument that 'District Judge' used in Cl. (a), S 119 Oudh Rent Act, 1886 is not the same tribunal as " District Court" mentioned in S. 3 Civil P C. This being so, it follows that the Court of District Judge is subordinate to the High Court.

2 "Court" is defined in S. 3, sub-S. (1), Oudh Rent Act, 1886, as follows :

" Court means any judicial officer presiding in a Court of revenue for the disposal of matters under this Act."

This definition is obviously not sufficient in itself and clearly prescribes the necessity for settling the meaning of "a Court of revenue." S. 109 of the same Act is as follows .

" For the purposes of this Act, there shall be five grades of Courts of revenue, namely .

(1) the Assistant Collector of the second class :

(2) The Assistant Collector of the first class.

(3) The Collector ;

(4) The Commissioner ,

(5) The Board."

It would seem to follow, according to my opinion, inevitably from the above enumeration and classification of Courts of revenue that the Court of the District Judge in entertaining an appeal under the provisions of Cl. (a) S. 119 is not a Court of revenue nor is the Chief Court a Court of of revenue when it entertains an appeal from a decree of an Assistant Collector of first class in a suit for arrears of rent under Cl. (b), S. 119 I hold therefore that the District Judge' in entertaining and deciding an appeal under Cl. (a) and the Chief Court under Cl. (b), S. 119, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, are civil Courts and not Courts of revenue. This conclusion is also borne out by the provisions of S 119-A of the same Act. That section is as follows :

"The rules for the time being in force in regard to the time within which appeals from the decrees and orders of civil Courts may be received, and to the manner in which such appeals are heard and determined and to all proceedings which may be had in respect of such appeals, shall be applicable to appeals under this Act to the District Judge or to the Judicial Commissioner."

According to the section just now quoted:

"to the manner in which such appeals are heard and determined and to all proceedings which may be had in respect of such appeals"

the rules applicable are the same as the rules which govern the procedure relating to appeals under the Code of Civil Procedure in the Court of a District Judge or in the Chief Court as the case may be.

It follows that in the matter of procedure under the Rent Act, the Court of the District Judge and the Chief Court are both Courts of civil jurisdiction. Further, S. 135, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, says that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all suits and other proceedings under the same Act. I hold therefore that the rule of procedure as to the revisional jurisdiction of a High Court as enacted in S. 115, Civil P. C, shall be applicable to all proceedings in respect of any appeal decided by a District Judge.

It is said that S. 119-C, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, has the effect of converting the Court of a District Judge and the Chief Court into a Court of Revenue when each Court exercises appellate jurisdiction under the Rent Act respectively. I am unable to accept this argument. S. 119-C is :

"For the purpose of deciding appeals under this Act, a District Judge and the Judicial Commissioner, shall have the powers conferred on a Court by this Act."

This section, to my mind, merely defines the limits within which the appellate jurisdiction would be exercised and has no intention whatsoever of introducing the Court of a District Judge and the Chief Court in the classification of the Courts of Revenue under S 109 already quoted. Instead of making a list of orders and decrees which the Court of a District Judge or the Chief Court may pass in deciding an appeal, the legislature gives by means of this section the same powers to the Court of appeal as it gives in the preceding sections to a Court of Revenue in deciding suits for the cognizance of which they possess exclusive jurisdiction. The provisions of S. 119-C, Oudh Rent Act, really give authority to the Court of appeal to pass such orders as ought to have been passed by the Court or the Courts below which are the Courts of Revenue. The provision is similar to R. 33, O 41, Civil P. C.

3. Section 21, Oudh Courts Act, 1925 is as follows :

"Besides the Chief Court, the Courts of Small Causes established under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and the Courts established under any other enactment for the time being in force, there shall be four grades of civil Courts in Oudh, namely,"

"(1) The Court of the District Judge.
(2) The Court of the Additional Judge.
(3) The Court of the Subordinate Judge.
(4) The Court of the Munsif."

According to this section the Court of a District Judge in Oudh is a civil Court of first grade and according to the same section the Chief Court is a Court apart from the four grades of civil Courts. The implication that it is the superior Court and the other Courts mentioned are subordinate to it is to my mind, necessarily involved in the provisions of the section. If the District Judge into whose Court an appeal under S. 119, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, is permitted is not the same Court of the District Judge as is constituted by S. 21, Oudh Courts Act, then we will be driven to the anamoly that the Court of the District Judge contemplated in S. 119, Oudh Rent Act, exists without any legal sanction for its existence. Further Chap. 3, Oudh Courts Act, 1925, is headed "Subordinate Civil Courts" and S. 21, already quoted, begins with the expression, "Besides the Chief Court." It follows to my mind, that all other Courts enumerated in the said section are Courts subordinate to the Chief Court.

4. That the District Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction over appeals under S. 119, Oudh Rent Act is not a Court of revenue is also clear from the provisions of S. 124 of the same Act. S 124 lays down the general subordination of Courts of revenue. The Subordination is prescribed in the same order in which the Courts of revenue are classified in S 109, of the same Act. The final Court to which other Courts of revenue are declared to be subordinate by S. 124 is the Court of the Board of Revenue In the general scheme of gradation of the revenue Courts as laid down in that section the Court of a District Judge does not find any place. I think, this is so because the Court of a District Judge is not a Court of revenue but is a civil Court and is consequently subordinate to the High Court under S 3, Civil P. C. If this is not so the result will be that the Court of a District Judge functioning as an appellate Court under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act is not subordinate to any Court. Such a result is to my mind unthinkable as having been intended by the legislature.

Under S. 119-B Oudh Rent Act 1886, appeals from the decrees passed under that Act by the Court of a District Judge are allowed to the Chief Court in all cases in which a second appeal is allowed by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. When we look to the phraseology of S 119-B it would appear that that is the general rule. I take it that if there were nothing else it will be agreed that the Court of a District Judge must be held to be a Court subordinate to the Chief Court in those circumstances. The provision in the same section that there shall be no third appeal to the Chief Court from a decree passed by a District Judge as a Court of second appeal is stated in the form of an exception and therefore according to the well recognized principles of interpretation the exception does not affect the general rule. It must be confined within its own limits and strictly to the subject matter embraced within it.

According to S. 119, Oudh Rent Act 1886, it is only in respect of certain classes of suits that a first or a second appeal is permitted to the Court of a District Judge. On a consideration of of the nature of such suits it would appear that they are suits essentially of civil nature involving questions of civil rights. On general principles therefore, it is only right that the Court of a district Judge when functioning as a Court of appeal over such suits should be held to be a Court of civil jurisdiction. This brings me to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nilmoni Singh v. Tara Nath (3). I am of opinion that the decision of the Judicial Committee in that case entirely covers the question now under reference The circumstances of the case were as follows The Deputy Commissioner of Manbhoom passed certain decrees under the Rent Act (10 of 1859). He did so as a rent Court established by the said Act Subsequently under certain orders he transferred his decrees to other districts for execution His order of transfer came under the cognizance of the High Court at Bengal under the provisions of 24 and 25 Victoria, Ch. 104, S 15 Those provisions gave power of superintendence to the High Court over inferior Courts. The High Court held that the decrees in question were decrees of a Court of revenue and that the deputy Commissioner had no authority under any law applicable to rent suits in his district to make the order in question. In the result the Deputy Commissioner's order was set aside by the High Court. On an appeal to Her Majesty in Council the Judicial Committee decided two things, first, that the Court of the Deputy Commissioner was an inferior Court and therefore subject to the power of superintendence vested in the High Court under the Statute mentioned above and, secondly, that the Deputy Commissioner had power to make the order of transfer I will now quote some of the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on the two points decided by them in that case:

> "A question was raised with respect to the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain this question in revision at all. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to say anything upon that point, except that they entirely agree with the view taken by the High Court of their own jurisdiction. Their Lordships then proceeded to decide the second question and in that connexion they notice that by S. 23, paras. 4 and 7, of Act 10 of 1859 all suits for arrears of rent shall be cognizable by the collectors of land revenue, and shall be instituted and tried under the provisions of that Act, and, except in the way of appeal, as provided in this Act, should not be cognizable in any other Court or by any other officer, or in any other manner."

It is apparent to my mind that having regard to the provisions of S. 23, just now adverted to the Court of the Collector was in form a Court of revenue. It was agreed that the Deputy Commissioner had no express power of transfer under the Rent Act 10 of 1859. The argument on behalf of the respondents was that having regard to the provisions of the Rent Act 1859, the Deputy Commissioner in the exercise of his functions as a Court of revenue under that Act was not a civil Court and therefore the provision of the Civil Procedure Code (Act 8 of 1859), S. 284 conferring power of transfer of decrees for execution into another district was not applicable to the Court of the Collector constituted under the Rent Act, 1859. Their Lordships overruled this argument and in doing so made the following observations

(3) [1883] 9 Cal. 295=9 I. A. 174 (P.C.).

"It must be allowed that in those sections (of Act 10 of 1859) there is a certain distinction between the civil Courts there spoken of and the rent Courts established by the Act, and that the civil Courts referred to in S. 77 and the kindred sections mean civil Courts exercising all the powers of civil Courts as distinguished from the rent Courts which only exercise powers over suits of a limited class. In that sense there is a distinction between the terms, but it is entirely another question whether the rent Court does not remain a civil Court in the sense that it is deciding on purely civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights, and whether being a civil Court in that sense, it does not fall within the provisions of Act 8 of 1859. It is hardly necessary to refer to those provisions in detail, because there is no dispute but that, if the rent Court is a civil Court within the Act 8 of 1859, the Collector has under S. 284 the power of transferring his decrees for execution into another District."

In giving reasons for the view that the rent Court is a civil Court within the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, their Lordships observed:

"No reason has been assigned, or so much as suggested, why such a distinction should exist between a person who is claiming a debt founded on rent and a person who is claiming a debt founded on any other transaction."

Their Lordships further referred to the earliest of Civil Procedure Code (Act 23 of 1852), which was an Act passed to facilitate the enforcement of judgments in places beyond the jurisdiction of the Courts pronouncing the same, and said:

"It is true that in this Act it is said that the word "judgment" means a judgment in a civil suit or proceeding. But suits for the recovery of rent are civil suits or proceedings."

Again.

"Section 160, Act 10 of 1859 has a bearing on this question. That section provides that an appeal from the judgment of a Collector or Deputy Collector shall lie to the zillah Judge. But the zillah Judge is a civil Court to all intents and purposes. It was not disputed that if an appeal went from the Collector to the higher Court to the zillah Judge or to the High Court, and the decree of the collector for rent was there affirmed, it would become the decree of a civil Court, which could not be excluded from the operation of Act 8 of 1859."

In my judgment the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, which I have quoted above are conclusive. It must therefore be held that the Court of a District Judge in exercising functions of a Court of appeal either in the first instance or in the second is a civil Court and his decrees passed in the exercise of that jurisdiction are decrees of civil Courts.

It appears to me that the only argument in support of the contention that the Court of a District Judge in entertaining and deciding a second appeal in a rent suit is not a Court Subordinate to the High Court is that its decrees passed on second appeals are final in the sense that there is no third appeal to the High Court. To my mind the fact that there is no provision for a third appeal does not lead to the conclusion that his orders and decrees are not liable to be questioned in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C Indeed the section comes into play only in cases where the remedy by way of an appeal is not open What after all is the right of appeal ?

"It is the right of entering the superior Court and invoking its aid and interposition to redress the error of the Court below.

Per Lord Westbury, L C. in A G v. Sillem (4). Where there is no right of appeal the High Court's power of interposition is provided by the creation of its revisional jurisdiction and it is significant that that jurisdiction is extremely narrow and limited It only arises in cases of an error of a Court below when such error affects its jurisdiction. I am of opinion that the revisional jurisdiction exists in this case and it could only be destroyed by an express legislative enactment. In cases where the legislature has intended to do away with this jurisdiction of the High Court in certain matters it has made provision to that effect But in the present case it has not. Therefore as already stated, my answer to the question is in the affirmative.

Misra, J.—The question. which has been referred to the Full Bench for decision is :

" Is the Court of the District Judge in the circumstances of this case subordinate to the Chief Court. "

(4) [1864] 10 H. L. C. 704=10 L. T. 434=10 Jur. 446.

The answer to this question in my opinion would depend upon the answer to the following question :

"Is the Chief Court competent to exercise its revisional jurisdiction in a case in which a decree has been passed by the District Judge in an appeal from an appellate decree or order of the Collector or Assistant Collector of the 1st calss ?"

I have given the question my best consideration and have come to the conclusion that no revision can be entertained by the Chief Court in such a case. The revisional jurisdiction possessed by this Court is under S. 115, Civil P. C , 1908. Under S 135, Oudh Rent Act 22 of 1886 the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable to all suits and proceedings under the Oudh Rent Act provided they are not inconsistent with the provisions of that Act. It appears to me that to apply the provisions of S. 115, of the Code to such cases would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act in two ways, firstly it would offend against the provisions of S. 108, Oudh Rent Act and secondly it would offend against the provisions of S. 119 (B), of the said Act. S 108, Oudh Rent Act runs as follows :

"Except in the way of appeal as hereinafter provided Courts other than Courts of Revenue shall not take cognizance of the following descriptions of suits and those suits shall be heard and determined in the Courts of revenue in the manner provided in this Act and not otherwise."

Suits for arrears of rent are included in the description of suits attached to the section.

It is clear that the Chief Court must be considered as a civil Court when it exercises its revisional jurisdiction, since such a jurisdiction should be deemed to have been conferred on the said Court under the Code of Civil Procedure which relates to the procedure to be followed by the civil Courts. It would be apparent from the provisions of the section quoted above that Courts other than Courts of revenue, which include civil Courts, can only take cognizance of the suits mentioned in S 108 only by way of appeal as provided by the Rent Act. A suit for arrears of rent as stated above is a suit mentioned in S. 108. The conclusion to be drawn therefore is that the Chief Court cannot take cognizance of a suit for arrears of rent on its revisional side. The only way that it can take cognizance of such a suit is by way of appeal since an express provision for it is made in S. 119 (B), Oudh Rent Act To allow a revision in such a case would therefore be to apply a provision of the Code of Civil Procedure, which would be inconsistent with provisions of the Rent Act as laid down in S. 108.

There is a second aspect of the case in which it also appears to me that to apply S 115. of the Code would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act. In S 119-B, of the said Act as amended by Act 4 of 1921 (local) and Act 4 of 1925 (local) it is clearly provided that there will be no appeal from a decree passed by a Court of the District Judge against a decree passed by him in an appeal from an appellate decree or order of the Collector or the Assistant Collector of the 1st class. An appeal against his decree is provided for only in those cases which go to the District Judge by way of first appeal. The intention of the legislature, therefore, appears to be that the decrees passed by the District Judge in such cases must be considered as final and no further remedy should be allowed to the litigants after a case has been decided in second appeal by the Court of the District Judge. To allow a revision in such cases by applying the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure would, therefore, be, in my opinion, inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act as laid down in S 119-B, of the said Act, which makes the decrees passed by the District Judge in such cases final.

The view that revisions can be allowed only in those cases in which appeals are provided for to the Chief Court is supported by an old decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Maheshwar v. Bhikh Chand (5) in which Dr. Howell with reference to an earlier decision of the Bench of the same Court reported in Babu Udres Singh v. Ram Bharose (6) observed as follows :

"I am of opinion that the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under S. 622, Civil P. C., read with S. 135, Rent Act is restricted to those cases in which the course of appeal lies to this Court under Ss. 119 and 119 (B), of the latter Act, does not extend to cases in which the course of appeal lies to the Board.

(5) Rent Act Ruling 68 of 1893.
(6) Rent Act Ruling 63 of 1892.

As indicated above no appeal lies to the Chief Court under S 119 (B) against the decrees passed by the District Judge in appeals from appellate decrees or orders of the Collector or Assistant Collector of the 1st class. According to the test laid down by Dr. Howell no revision would, therefore, be entertainable by this Court since no appeal lies to this Court under S. 119 (B)

The view which I have taken of Ss. 135 and 108, Oudh Rent Act is supported by several decisions of the Allahabad High Court in which that Court had to interpret similar provisions laid down in Ss. 167 and 193, Agra Tenancy Act (2 of 1901).

Section 167, Agra Tenancy Act (2 of 1901) runs as follows :

"All suits and applications of the nature specified in Sch. 4 shall be heard and determined by the revenue Courts and except in the way of appeal as hereinafter provided no Court other than a revenue Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit or application might be brought or made."

Section 193 of the same Act runs as follows .

"The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code shall apply to the procedure in all suits and other proceedings under this Act so far as they are not inconsistent thereunder."

In interpreting these provisions the High Court of Allahabad has consistently held that the proper interpretation to be put on S. 167 is to hold that in case where there was no appeal to the High Court against the decision of the District Judge it was not competent for the High Court to entertain an application in revision from such order. I should like to refer to the following cases .

Damber Singh v. Shrikisan Das (7), decided by Richards and Alston, JJ. Parbhu Narain Singh v Harbans Lal (8) decided by Piggott and Walsh, JJ., Jamna Prasad v. Karan Singh (9), decided by Abdul Raoof, J., Muhammad Ehtisam Ali v. Lalji Singh (10) decided by Tudball, J., Gajkumar Chander v Salamat Ali (11), decided by Stuart and Wallach, JJ., and Adya Saran v Kali Charan (12) decided by Piggott, J.

A different view was, however, taken by Sulaiman and Boys, JJ , in Kheri Singh v Tirpal Singh (13) The matter was therefore in a subsequent case referred to a Full Bench. The Full Bench overruled this case and the view taken in the earlier cases quoted above was approved by it. The case was decided by Lindsay, Daniels and Dalal, JJ.. and will be found reported in Bhagwat Das v Chhedi Koeri (14)

It would appear from the decisions of the Allahabad High Court quoted above that it has been consistently held by that Court that where jurisdiction to decide a revenue case is conferred upon the High Court by the Tenancy Act in the shape of hearing an appeal only, the High Court cannot take cognizance of that case on its revisional side It is not necessary for us to go to that length but it follows as a matter of course that where even the power of appeal is not conferred upon the High Court under the provisions of the Rent Act it would not be open to the High Court to exercise its revisional powers and the District Judge cannot therefore be considered in such a case subordinate to the High Court.

I may point out that owing to this difficulty it has now been expressly provided in S 253, Agra Tenancy Act 3 of 1926 that the High Court will have power to call for the record of any suit or application which has been decided in a subordinate revenue Court and in which an appeal lies to the District Judge and in which no appeal lies to the High Court and if the Subordinate Revenue Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may pass such order in the case as it may think fit. It is unfortunate that no such provision of law exists in Oudh. In my opinion the legislature should interfere and make the law in the province of Oudh uniform with that which now prevails in the province of Agra.

My answer therefore to the reference quoted in the beginning of this order is in the negative.

Raza, J.—In my opinion the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under S. 115 Civil P. C., read with S. 135 Oudh Rent Act is restricted to those cases in which the course of appeal lies to this Court. The decisions of the District Judges in cases in which they hear appeals from the appellate decrees or orders of Collectors or Assistant Collectors of first class under S. 119 Oudh Rent Act must be treated as final for all purposes. I think it was meant by the local legislature that no further remedy should be given to the litigants in such cases. To allow revision in such cases by applying the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure would in my opinion be inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act The word 'appellate' was added in S. 119, Oudh Rent Act by Act 4 of 1921 in order to remove second appeals in rent suits from the cognizance of the Commissioners under S. 116 and to give jurisdiction over them to the District Judges. The Act does not provide for any third appeals or for revisions from the decisions of the District Judges in such cases The District Judge exercises the function of a revenue Court in hearing such appeals. The power of the Oudh Chief Court to interfere in appeals from the decisions of the Revenue Court is limited to the case provided by S. 119-B. As pointed out by the learned Judicial Commissioner in the case of Kali Bakhsh Singh v Bhagwan Das (15)

"Apart from the limited authority given by S. 119-B and 119-C Oudh Rent Act, a reference to S. 4 Civil P.C., shows that in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary nothing in the Code shall be deemed to affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred by or under any other law for the time being in force."

I am of opinion therefore that no revision lies against an order passed by a District Judge in a second rent appeal. I agree generally with the view taken by a Bench of this Court in Narayan v. Baldeo Singh (1) I would answer this reference accordingly, and answer the question in the negative.

Nanavutty, J.—The question that has been referred to the full Bench for decision is as under :

"Is the Court of the District Judge, in the circumstances of this case subordinate to the Chief Court."

The facts leading up to the present reference to the Full Bench are briefly as follows :

A suit for arrears of rent was filed in the Court of the tahsildar of Bikhpur who exercised the powers of an Assistant Collector, 2nd Class, under S 108 Oudh Rent Act. On the suit having been dismissed by the tahsildar the plaintiff filed an appeal in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad. This appeal was allowed and the plaintiff's claim for arrears of rent decreed.

The defendant thereupon filed a second appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad The latter allowed the appeal, set aside the appellate decree of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad and restored the decree of the tahsildar of Bikapur and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts. The plaintiff thereupon filed a revision under S 115 Civil P C in this Court

The defendant respondent argued that no revision lay to this Court. The question therefore for determination is whether the Court of the District Judge is subordinate to the Chief Court in the circumstances of this case.

My answer to this question is in the negative and my reasons are as under ;

In the first place, the Court of the District Judge when deciding this second rent appeal from an appellate order of the Deputy Commissioner was exercising under S 119-C Oudh Rent Act the powers conferred upon a Court of revenue by that Act. S 3 Oudh Rent Act states that a Court means

"any judicial officer presiding in a Court of Revenue for the disposal of matters under this Act."

The Court of the District Judge sitting as a Court of Revenue in deciding such rent appeals is not a Court subordinate to the Chief Court unless there is any provision in the Oudh Rent Act itself which makes it so subordinate. In S 119 Oudh Rent Act the Court of the District Judge is given powers to hear appeals from decrees, orders of Collectors or Assistant Collectors, 1st Class in certain suits filed under S. 108 Oudh Rent Act, and S. 119-B Oudh Rent Act lays down that from such judgments and decrees by a District Judge, an appeal shall lie to the Chief Court of Oudh in all cases in which a second appeal is allowed by the Code of Civil Procedure and subject to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. It is only in so far as an appeal is allowed by the Oudh Rent Act itself from a decision of the District Judge exercising the powers of a Court of Revenue under the Oudh Rent Act that the District Judge may be said to be subordinate to the Chief Court of Oudh when exercising the powers of a Court of Revenue otherwise, as is clear from S 119-C Oudh Rent Act. for the purposes of deciding appeals under the Oudh Rent Act a District Judge in Oudh and the Chief Court in Oudh shall have the powers conferred upon a Court by that Act.

(15) A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 16.

It is true that the Court of the District Judge is subordinate to the Chief Court of Oudh when deciding Civil cases but no such subordination has been laid down in the Oudh Rent Act when the District Judge hears and decides appeals from Courts of Revenue.

Section 135 Oudh Rent Act also makes it clear that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall, so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, apply to all suits and other proceedings under this Act. Courts other than Courts of Revenue cannot take cognizance of suits falling within the purview of S. 108 Oudh Rent Act The District Judge and the Chief Court of Oudh therefore are not Civil Courts when, acting under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act, they hear appeals from decisions from Courts of Revenue.

The learned Counsel for the applicant at the time of hearing of this reference referred to the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Nilmoni Singh v. Tara Nath Mookerji (3). That decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was under the Rent Act of Bengal, No. 10 of 1859 and it was held in that case that the Rent Court of the Deputy Commissioner was a Civil Court as defined in Act No 8 of 1859. If Courts of Revenue in Oudh are held also to be Civil Courts, then undoubtedly the Court of the District Judge when hearing an appeal in an arrear of rent case from an appellate decision of the Collector of the District would also be a Court subordinate to the Chief Court.

For the reasons given above I am of opinion that the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad, in the circumstances of the present case is not subordinate to the Chief Court and I would answer the reference accordingly.

Second Rent Appeal No. 47 of 1928, Decided on 12th September 1928

(a) Landlord and tenant—Land continues to be grove although it is cultivated.

Mere fact that land was culturable or has been under cultivation would not by itself prove that the land has lost its character as a grove. [P 398 C 1]

(b) Adverse possession — Grove-holder continuing to hold even after land ceasing to be grove—In absence of any assertion of adverse title he must be considered as holding over and his possession is only of tenant.

Where a grove-holder continues to hold even after the land has lost its character as a grove, he must be considered to be holding over and his possession in the absence of any open assertion of proprietary right by him, cannot be considered to be otherwise than as a tenant . 70 I. J. 282, Dist [P 398 C 1]

S. N. Roy—for Appellant.

Radha Krishna—for Respondent.

Judgment —One Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh held the plot in suit as a grove-holder. He executed a sale deed in respect of it in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the defendant on 22nd March 1905 The plaintiff instituted the present suit for recovery of arrears of rent and for ejectment under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act against the defendant on 12th November 1926. The only defence with which I am concerned in this appeal, was that the defendant had acquired full proprietary rights in the land by adverse possession extending to a period of over 12 years. Both the lower Courts have rejected the defendant's plea about adverse possession. The argument urged before me in support of the appeal is that on the facts found the defendant should be held to have made out his plea of adverse possession.

It is not denied that the grove was recorded at the time of the First Regular Settlement as tenant's grove and that the status of Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh was that of a tenant grove-holder. There is nothing on the record to show the number of trees which existed on the land at the time of the First Regular Settlement but the entry then made was that the land was culturable. The entries at the Second Settlement and in subsequent years show that the land has actually been under cultivation There are 5 trees standing now on the plot the area of which is 4 bighas and 4 biswas. So the only ground on which the plea of adverse possession rests is that the defendant and his predecessor have been allowed to cultivate the land without any rent being demanded from them and without any rent being paid

It is admitted that there is no evidence of any assertion of proprietary right either by the defendant or his vendor. Reliance has been placed upon the decision in Nadir Singh v. Anpurna Kunwar (1) in which it was held that where a person is found in continuous possession of property without any right whatsoever, even though he did not at any time make any openly avowed claim of right to it, the circumstances attending his possession may be sufficient to show that he held possession as of right and as such to have acquired title by adverse possession This case is, in my opinion, quite distinguishable. Possession of the defendant in the present case cannot be considered to be possession without any shadow of right The defendant was entitled to retain possession of the land so long as it retained the character of a grove No occasion has arisen till now for any adjudication as to whether the land lost its character as a grove and if so when. The mere fact that the land was culturable or has been under cultivation would not by itself prove that the land had lost its character as a grove. Assuming that the land lost its character as a grove more than 12 years before suit the defendant must be considered to have been holding over and his possession in the absence of any assertion to the contrary, cannot be considered to have been otherwise than as a tenant. For the above reasons I agree with the opinion of the Courts below that the defendant has failed to make out his plea of adverse possession The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, remanding a case which was under appeal before him to the Court of first instance for a fresh decision after considering the effect of certain documents and the evidence which might be produced in rebuttal of them These documents were tendered in the Court of the Munsif but in the view of that Court they were tendered late. He, therefore, refused to consider them. In appeal the Subordinate Judge decided that out of these nine documents one of them should have been admitted, and he remanded the suit with directions that the lower Court should consider the effect of that document. The lower Court did so and the matter again came up in appeal before the successor of the learned Subordinate Judge who passed the first order of remand. The second Subordinate Judge after hearing the arguments decided that if these eight documents were produced they might have an important bearing on the decision of the case and he made a second order of remand which is now under appeal before us.

The first point which has been argued is that this remand could not be made because the first order of remand was appealable under the new provisions of O. 43, R. 1 (u) Civil P. C and as no appeal had been preferred against the refusal of the Subordinate Judge to admit those eight documents at that time, the question could not be raised again. Cl (u) O 43, R 1 makes an order of remand appealable, and a party who is prejudiced by an order of remand can appeal against such an order. But where a party has himself asked for a remand and obtained an order of remand he cannot appeal merely because the ground covered by the order of remand is not so wide as that which he himself desired. In this case, therefore, although the defendant may have been aggrieved to some extent by the narrow scope of the first order of remand he could not appeal, and his only proper course was to attempt to press the point at a later stage Thus, had the learned Subordinate Judge subsequently maintained the same position and consistently refused to admit these documents, he could have appealed to this Court on this point while contesting the final decree. As the matter stands the learned Subordinate Judge has differed from his predecessor, but he was not bound by the first order. It is as though the learned Subordinate Judge himself had in the course of hearing the appeal altered his mind on a certain point, and if he considered after further thought that a further remand was necessary he was legally authorized to order such further remand. In our opinion the order passed was a proper order. We need not at this stage consider the merits of the case in any way but we would like to say that in our opinion these documents have been properly admitted by the Court below. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision under S. 25, Sm C C. Act (Act 9 of 1887).

It may be said that the suit was based on a pronote but it was not stated in the plaint that the pro-note was the only evidence of the loan. It was alleged in the plaint that the defendant had borrowed the money (Rs 300) in cash from the plaintiff and that the loan was evidenced by a pro-note (ba tahrir ruqqai indat talab) The plaint was subsequently amended. It was stated in para. 1 of the plaint as amended that the defendant had borrowed Rs. 300 from the plaintiff at Rs. 4-11-0 per cent per mensem payable on demand and that the loan was evidenced by a pro-note and a receipt executed by the defendant on the same date. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 400 principal and interest, alleging that the defendant had paid nothing on account of the debt contracted by him The claim was resisted by the defendant The pro-note was impounded as it was not duly stamped. However the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court gave the plaintiff an opportunity to prove the debt independently of the pro-note. He found on the evidence that the defendant had borrowed Rs. 300 from the plaintiff at 3 pice per rupee per month. The plaintiff's claim was therefore decreed with costs.

The defendant has filed this application for revision contending that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was wrong in allowing the amendment of the plaint and also in giving the plaintiff an opportunity to prove the debt independently of the pro-note.

I have heard the learned counsel on both sides at some length In my opinion the learned Judge was perfectly right in allowing the amendment of the plaint and also in giving the plaintiff an opportunity to prove the debt independently of the pro-note. Even if the learned Judge had not allowed amendment of the plaint the plaintiff was entitled to prove the debt independently of the pro-note in question The defendant had contracted the debt and had also executed the pro-note in question in favour of the plaintiff. It was never stated in the plaint that the pro-note was the only evidence of the loan. It was of course stated in the plaint that the loan was evidenced by a pro-note, but this does not mean that the pro-note was the only evidence of the loan. The suit was primarily based on the loan of which the promissory note was alleged to be evidence. It was not based on the execution of the promissory note in question. The cases of Bachchu Lal v. Kandhai Lal (1) and Dwarka v. Idu (2) are authorities for the proposition that if a plaintiff alleges in his plaint that he lent money to the defendant for which the defendant executed a promissory note, a decree may be passed for the amount which is proved to have been lent, even if the execution of the promissory note is not proved or the promissory note is found to be inadmissible in evidence for want of proper stamp. It was held in the case of Ram Sarup v Jasoda Kunwar (3), that if a creditor has a cause of action for the recovery of money, for which his debtor has executed a promissory note, separate from and independent of the note, he can recover upon such cause, in case the note for any reason cannot be put in evidence Nor is the creditor necessarily debarred from suing on the original cause of action by the fact that it arose out of the same transaction in the course of which the promissory note was executed. It was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Miyan Bux v. Mt. Bodhiya (4) that a promissory note payable on demand to the lender or the bearer or to order offends against the provision of S. 25, Paper Currency Act (10 of 1923) and, therefore cannot form the basis of a suit. The plaintiff can however sue on the basis of any obligation, whether antecedent to or arising simultaneously with the execution of the promissory note, independently of the execution of the promissory note

The applicant's learned counsel has referred to S. 91, Evidence Act and relied on the ruling of the Madras High Court in the case of Muthu Sastrigal v. Visvanatha Pandharasannadhi (5). I should like to note however that the following observations were made in the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court mentioned above at pp 740 and 741 :

"For instance, where the plaintiff can prove that on a balance of account a sum is due to him he can sue on that obligation, ignoring the fact that in regard to it or part of it an unlawful promissory note was executed. Similarly, if he has evidence, whether oral or otherwise, independent of the promissory note, that he made a loan of a sum of money to the defendant on the condition that the money would be repaid on demand with certain interest, he can sue on that obligation ignoring the existence of the promissory note. Nor in this latter case can it be said that S. 91, Evidence Act will stand in his way. The terms of no 'contract' have in this case been reduced to the term of a contract, for exhypothesi, the agreement embodied in the promissory note was not enforceable by law and was therefore not a 'contract.' Nor without unduly straining language, could the transaction be described as a disposition of property."

I take the same view.

In my opinion the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was perfectly right in decreeing the plaintiff's claim. Hence I reject the defendant's application for revision with costs.

Second Appeal No 332 of 1928, Decided on 8th November 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 8th August 1928.

Easements Act, Ss 4 and 13 — Person building well for public use on municipal land—Neighbour constructing wall surrounding well leaving space of five feet in width and also passage to public road—Builder of well cannot claim any easement and so cannot ask neighbour to demolish wall.

A person who builds a well can claim from the grantor of the land on which the well is constructed what is necessary for a beneficial enjoyment of a well, but he cannot claim that he has obtained any easement in respect of any particular land in the neighbourhood except in so far as it is the land of the grantor. Hence where a person builds a well on the municipal land for the use of the public and the neighbour constructs a wall leaving a space of five feet in width surrounding the well, and also a passage leading to the public road, the latter cannot be asked to demolish the wall although it might have prevented the public from seeing the well from a distance.

[P 401 C 1, 2]

Mohammad Ayub—for Appellant.

H. D Chandra—for Respondent.

Judgment—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by a person who built a well for the benefit of the public on municipal land and who has asked for the demolition of a wall which has been built round that well and a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from building any other wall on the north or south of the well. The suit is based on the idea that the plaintiff has a right of easement in respect of his well and reliance is placed on S. 4 and S 13, Easements Act. A person who builds a well can claim from the grantor of the land on which the well is constructed what is necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the well, but I am not aware that he can claim any more than this or that he has obtained any easement in respect of any particular land in the neighbourhood except in so far as it is the land of the grantor. In the present suit the defendant alleged that he was a lessee from the Municipal Board but the fact was challenged by the plaintiff. An issue was framed and it was found against the defendant. Consequently for the purposes of this suit I cannot regard the defendant as being a lessee from the Municipal Board or as having stepped in any way into the place of the Board. Thus I have to consider what the plaintiff can claim for his well as against this neighbour.

The object of the well is to give water to the public and the public must, therefore, be able to approach the well and draw water from it. It is admitted that the defendant has constructed certain walls leaving a passage which leads from the public road to the well and also leaving a space of five feet in width surrounding the well. There is, therefore, nothing which can prevent the public from going to the well and taking water. On this account the Court of first instance dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff should himself have obtained more land if he wished his well to be more conspicuous. The lower appellate Court appears to have considered that the plaintiff had a right to have his well seen from a distance by the public. For some reason which is not clear to me he finds that the public are less likely to see the well because most of them are illiterate, but even if the public do find difficulty in seeing the well this does not affect the plaintiff. He has done his part. He has provided the well. He cannot properly bring in Court a case on the ground that the public is deprived of any right which it may have in connexion with the well.

The lower appellate Court has employed a curious analogy when he says that as in the case of a lighthouse it is necessary for ships to see the lighthouse in order to avoid danger, so, in the case of a public well it is necessary for the public to see the well in order to use it or derive advantage from it. Now apart from the fact that mariners do not see the lighthouse but only the light, it should have been clear to the Court that the object of the lighthouse was not that the mariners should go to the lighthouse but that they should keep away from it. The opposite is the case with a public well. In my opinion the plaintiff failed to establish any easement. No doubt he has a grievance chiefly I should suppose against the Municipal Board whom he has not impleaded in the suit, but he can only claim for his well the right of access which enables the public to draw and that right is not interfered with by the constructions erected by the defendant. I, therefore, allow this appeal with costs, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and restore the order of the Court of first instance.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100 — Finding of fact based on admissible evidence cannot be impugned.

A finding of fact based upon admissible evidence cannot be impugned in second appeal. There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of even an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. 18 Cal. 23; A. I. R. 1929 *P. The lambardar of a mahal is in a fiduciary position in relation to the cosharers in the matter of collections and disbursements. If a property belongs to several cosharers and one co-sharer (the lambardar) is in possession of the entire property his possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to the other cosharers. He must be deemed to be in possession on behalf of the other cosharers and adverse possession cannot be founded on the basis of such exclusive possession unless there has been ouster of the other cosharers. Mere entry of the name of the lambardar would not be proof of adverse possession and where no proof is given to establish that the title of the other cosharers was denied, the mere fact that certain land was entered in the name of the lambardar would not entitle him to contend that his possession was adverse to them. Mere non-participation in the profits by the cosharers and exclusive occupation by the lambardar would not constitute adverse possession against the cosharers in favour of the lambardar: *A. I. To prove title by adverse possession it must be shown that such possession is adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent and it must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the statutory period. Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a declaratory suit. The relative position of the parties will appear from the following pedigree:

The dispute in this case relates to a 3/8th share out of 4 bighas odd in mahal Hafizuddin in village Shaikhpur in the district of BaraBanki The plaintiff claims the property in suit under a deed of wakf executed by her father Moulvi Nihaluddin on 13th November 1916.

The defendants claim the property as the heirs of their mother, Mt Afzalunnisa sister of Moulvi Nihaluddin.

Though the property in suit is very small and the net profits of the property amount to a few rupees only, but the parties have shown considerable zeal in the litigation relating to it.

The defendants' names were not entered in the khewat of the village Shaikhpur and so they applied to the Assistant Record Officer, Bara Banki for correction of the khewat. The application was opposed by the plaintiff. The Assistant Record Officer dismissed the defendants, application on 18th April 1925 and their appeal was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner on 24th June 1925. However, their appeal was allowed by the Commissioner of Fyzabad on 6th February 1926 The plaintiff then appealed to the Board of Revenue, but her appeal was dismissed on 29th May 1926 She then brought the present declaratory suit against the defendants on 15th July 1927

The Additional Munsif, Bara Banki, decreed the plaintiff's claim on 10th April 1928. The defendants appealed and their appeal was allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, on 18th July 1928.

The plaintiff has now come to this Court in second appeal.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the property in suit originally belonged to Mt. Aisha Bibi alias Chhoti Bibi who transferred it by an oral gift to her niece Mt. Afzalunnissa (defendants' mother) in the year 1881 Mt. Afzalunnissa was recorded owner of the property in suit as donee from Chhoti Bibi and she got a chitthi for the same in the partition case to which Moulvi Hafizuddin was also a party, in April 1881. Her name was duly entered in the khewat as a cosharer of 4 bighas 4 biswas 17 biswansis along with her father Moulvi Hafizuddin and her brother Moulvi Nihaluddin, who was the vendee of the share of one Ghulam Jilani.

It was clearly noted in the khewat that she was holding the property as donee from Chhoti Bibi. Moulvi Hafizuddin died sometime before August 1894 and his share was then mutated in favour of his son Moulvi Nihaluddin. From 1315 Fasli onwards the entire khata was shown in the name of Moulvi Nihaluddin though there was no order and no record of any transaction to show how his sister Mt. Afzalunnissa had lost the right which she had acquired in 1881 and 1882. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the village patwari was responsible for this mistake or omission. He found also that there was no evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff was in possession of the property in dispute at the time she instituted the suit. He held that plaintiff's suit for declaration was not maintainable under S 42, Specific Relief Act. The result was that the plaintiff's claim was rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The case was remanded by this Court and now the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff has been in possession of the property in suit since 1924 and that before that, her father, Moulvi Nihaluddin was in possession of the entire property including the property in suit Moulvi Nihaluddin died in 1923 and his sister Mt. Afzalunnissa, in 1921 Mt Afzalunnissa and her sons were never in possession of the property during the last 12 years. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that though the defendants could not prove their possession over the property in suit by means of receipt of rents and profits during the last 12 years, but the title to the property was still in them as the plaintiff could not prove that she and her predecessors (lambardars) had perfected their title to the property by adverse possession.

The parties have filed objections. I have gone though the evidence on the record carefully. In my opinion the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff and her predecessor have been in possession of the property in suit for more than 12 years is unassailable. The learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in holding that the defendants and their predecessor were never in possession of the property by means of receipt of rents and profits during the last 12 years. The evidence which the defendants have produced to prove their possession by means of receipt of rents and profits is not reliable at all and was properly rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge. There is no documentary evidence on that point. The oral evidence is quite worthless and appears to have been manufactured.

Now the position is this : It has been found that Mt Afzalunnissa (defendants' mother) was owner of the property in suit. The property in suit originally belonged to Chhoti Bibi who had transferred the same to Mt. Afzalunnissa by an oral gift. Mt Afzalunnissa was recorded owner of the property in place of Chhoti Bibi in the village papers. Her name was duly entered in the khewat. She was recorded cosharer of the property along with her father Moulvi Hafizuddin and her brother, Moulvi Nihaluddin. Moulvi Hafizuddin was formerly the lambardar of the mahal. His son Moulvi Nihaluddin became the lambardar after his death The plaintiff became the lambardar of the mahal after the death of her father Moulvi Nihaluddin. The entire khata has been shown in the name of Moulvi Nihaluddin since 1315 fasli (1908) There is no order and no record of any transaction to show how the defendants and their predecessor lost the property to which they were rightfully entitled. The plaintiff and her predecessors were lambardars and hence they made collections in the mahal. They were thus in possession of the entire mahal. The defendants and their predecessor never received the rents and profits of the property in suit comprised in the mahal from the lambardars during the last 12 years. The question is : Is the defendants' right to the property in suit extinguished as contended on behalf of the plaintiff?

The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the property in suit belonged to Mt. Afzalunnissa as donee from Chhoti Bibi must be accepted by this Court. This finding is a finding of fact based upon admissible evidence and cannot be impugned in second appeal. It has been repeatedly held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of even an erroneous finding of fact, however, gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be: see Durga Chowdhrani v. Jawahir Singh (1) ; Venkata Kumara v. Secretary of State (2) ; and Ramji Patel v. Kishore Singh (3) The defendants are entitled to the property in suit as the heirs of Mt. Afzalunnissa. Their title to the property in suit is thus established It has been found of course that the defendants and their predecessor never received the profits of the property in suit from the plaintiff and her predecessor during the last 12 years, but have they lost their right to the property simply for that reason? I think not. The plaintiff is the present lambardar of the mahal in which the property in suit is situate. Her father was formerly the lambardar of the mahal. They were thus in possession of the entire mahal. The defendants and their predecessor were cosharers of the mahal. The lambardar of a mahal is in a fiduciary position in relation to the cosharers in the matter of collections and disbursements. If a property belongs to several cosharers and one cosharer is in possession of the entire property, his possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to other cosharers. He must be deemed to be in possession on behalf of the other cosharers and adverse possession cannot be founded on the basis of such exclusive possession, unless there has been an ouster of the other cosharers. The ouster takes place when the title of the other cosharers is denied. Mere entry of the name of one cosharer would not be proof of adverse possession and, therefore, where no proof is given to establish that the title of the other cosharers was denied, the mere fact that certain land was entered in the name of one cosharer would not entitle him to contend that his possession was adverse to them : see Bashir Ahmad v. Parshotam (4).

The appellant's learned counsel has contended that it should be held in this case that the plaintiff and her predecessors have been in possession of the property in suit adversely to the defendants and their predecessor for more than 12 years. I am not prepared to accept this contention. It is not really the plaintiff's case that she or her predecessors became the owner of the property in suit by right of adverse possession. No adverse possession was alleged in the plaint. I do not find and have not been referred to any reliable evidence on the record showing that the plaintiff or her predecessor was ever in possession of the property in suit adversely to the defendants or their predecessor. Mere non-participation in the profits by one cosharer and exclusive occupation by another, would not constitute adverse possession, against the former in favour of the latter : see Itappan v. Manavikrama (5), Dinkar Sadashiv v. Bhikaji Sadashiv (6). prove title by adverse possession, it must be shown that such possession is adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent and it must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the statutory period : see Radhamoni Debi v Collector of Khulna (7) ; Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baladoe Das (8), and Kuthali Moothaver v Kunharan Kutty (9). Knowledge on the part of the person whose rights are invaded is an essential element of adverse possession : see Tarubai v Venkatrao (10). The appellant's learned counsel has contended that the fact that Moulvi Nihaluddin had entered the property in suit in the deed of wakf dated 13th November 1916 shows that there was an open assertion of a hostile title on his part. In the first place the deed does not make any specification of the property in suit The entry relating to the Shaikhpur property is simply this 'Village Shaikhpur Kusumbha—according to Khewat.' In the second place there is nothing on the record to show that the defendants or their predecessor had notice of the entry in question or of any assertion of a hostile title on the part of Moulvi Nihaluddin

The appellant's learned counsel has referred to the case of Nadir Singh v. Mt. Anpurna Kunwar (11) The case was decided by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in March 1920. It was held in that case that where it is found that a person has been in continuous possession of some property for more than 12 years without any right whatever and that, although he did not at any time make any openly avowed claim of right to it, his acts and the circumstances attending his possession clearly show that he intended to hold possession as of right, he has to be declared as having acquired title by adverse possession. So far as I see, that case materially differs from the present case in its facts and the decision itself is not applicable. It is said that Moulvi Nihaluddin had perfected his title to the property in suit by adverse possession. However, there is no reliable evidence on the record to show that he ever intended to hold the property in suit adversely to his sister. Mt. Afzalunnissa. It cannot be held in this case that his acts and the circumstances attending his possession show that he ever intended to hold possession of the property adversely to his own sister, Mt. Afzalunnissa. The property was very small. I attach no importance to the circumstance that Mt. Afzalunnissa did not realize (or did not care to realise) the profits of the property from his brother, Moulvi Nihaluddin In my opinion the appellant cannot appeal to the provisions of S 28, Lim. Act also, in the circumstances of this case. This section does not apply unless there is some one in adverse possession of the property. Until some one is in advese possession, the owner of the property does not lose his right to the property merely because he happens not to be in possession of it for 12 years. Under this section his right is only extinguished at the determination of the period limited by the Act to him for instituting a suit for possession of property ; that period cannot be determined unless it has commenced to run and the period will not commence to run until the owner is aware that some one else in possession is holding adversely to him : see Swamirao Shriniwas v. Bhimabai (12), and Sukhdeo v Ram Dulari (13)

In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in holding that the plaintiff has failed to prove that she and her predecessor have perfected their title to the property in suit by adverse possession. The defendants are the rightful owners of the property in suit and they have not lost their right in the property by efflux of time.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 224 of 1928, Decided on 6th August 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Gonda, D/- 13th March 1928

(a) Hindu Law—Joint family— Liability of son to pay father's debts incurred before partition—Son is liable to extent of family property in his hands on partition.

Son is liable to pay the personal debts of his father out of the joint family property that has come into his hands on partition before the decree for such debts is passed in favour of the creditors against father alone, provided the debts are incurred by father when father and son constituted a joint Hindu family and were neither illegal nor immoral. The liability is with the property and the acts of the members of the family cannot divest the property of that liability. A. I. R 1928 Mad 657 (F. B), A. I. R 1928 Bom. 232, Foll.; *A. ### Order of Reference

Pullan, J—This appeal gives rise to what is in my opinion an important question of law on which there is no Bench decision of this Court, namely, the question of the liability of a Hindu son to pay personal debts incurred by his father out of the family property which has come to the son by partition before the decree was passed against the father alone. Apart from the fact that there is no Bench authority of this Court, although a single Judge decision in Jai Narain v. Mahabir Prasad (1) takes the view that the property obtained by the son in partition is liable, there is a recent decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in Gaya Prasad v. Murlidhar (2), in which both Judges took a diametrically opposite view. Two Judges of the Patna High Court in a case reported in Ram Ghulam Singh v. Nand Kishore Prasad (A. I R. 1925 Pat. 688) held that after partition has taken place there are no assets of the father in the hands of the sons and, therefore, there is nothing for the creditor to proceed against so far as the sons are concerned. In Madras there has always been a conflict of opinion which has been accentuated rather than removed by their recent Full Bench decision reported in Subramina Ayyar v. Sabapathy Aiyar (3), in which three Judges have taken one view and two Judges the other The case for the son, if I may so call it, was stated in that judgment most forcibly by Srinivasa Ayyangar, J, from p. 381. The latest decision of the Bombay High Court reported in Annabhat Shankarbhat v. Shivappa Dundappa (4) deals with the case in which partition has been effected after institution of the suit and, in such a case it is always possible to hold, following the existing Bench rulings of this Court in Jageshar Pande v. Moni Ram (5) and Balbhaddar Singh v Hardei (6), that the partition has been designed to defeat the creditor, while in the present case there is a finding of the Court below that the partition is bona fide and that it took place before the decree was passed against the father. It is not necessary for me to discuss the matter any further at this stage as in my opinion this is a case which should be heard by a Bench, and I accordingly refer the matter for decision to a Full Bench of three Judges under R. 14 (1), Oudh Courts Act.

Opinion

Stuart, C. J.—This is a reference under S. 14, Local Act, 4 of 1925. The learned Judge making the reference has described the question as the question of the liability of a Hindu son to pay personal debts incurred by his father out of the family property which has come to the son by partition before the decree was passed against the father alone. I prefer to put the question in a different manner. These are the facts of the case : A father Shambhu Dat, managing member of a joint Hindu family, consisting of himself and his sons Raghunandan Prasad, Ambika Prasad and Ganga Prasad, borrowed on 4th June 1922 Rs 700 from Moti Ram Kurmi and executed a simple deed in his favour. In August 1926 Shambhu Dat and his sons Raghunandan Prasad, Ambika Prasad and Ganga Prasad separated and proceeded to partition the family property. It is noticeable that Ambika Prasad and Ganga Prasad are still minors. It is not clear whether Moti Ram instituted his suit on the bond before or after the separation, but he did not obtain his decree upon it until December 1926. The decree was against Shambhu Dat only, Shambhu Dat alone having executed the deed. In execution of the decree obtained Moti Ram proceeded to attach certain cattle. The three sons of Shambhu Dat claimed the cattle as having passed into their possession under the partition. It has been found on the facts that these cattle formed originally the property of the joint family and subsequently passed into the possession of Shambhu Dat's sons under the partition. The sons having successfully asserted their title the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was instituted by Moti Ram for a declaration that the animals in question were liable to attachment in execution of his decree. Both the Courts have decided in Moti Ram's favour and when a second appeal was filed in this Court the reference in question was made.

There have been a large number of decisions more or less apposite, to the question with which we are now concerned. It appears to me unnecessary to discuss the views taken prior to 1923 as it was in 1923 that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee decided in Brij Narain v Mangla Prasad (7) the liability of the property of a joint Hindu family in respect of a debt incurred by the father as manager of the family upon which a decree had been obtained. The words of their Lordships are these :

"The managing member of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity ; but if he is the father and the other members are the sons he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt."

(7) A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 50=46 All. 95=51 I. A. 129 (P.C.).

Here Shambhu Dat was the manager of the family. He is the father. Raghunandan Prasad, Ambika Prasad and Ganga Prasad are sons. Shambhu Dat incurred debt. The debt was not for an immoral purpose. A decree has been passed for the payment of the debt. So the estate was ordinarily laid open to be taken in execution upon the decree for the payment of that debt. But the question remains : Has the partition which was subsequent to the date on which the debt was incurred rendered the estate not open to be taken in execution ? Their Lordships were not asked to decide that point. There are various decisions on it. The first is that of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court dated 17th May 1927 'Gaya Prasad v Murlidhar (2) The second is a decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court of a later date. This is in Subramania Ayyar v. Sabapathy Aiyar (3), dated 9th December 1927. The latest is a decision of a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Annabhat Shankarbhat v. Shivappa Dundappa (4). This is dated 19th January 1928. The Allahabad decision considers that the property which has passed to sons after partition is not liable to satisfy a decree obtained for a debt incurred by the father while the family was joint. The majority of the Full Bench in the Madras High Court took the opposite view. The Bombay Bench considers the Allahabad decision and refused to follow it. They preferred to follow prior Madras decisions. After considering the arguments for and against I am of opinion that the property remains liable after partition. I cannot put the case better than in the words of Waller, J , in Subramania Ayyar v. Sabapathy Ayyar (3) at p. 369 of 51 Mad.

"On principle, I can see no reason why a partition should exempt a son's share from liability for a pre-partition debt for which it was liable before partition. The creditor advances money to the father on the credit of the joint family property. Why should he be deprived of all but a fraction of his security by a transaction to which he was not a party and of which he was not aware ? And what becomes of the son's pious obligation ? It was binding as regards the particular debt before partition ; does it cease to apply to that debt simply because there has been a partition ?"

It appears to me that it is a necessary corollary from the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that the family property is liable in execution to satisfy a decree on a debt incurred by the father as manager of the joint family property where the other members are the sons that the property will remain liable even if it is subsequently partitioned. The liability is with the property and the acts of the members of the family cannot divest the property of that liability I would therefore answer these questions accordingly.

Wazir Hasan, J. — The question of law referred to the Full Bench for decision is the question of liability of a Hindu son to pay the personal debt of his father out of the family property which has come into the hands of the son on a partition before the decree for such debt was passed in favour of the creditor against the father alone and the debt was incurred when the father and the son constituted a joint Hindu family and was neither illegal nor immoral.

Admittedly there is no pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee directly bearing on the question under consideration. The answer therefore must take the form of a corrollary deducible from the principles of Hindu Law established both by the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and the texts. Such principles are to be found in cases relating to the son's liability for the father's debts while the family was joint and possessed of property as such. A careful study of the decisions and the relevant texts on my part has resulted in the formation of the opinion that the question must be answered in the affirmative.

Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (8). I will state so much of the facts as are necessary for the purposes of my judgment. Kunhya Lall and his two sons, Bhikharee Lall and Bujrung Sahye, formed a joint Hindu family. Kunhya Lall died in the year 1850. Kantoo Lall, son of Bhikharee Lall, sold certain portion of the family property under a deed of sale dated 28th July 1856, that is after Kantoo Lall was born. The appeal arose out of a suit brought by Kantoo Lall to set aside the sale just now mentioned and to recover possession of the property conveyed thereby. The High Court awarded to Kantoo Lall a decree for one-half of his father's share, that is one-half of an eight annas share. It is important to bear in mind that the decree for the share which Kantoo Lall obtained from the High Court represented the share of Kantoo Lall in the family estate which would have been allotted to him on a partition. In setting aside the decree of the High Court the Judicial Committee in the judgment delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock said :

"So that upon the death of Kunhya Lall, the property descended to Bhikharee Lall and Bujrung Sahye as his two sons and they were the only persons interested in the property at that time. There can be no doubt that if they had contracted a debt at that time, the property which descended to them from their ancestor would have been liable to pay it. . . . Now it is important to consider what was the interest which Kantoo Lall acquired. Did he gain such an interest in this property as prevented it from being liable to pay a debt which his father had contracted ? If his father had died, and had left him as his heir, and the property had come into his hands, could he have said that because this was ancestral property which descended to his father from his grandfather, it was not liable at all to pay his father's debt ? In the case which has been referred to in argument of Hunooman Persaud Pandey v. Mt. Babooee Munraj Kooniveree (9) (at p. 421), Lord Justice Knight Bruce, who delivered the judgment of the Privy Council, says : 'Though an estate be ancestral, it may be charged for some purposes against the heir for the father's debt by the father, as indeed the case above cited from the sixth volume of the decisions of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat, North-Western Provinces, incidently shows. Unless the debt was of such a nature that it was not the duty of the son to pay it, the discharge of it, even though it affected ancestral estate, would still be an act of pious duty in the son. By the Hindu Law the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt and not the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creator of the debt.' That is an authority to show that ancestral property which descends to a father under the Mitakshara law is not exempted from liability to pay his debts because a son is born to him. It would be a pious duty on the part of the son to pay his father's debts, the ancestral property, in which the son as the son of his father acquires an interest by birth, is liable to the father's debts."

Their Lordships then proceed to make an inquiry into the nature of the debt and come to the conclusion that it was not shown that it had been contracted for an immoral purpose. In the end the decree of the High Court was set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing the plaintiff's suit was restored.

Now certain observations fall to be made in relation to the above judgment of the Judicial Committee. It was a case of a joint family to which the rule of survivorship applied and in which there was no devolution of any inheritance of one deceased member on another member or members as heir or heirs; yet their Lordships say that the property descended to the two sons, Bhikharee Lall and Bujrung Sahye, from their father Kuhhya Lall on his death in the year 1850. Further speaking of the interest of Kantoo Lall, their Lordships again state the question as if it were a case of his father dying and leaving Kantoo Lall as his heir and the property having come into his hands in that status From this I make the deduction that the interest coming into the hands of a son on the death of his father by survivorship in a joint Hindu family may still be treated as assets in the hands of the survivor and is liable for the debt of the deceased father in the same way as if it had devolved by inheritance The second deduction is that the liability or freedom of the son to pay the father's debt depends on the nature of the debt and that there is no freedom from the obligation by reason of the fact that the estate out of which the discharge is claimed is ancestral or self-acquired property of the father This antithesis between the ancestral and the self-acquired property is significant; both, though vastly divergent in several legal incidents, for instance, power of alienation, are placed on the same footing in relation to the son's obligation to discharge the father's debt.

The third and the most important deduction is that it is not only the father's interest but also the son's interest in the family estate which lies under the obligation to discharge the legitimate debt of the father This is admittedly so while the family is undivided. But the share which would be allotted to the son on a partition between him and his father represent the same interest in a defined form which the former possessed in the family estate before the partition. To my mind this is indisputable. It follows that the obligation will rest on the share as effectively as it did on the interest.

Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Prasad Singh (10). In this case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee approved of the dictum of Westropp, C. J., in Udaram Sitaram v. Ranu Panduji (11) which is as follows:

"Subject to certain limited exceptions (as, for instance, debts contracted for immoral or illegal purposes) the whole of the family undivided estate would be, when in the hands of the sons or grandsons, liable to the debts of the father and grandfather."

In this dictum stress is laid not on "undivided" character of the estate but on 'the whole" as opposed to a portion only of the same estate To my mind this dictum would apply to a case in which there is an estate or a portion of an estate in the hands of the sons or grandsons which was at the time when the debt was incurred an undivided estate.

Mt Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (12) This case contains the well-known dictum of Lord Hobhouse:

"Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons can not set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is no conflict of authority."

The matter on which I want to lay stress is that in the quotation just now given two different situations independent of each other are contemplated, one is the father's right of alienation and the other is the creditors' remedies for their debts. From this I deduce the argument that it is incorrect to state that the sons' liability for their father's debts is co-extensive with the father's power of alienation and therefore when the latter is lost the former also vanishes.

The other matter to be noted is that the creditors' remedies for their debts are stated in relation to the absence of the sons' rights against such creditors. As soon as a legitimate debt is incurred the son comes face to face with the creditor and the contest lies between them. Surely it cannot be suggested that if the son pays into the hands of his father a sum of money equivalent to the debt incurred and for the purpose of satisfying it he is absolved as against his father's creditor's remedies. The right of the creditor vests in him against the son as soon as the validity of the debt is established.

The dicta of Westropp, C J , and of Lord Hobhouse in the cases of Suraj Bunsi Koer v Sheo Prosad Singh (10) and Mt Nanomi Babuasin v Modun Mohun (12) respectively were affirmed in Bhagbut Pershad v Mt. Girja Koer (13) Meenakshi Naidu v Ramaya Kounden (14). The judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in this case shows that joint family property in the hands of the son could be treated as " assets " and it is further to be noted that as in the case of Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall (8), the question of the liability of the son's interest in the family estate arose in the father's lifetime. Lord Fitzgerald, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, said.

" The Subordinate Judge, who examined the evidence with the greatest care, correctly came to the conclusion that there was no satisfactory evidence that the debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes . . . . . , that it was a debt contracted by the father and coming within the ordinary rule of Hindu law with reference to an estate such as is now before their Lordships, that the son would be liable for the debt contracted by the father to the extent of the assets coming to him by descent from the father, and that his interest in the zemindari was liable, and might be sold for the satisfaction of that debt."

In my opinion it is incorrect to hold that the rule of law making a Hindu son liable for the debt of his father where he has assets in his hands is restricted to a case in which the son has received property by inheritance alone.

This brings me to the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Brij Narain v Mangla Prasad (7) The old rule given effect to in the previous decisions that the son's liability commences as soon as the debt is incurred and not only when the debtor is dead was re-affirmed. It seems to me that the following observation of Lord Dunedin, who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee in this case, throws a flood of light on the underlying principle of the son's liability :

"It cannot be denied that the law on the subject of what binds an estate when the manager of joint family estate is the father, and the other members are the sons, is in a state which is somewhat illogical and in the absence of binding authority could not be accepted. On the one hand it is settled law that the manager as such cannot bind the estate at his own free will and without any compelling cause so as to bind the other members He can bind it for necessity, the necessity being the necessity of the family, and so far there is no difficulty in principle, though the question of whether in any particular instance there was a necessity, may, like other questions of fact liable to be involved in a question of degree, be difficult to decide. But then there comes in the further doctrine that, a debt having been contracted by the father, the pious obligation incumbent on the son to see his father's debts paid prevents the son from asserting that the family estate, so far as his interest is concerned, is not liable to purge that debt. It may become liable by being taken in execution on the back of a decree obtained against the father or it might become liable by being mortgaged by the father to pay the debt for which otherwise decree might be taken and execution be sought."

To my mind nothing could be clearer than this statement of law. It establishes three principles (1). That the debt binds the estate; (2) That the son's interest in that estate is also bound and (3) that the liability may be enforced either under a mortgage by the father or by execution of a simple money decree obtained against the father alone. If therefore these are the principles on which the liability of the son's interest in the family estate rests I for one am unable to see how the liability to purge the debt is wiped off by the fact that what was at the date of the debt an interest has subsequently by the effect of partition become a specified share of the son in the family estate.

In the case of Masit Ullah v. Damodar Prasad (15), Mr. Ameer Ali, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, quotes the following from Vijnaneswara :

"Again Vijnaneswara, commenting on the following enunciation of Yajnavalkya (II, 50 (a), 'The father being gone to a foreign country or deceased (naturally or civilly) or afflicted with an incurable disease, the sons or their sons must pay his debt, but, if disputed it must be proved by witnesses,' states that 'Brihaspati says : 'The sons must pay the debts of their father when proved as if it were their own (i. e., with interest); the grandson has to pay only the principal while the great-grandson shall not be compelled to pay anything unless he has assets."

His Lordship proceeds :

"The Hindu lawyers appear to have made a difference in the obligations resting upon sons, grandsons and great-grandsons. The son was bound to discharge the ancestral debt as his own, principal and interest, whether he received any assets or not from the ancestor. The grandsons had to discharge the debt without interest and the great-grandson's liability arose only if he received any assets from the ancestor. The British Indian Courts have held that the son and grandson are not liable for any debt unless they receive assets and that the obligations of each of them, sons and grandsons, are co-extensive. In the case of Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (7), the son's liability is expressly laid down, and their Lordships think that the rule extends equally to grandsons and great-grandsons."

On the authority of the above quotations I am quite clear in my mind that "assets" in the hands of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons must also include the whole of the family estate or a portion thereof. This being so, the liability of the Hindu son must subsist so long as any portion of the family estate is found to be in his hands. Patkar, J , in his able judgment, if I may respectfully say so, in the case of Annabhat Shankarbhat v Shirappa Dundappa (4), quotes the following comment of Mitakshara on the Yajnyavalkya quoted in Mr. Ameer Ali's judgment

"By the use of the plural number in 'sons and grandsons,' (it is indicated that) if there are several sons who are divided, they should pay according to their respective shares. If they are undivided and are living jointly in a body, giving the managership according to qualifications, it appears that the manager alone should pay. As says Narada (ch. 1, verse 2) Therefore, where the father is dead, the sons should pay the debt each according to his share, when they are divided; or if undivided (it should be paid) by one who holds the lead (in the family.)"

As pointed out in their judgment with reference to the Privy Council decision in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (7) the liability of the sons to pay the father's debt arose even during the lifetime of the father. On principle therefore I can see no escape from the position that the partition cannot have the effect of absolving the son of his liability where under partition he has received a portion of the family estate

The Bombay case just now mentioned is a direct support in favour of an affirmative answer to the question under consideration and so is the decision of three out of five learned Judges in the case of Subramania Ayyar v. Sabapathy Aiyar (3). The leading judgment in support of the opposite view was delivered by Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., in the above case For the reasons stated in the preceding portions of my judgment, I am unable to agree with the opinion of the learned Judge. I say so with the greatest respect. Most of the arguments used by the learned Judge would seem to have been considered by me already yet in deference to the learned Judge's view I propose to advert again very briefly to two of such arguments. The one argument is that the liability of the family property for the father's debts depends on the father's power of alienation as the manager of the family. I am unable to accept this view of law The authorities establish beyond any doubt that the father can make an alienation of the family property and also without exercising the power of alienation he:

"may by incurring a debt so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt, Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (7)."

I am unable to interpret the above quoted propostion of law laid down by Lord Dunedin as merely an extension of the power of alienation or in the sense that if the power of alienation is lost by reason of partition the liability of the estate to be taken in execution is also lost. To my mind the said power and the said liability are not inter-dependent. They are independent of each other.

Another answer to this argument may be this that the debt for which the liability is laid on the family estate was incurred by the father while the family was joint and while he occupied the position of the manager of the family. I think it is reasonable to say that the estate becomes bound from the date of the debt in the incurring of which the power of alienation could have been exercised.

The second argument and this is the argument which has been used in the case of Gaya Prasad v. Murlidhar (2) is that the affirmative answer to the question leads to the result that the family estate stands charged with the liability yet it is agreed that it is not so charged. With great respect it seems to me that the argument lays too much stress on the technical sense of the word "charge." According to the decisions of the Judicial Committee already quoted, the family estate including the son's interest is "bound" and "liable" to purge the debt In that sense the debt may be treated as a charge; but the effectiveness of the charge according to the same authorities is restricted to assets in the hands of the son and ceases if the estate passes out of his hand. In that state of things the liability is not a charge and this is so by reason of another principle of law which protects a bona fide transferee We are all familiar with cases of a charge where it operates against one class of persons and does not operate against another class of persons. My answer therefore to the question is in the affirmative and and this answer is consistent with the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Jageshwar v. Mani Ram (15) and with a previous decision of mine in Jai Narain v Mahabir Prasad (16)

Raza, J—I have very few words to add to the judgments that have already been delivered and in which I concur I would also answer the question in the affirmative In my opinion, though a Hindu son, who has already received his heritage may no longer be compelled to discharge his pious obligations in respect of debts incurred by his father after his separation, but he is liable for debts incurred before partition and for debts after partition to the extent of the father's assets in his hands. The son will of course be liable if the partition was unreal or even, if otherwise, it was made with intent to defeat the father's creditors or had resulted in defeating them. I also prefer to follow the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Subramania Ayyar v. Sabapathy Aiyar (3) A simple creditor of a father in a joint Hindu family is entitled to recover the debt from the shares of the sons even after a bona fide partition between the father and the sons. The property will remain liable even if it is partitioned. Sons who are divided are liable for the debts of the father to the extent of the family property which comes to them under the partition.

(After receiving opinion of the Full Bench)

Pullan, J.—The main question raised in this appeal was referred by me for decision by a Full Bench. That decision has been received and the finding is that sons of a Hindu father are liable to pay the personal debts incurred by their father out of the family property which has come to them by partition although the decree was passed against the father alone after the partition This finding establishes the liability of the sons who have contested the present suit. I have been asked to consider a further question namely, whether the failure of the creditor to make the sons parties to the suit has any effect on the present case. This question was clearly included in my order of reference and it was considered by the learned Judges who constituted the Bench Although no particular stress was laid in their judgments on this aspect of the case, I cannot conclude that it did not receive the full attention of the learned Judges, and I am bound to accept their decision as it stands The sons therefore are liable to the extent of the family property which they received by partition and the judgment of the lower Court is correct and must be affirmed

The only other question raised in appeal is that of costs. The Munsif laid the costs on the parties and the lower appellate Court altered that finding and decided that the plaintiff ought to receive the costs of the suit as he was successfull in the main. I have to consider the order of the lower appellate Court, and I must hold that that Court exercised its discretion in the matter of costs with due care He was clearly at liberty to differ on this point from the view taken by the Munsif As he did so, I am bound by the view of the lower appellate Court unless it is demonstrably wrong. As the order of the lower appellate Court is a reasonable and proper order, I decline to interfere.

The appeal is dismissed with costs

Ali Muhammad—for Respondent 1

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant Chandrapal Dubey is the holder of a simple money decree for Rs. 4,543-5 against Lachman Prasad. Lachman Prasad is the holder of two decrees against Saera Bibi in respect of costs incurred in a litigation in which they were opposite parties. One decree is for Rs. 993-11-7. This is dated 18th February 1926. The other decree is for Rs 52. This is dated 22nd April 1927. Lachman Prasad attached a share of 4 annas 10½ pies belonging to Saera Bibi in Chak Adil Khan in execution of his decree of 18th February 1926. Muhammad Salamatullah, the husband of Saera Bibi, objected on 8th November 1926 under O. 21, R. 58 that the share in question was not the property of Saera Bibi, as she had mortgaged the share to Zainab Bibi and as Zainab Bibi had obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure in respect of that share. He continued that he was a transferee of Zainab Bibi's rights and that he had obtained a final decree for foreclosure and that he was thus the sole proprietor of the share. His claim being accepted by the Court executing Lachman Prasad's decree the property was released on 4th December 1926. Lachman Prasad was then obliged under the provisions of O. 21, Rs 63, if he contested the correctness of this decision, to institute a suit within a year, that is to say, up to 5th December 1927, as 4th December 1927 was a Sunday. Lachman Prasad took no action in the matter.

Chandrapal Dubey applied to attach the rights of Lachman Prasad in the two decrees which he held against Saera Bibi. He applied to attach these rights on 3rd December 1927. On 5th December 1927 he instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises against Muhammad Salamatullah, Saera Bibi, Zainab Bibi and Lachman Prasad for a declaration that the transfer by Saera Bibi was fictitious, that Zainab Bibi had obtained no rights under that transfer, that Muhammad Salamatullah had obtained no right from Zainab Bibi and that the share of 4 annas 10½ pies in Chak Adil Ali was still the property of Saera Bibi and liable to attachment in Lachman Prasad's decree Now it is to be noted that on 5th December 1927 Chandrapal Dubey had not attached the decree held by Lachman Prasad against Saera Bibi As we have said he applied for the attachment on 3rd December 1927. Unfortunately a copy of his application is not on the record But we know this much—that the application was not in order, for we find from Ex A-1 that his application, which admittedly was of 3rd December 1927, was put up on 6th December 1927 after correction and the order for attachment was passed on 6th December 1927 The learned Judge who heard the suit has dismissed it on two grounds He dismissed it on a finding that Chandrapal Dubey on the date he filed the suit had no right to execute the decree held by Lachman Prasad, and that on the earliest date when he had a right to execute the decree held by Lachman Prasad any suit of the nature was time-barred. He dismissed it in the second place because he held that the suit should have been filed in the Court of a Munsif The learned counsel for the appellant admits that the suit should have been filed in the Court of a Munsif. He accepts the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Radha Kuar v. Reoti Singh (1) as showing that the suit did not lie in a Court other than the Court of a Munsif It is clear that as far as Chandrapal Dubey is concerned he could obtain no more than Rs. 1,045-11-7 and that the value of the share in Chak Adil Khan is not material.

The learned counsel has rightly pointed out that if we take the view that Chandrapal Dubey had a right to bring this suit we could give him all that he desires which would be an order returning the plaint to the Court of a Munsif for determination on the merits. We, however, are of opinion that Chandrapal Dubey has no right in the matter. His right to be considered the representative of Lachman Prasad is based on the provisions of O. 21, R. 53 (3), Civil P. C. Chandrapal Dubey is the holder of a decree against Lachman Prasad. He is seeking to execute that decree by the attachment of a decree for payment of money held by Lachman Prasad. Thus he is a representative of Lachman Prasad. But when did he become the representative of Lachman Prasad? Clearly not on the day on which he applied for the attachment of Lachman Prasad's decree but on the day when the attachment of Lachman Prasad's decree was ordered. That day was 6th December 1927 and as the learned trial Judge rightly remarks, on 6th December 1927 Lachman Prasad could not have brought a suit to contest the release of the property from the attachment and if the holder could not have brought a suit on that date his representative certainly could not bring a suit either. In these circumstances we uphold the decision of the learned trial Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—The subject-matter of the suit from which this second appeal arises is the khudkasht land of a certain Bhawani Din This Bhawani Din owned 16 biswansis share in the village and he executed a deed of gift on 26th April 1920, by which he gave two-thirds of this khudkasht property to his daughter-in-law Mt. Mithni and one-third share to his brother Hira Lal. Bhawani Din died shortly afterwards, and we find that in the year 1924, Mt. Mithni was shown to be in exclusive possession of certain plots and in joint possession along with Hira Lal of certain other plots. In 1925 Mt. Mithni herself gifted her two-thirds share to her son-in-law and her daughter. It appears that this gift by Mt Mithni was objectionable to Hira Lal and his son and other members of the family who took possession of the plots, which had been in the exclusive possession of Mithni's donees to get footing either in these plots or in the four plots which were recorded jointly in the names of Mithni and Hira Lal. The donees of Mithni brought this suit for possession and damages, accruing from the loss which they sustained owing to their being unable to obtain the profits of the land. Both the Courts below agreed that they could give possession to the plaintiffs of the numbers which had been entered as in the exclusive possession of Mt. Mithni, but the Court of first instance was of opinion that the civil Court could not award any sum by way of damages, as this was of the nature of profits, and also that it was impossible to grant a decree for joint possession of the remaining four numbers. The lower appellate Court disagreed on this point and passed a decree for joint possession of the four numbers which had been entered in the papers as being owned jointly by Mithni and Hira Lal, and also passed a decree for damages as mesne profits, the amount of which was to be determined later

It is argued in appeal that this decision is correct and that the plaintiffs' only remedy in a case of this kind is by way of a suit for partition or a suit for profits or both in the revenue Court. There is, however, a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh which has not been dissented from but rather accepted as authority by a Bench of this Court in the case of Jalaluddin Khan v. Rampal (1) which is distinctly in favour of the plaintiffs in the present suit I refer to the case of Ram Bahadur Singh v. Lal Narsingh Partab (2) This ruling itself is based upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court, Jagarnath Ojha v. Ram Phal (3) which held that a plaintiff who is entitled to possession jointly with other person can be granted a decree for joint possession not only if he was originally in joint possession and has been subsequently ousted but even if he has never been in possession at all. This case referred to cosharers in village rights and appears to me to be applicable to the case before me. This is even a stronger case, because it can hardly be said that the present plaintiffs were never in possession, for they inherited the rights of their donor Mt Mithni who was undoubtedly in undisputed possession of all the four numbers in dispute along with her cosharers. The lower appellate Court finds, I consider rightly, that the appellants are in the position of persons who have taken wrongful possession of property and are virtually trespassers in so far as the share obtained by the plaintiffs from Mt. Mithni is concerned. This is not a case in which the parties should be sent to obtain an order of partition from the revenue Court. It might be necessary to do so in their own interests later on but a decree for joint possession, even if it is not what the plaintiffs specifically ask for in their plaint, can on the authority of the Judicial Commissioner's Court to which I have referred, be properly granted Nor is there any difficulty as to granting a decree for mesne profits or damages, whichever it may be considered to be, as this is in no way the same as a suit for profits between cosharers contemplated in the Oudh Rent Act In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the Court below is correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur dated 20th November 1928, reversing the decree of the Munsif of Musafirkhana dated 8th September 1928. The case is such a simple and clear one that I propose to dispose it of in a few words.

One Mt. Munni obtained title to certain plots of land under a deed of shankalp executed by her father on 24th September 1890 and again under a will made by the same gentleman on 9th September 1894. The father died more than 20 years ago. Mt. Munni entered into possession of the property covered by the shankalap and the will and continued in possession till 27th April 1916. On that date she made a gift of that property in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant has unlawfully dispossessed him from the property gifted to him by Mt. Munni. The defence, with which we are concerned in the present appeal, is that Mt. Munni had no title to confer for the reason that under the gift and the will of her father she acquired only a life-estate in the property in suit.

The Court of first instance on the interpretation of the two documents mentioned above came to the conclusion that they both clearly and unequivocally conferred an absolute estate on Mt. Munni. The result was that the plaintiff's suit was decreed by that Court. On appeal by the defendant the learned Additional Subordinate Judge interpreted the two documents as conferring an estate for life only. It is urged that the view taken by him as to the interpretation of the two documents in question is entirely wrong.

Obviously the first thing done by the learned advocate for the appellant was to read the two documents. When I read them with him, I confess I received a shock at the reasoning with which the learned Additional Subordinate Judge persuaded himself to the interpretation that the two documents conferred a bare life estate on Mt. Munni. He has entirely ignored the effect of the words used in those documents, not only their effect but it seems to me that he has also ignored the words themselves if he knew the obvious and the only meaning of those words. He has used two arguments in support of his opinion. One is that the donee is a Hindu female. The second is that the documents confer merely right to possession. Of course as a fact it is true that the donee is a Hindu female but that in itself is not a sufficient reason to deprive the words used of their natural import. The second reason employed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is altogether incorrect on merits. Both the documents purport to transfer haqiat (rights) and the hissa (share) of the donor in favour of the donee.

Coming to the words used in the two documents I find that no more emphatic language could be employed to denote a gift of absolute estate. The donee is to possess rights in the gifted property naslan bad naslan and batan bad batan (generation after generation). Further, the donor states that he and his heirs and successors shall have no right left in the gifted property either then or in future. The words naslan bad naslan and batan bad batan have always been held as words denoting an absolute estate. They may not be words of art but the meaning which those words bear cannot connote any other estate than an estate of inheritance and I cannot conceive in the context of any document unless the document is full of contradictions words which can take away or cut down the literal meaning of those expressions. In the present case, however, there is nothing in the context to produce that effect.

Having regard to the fact that there is still a possibility of the subordinate judicial Courts interpreting a document of this nature as conveying or bequeathing a bare life-estate it is desirable that reference may be made to some decided cases on the subject. The foremost in the class of such cases is the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Harihar Bakhsh v. Uman Pershad (1). The other case to which reference may be made is Karim Dad Khan v. Mt. Bibi Ghafuran (2) and lastly to the case of Ahmad Azim v. Shafi Jan (3).

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored. The plaintiff-appellant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal arising out of a suit for damages for breach of contract. A joint stock company known as the Karaundia Industrial Development Company owned a flour mill named as the "Lucknow Flour Mills." On 9th January 1925, the K. I. D. Company entered into an agreement with the Cawnpore Flour Mills Ltd., under which agreement the Cawnpore Flour Mills were to take over the Lucknow Flour Mills and to work it for the period of ten years on certain terms and conditions set forth in the agreement. The plaintiff's case is that in December 1925, the defendants purchased some bags of flour, as detailed in the plaint from them, at the rates agreed upon between the parties, and that subsequently they did not take delivery of the goods which resulted in loss to the plaintiff company. This suit was originally instituted in the name of the Lucknow Flour Mills but subsequently at the instance of certain creditors of the K. I. D. Company an order of compulsory winding up of the said company was made by this Court. An application was made for amendment of the plaint, which was allowed and as a result thereof the name of the Cawnpore Flour Mills was substituted as plaintiff in place of the Lucknow Flour Mills.

One of the defences raised on behalf of the defendants was that the transactions in suit took place between the Lucknow Flour Mills and the defendants and that the Cawnpore Flour Mills who were merely in the position of agents for the Lucknow Flour Mills were not entitled to maintain the suit. The learned Munsif who tried the suit accepted this plea of the defendants and dismissed the suit. On an appeal by the plaintiff company the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj disagreed with the view taken by the trial Court as regards the plaintiff's right to maintain the suit and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

The defendants have filed this second appeal and the only contention urged on their behalf in support of this appeal is that the position of the Cawnpore Flour Mills in relation to the Lucknow Flour Mills is merely that of an agent and this being so they are not entitled to maintain the present suit.

As regards the question of the relationship between the Cawnpore Flour Mills and the Lucknow Flour Mills the position taken up on behalf of the respondents is that the contract of agency was confined to the working of the mills and did not extend to the sale of the goods. We have carefully examined the terms of the deed of agreement dated 9th January 1925. The plaintiff company have been described in this document as "the working agents" and under its terms they are authorised to work the mills and to carry on all its business including contracts, sales, purchases, receipts and payments."

Emphasis has been laid on the fact that they were allowed the sole control and management of the business and they were also authorised to make contracts, sales and purchases, etc. in their own name. We are clearly of opinion that the position of an agent cannot be improved so as to give him the status of a principal by the mere fact of his being given extensive powers or being allowed to make contracts in his name. On a careful examination of all the terms of the agreement we are satisfied that the position of the plaintiff company was only that of an agent, as contended by the defendants-appellants.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff company also contended that the transaction in suit was as a matter of fact made between the defendants and the plaintiff company acting in their own right and not as agents of the Lucknow Flour Mills. We cannot accept the argument. Ex. 1 embodies the original contract. It shows that the offer for purchase was made by defendants to the Cawnpore Flour Mills, who were described as the working agents of the Lucknow Flour Mills. We, therefore, hold that the Cawnpore Flour Mills were the agents of the Lucknow Flour Mills and the contract in suit was made by them as such.

The next question is whether the plaintiff company, even if they entered into the contract as agent, can maintain the present suit It has been contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that the Cawnpore Flour Mills had an interest in the contract and that they are therefore entitled to sue in their own name We think that the contention is correct and must succeed. Cl. 14 of the agreement between the two companies provides that "all stores, stocks, goods, produce and moveable property relating to the business together with all book debts, outstandings and the benefit of all contracts in connexion with the business shall belong to and be owned by the working agents."

Clause 15 further provides that

"these stores, stocks etc., shall be taken over by the K. I. D Co., on the termination of the agreement, after payment in cash."

Admittedly the transactions in suit related to flour which was the produce of the Lucknow Mills and there can be no doubt that the Cawnpore Flour Mills have under this clause of the agreement an interest in the said goods, and therefore an interest also in the contract relating to the sale thereof. In Williams v Millington (1) it was held that an auctioneer employed to sell the goods of a third person by auction can maintain an action for goods sold and delivered against a buyer, though the goods were known to be the property of such third person. The reason given for this view was :

"that an auctioneer has a possession coupled with an interest in goods which he is employed to sell and not a bare custody like a servant or shopman."

In Bowstead on Agency (6th edition) p. 431 the proposition has been stated in the following terms :

"An agent may sue in his own name on contracts made by him on behalf of his principal in the following cases, namely ..... .

(b) Where as in the case of factors, and auctioneers, he has a special property in, or lien upon the subject matter of the contract, or has a beneficial interest in the completion thereof."

The rule set forth above does not in any way conflict with the Indian Law on the subject. S. 230, Contract Act is as follows :

"In the absence of any contract to that effect, an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them."

Such a contract shall be presumed to exist in the following cases :

(1) Where the contract is made by an agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad.

(2) Where the agent does not disclose the name of his principal.

(3) Where the principal, though disclosed, cannot be sued.

The three cases mentioned in this section in which a contract to that effect may be presumed are by no means exhaustive. Thus there can be no difficulty in presuming such a contract in a case in which the agent has an interest in the transaction. Apart from this the position of an agent in such a case is virtually that of a principal to the extent of the interest, which he has in the contract. This rule is based upon general principles and not on any technicalities peculiar to the English Law. It has been followed in the Indian Courts as well. Reference may be made to Subramania Pattar v. Narayanan Nayar (2), in which their Lordships of the Madras High Court after discussing Williams v. Millington (1) and certain other English cases remarked that :

"the real proposition of law which these and other cases establish is that where an agent enters into a contract as such, if he has an interest in the contract, he may sue in his own name."

We are therefore of opinion that where the agent has a special property or a beneficial interest in the subject-matter of the contract, he is entitled to enforce it even though his representative character may have been declared at the time of the contract. As pointed out before, there can be no doubt that the Cawnpore

(2) [1901] 24 Mad. 180.

Flour Mills were not bare agents so far as the goods in question are concerned, but at the least the position in the case was of an agency coupled with interest. For these reasons we agree with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment—This matter has come before us on the report of the Chief Inspector of Stamps. The Chief Inspector of Stamps has submitted in his note of inspection that the court-fee paid in this case is insufficient and that the plaintiff should be required to pay the court-fee on the value of the property in suit.

We have considered the note of the Chief Inspector of Stamps We have also heard the learned counsel on both sides. We think the court-fee paid in this case is sufficient.

We have examined the plaint carefully. The plaintiff sues for possession of certain zamindari shares questioning the validity of a certain compromise and and a decree passed on the basis of the compromise. He has brought the suit against his sister-in law, Mt. Dharamraji Kuar who is a Hindu widow. It is alleged that she held the property under the compromise and the decree, the validity of which is questioned by the plaintiff. She executed a mortgage in favour of defendant 2 after the decree mentioned above was passed by the Court. The plaintiff questions the validity of that mortgage also alleging that it is invalid even if the compromise and the decree mentioned above are held to be binding on him. He therefore prays for the following reliefs

(a) A decree for possession of the zamindari shares by setting aside the compromise and the decree mentioned above.

(b) If relief (a) be not granted for any reason, then a decree for cancellation of the mortgage mentioned above.

The plaint contains also a prayer for general relief and costs of the suit.

The plaintiff has paid a court-fee of Rs. 10-8-0 on five times the Government revenue. The Chief Inspector of Stamps has submitted with reference to the ruling in Mt Ganga Dei v. Sukhdeo Prasad (1), followed in Tula Ram v. Dwarka Das (2), that the court fee paid in this case is insufficient We are not prepared to agree with him. In the case reported in Mt. Ganga Dei v Sukhdeo Prasad (1), the plaintiff was the wife of a man who had been adjudged a lunatic. She had sued as manager of her husband's property. Her husband prior to his being adjudged a lunatic and while the proceedings were pending, had executed the deed of gift in favour of the defendant and he had taken possession of the property thereunder The plaintiff in that case alleged that her husband was a lunatic at the time when the deed of gift was executed and she brought the suit for the following reliefs:

(a) that it may be declared that the deed of gift executed by her husband was invalid and void and that the defendant had thereby acquired no right in the property mentioned in the deed;

(b) for actual possession of the land conveyed by the deed and

(c) for the recovery of the amount which the defendant had recovered under the deed;

It was held in that case that the suit was clearly one for a declaration with consequential relief and the court-fee was payable under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. That suit was of course a suit for a declaration with consequential relief. The question to be decided is whether the case before us is also a case for a declaration with consequential relief. We are of opinion that the case before us is not a case for a declaration with consequential relief. It is a suit for possession of the zamindari shares principally and the plaintiff prays in the alternative for a decree for the cancellation of the mortgage-deed in question also In the present suit the real relief which the plaintiff claims is the relief for possession of the property Where the plaintiff claims possession of a certain property and it is stated in the plaint that he sues for possession by cancellation of some document or documents, he cannot be considered to be asking for two reliefs separately. The Chief Inspector of Stamps has referred also to a case decided by a Judge of this Court in November 1925—Sarju v. Sheoraj (3). We think that case was rightly decided by our learned brother Misra, J. As we find that the present suit is not a suit for a declaration with consequental relief, we hold that the court-fee paid by the plaintiff is sufficient. We should like to note that the learned counsel on both sides agree that the court-fee paid in this case is sufficient and we agree with them.

Where it is not shown that an agent was appointed under deed providing payment of sums of money realized by him at a stated time or that money was demanded from him in writing the case is not covered by the provisions of the Interest Act (32 of 1839) and the principal is not entitled to claim interest : 41 All. 254, Ref. [P 421 C 2]

(b) Interest—Agent called upon to render account and refusing to do so is liable to pay interest.

Bisheshar Nath Srivastava—for Respondent.

Judgment—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for rendition of accounts under S. 108, Cl. 5, Oudh Rent Act, 22 of 1886. The suit was brought by the plaintiff-respondent against the defendant-appellant for recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,725-5-9 on account of principal and interest by rendition of accounts for the years 1326 fasli to 1331 fasli. The plaintiff's allegation was to the effect that the defendant was his agent and in that capacity realized the money on his behalf. Out of the sum,claimed Rs 1683-10-9 was on account of principal and Rs. 1,041-11 on account of interest at the rate of 1 per cent per mensem calculated from the end of every fasli year for which realization had been made

The defence put forward by the appellant was to the effect that he was not the agent of the respondent but had been collecting rent in the capacity of a thekadar under a thekanama executed by one Mathura Prasad the former lambardar in respect of the entire mahal of which collections had been made. The period of the theka was alleged to have expired in 1330 fasli and the collections for the year 1331 fasli were alleged to have been made by the appellant in the capacity of a cosharer, his own sons who were joint with him having acquired in that year a share in the mahal. This defence has been overruled by both the Courts below. They have held that the alleged theka was never put into force and the revenue Courts did not recognize it when mutation was sought for by the appellant on the basis thereof. In that view of the case the trial Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff-respondent for the sum claimed and that decree has been upheld by the learned First Additional District Judge of Lucknow at Bara Banki.

In second appeal before us only one point has been raised and that is the point relating to interest

We have heard arguments on this point at some length and are of opinion that the defendant-appellant cannot be held liable to pay interest until it be shown by the plaintiff-respondent that the former was called upon by the latter to give account and that he refused to do so. In Lalman v. Chinta Mani (1) it was held by Piggot and Walsh, JJ. that where money is recoverable by a principal from an agent as having been received by the agent on the principal's behalf, the agent is not as a rule liable for interest unless by virtue of an express agreement or of some mercantile usage. The learned Judges observed on p. 256 as follows :

"The only grounds upon which interest can be claimed upon such a sum of money when the liability for the sum is established are to be found, either in S. 73, Contract Act, illustration (n), or in the Interest Act (32 of 1839). Illustration (n) deals with express contract by one person to pay a sum of money to another on a day specified and provides that whatever loss the obligee can show by failure to pay he can only recover interest from the due date up to the date of payment. That illustration clearly deals with the breach of an express contract and the view taken in Pollock's Indian Contract Act, and we agree with it, is that it does not intend to abolish the ordinary rule or to supersede the Act of 1839. This case clearly does not come within that illustration. Act 32 of 1839 provides that interest shall be payable upon all debts or sums certain, payable at a certain time or otherwise, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument, or if payable otherwise, then from the time when demand of payment shall have been made in writing, so as such demand shall give notice to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand until the term of payment. It is not suggested that the case comes within that provision. That Act goes on to provide that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law. The question, therefore, remains, whether by the general or common law interest is payable in respect of such a transaction as this. The rule of English Common law was that interest was not payable on ordinary debts unless by agreement or by mercantile usage, nor could damages be given for non-payment of mere money debts."

It is clear from the facts of the case before us that no express agreement to pay interest was either alleged or proved; nor was any evidence given of any usage or village custom. In the absence of such evidence one other ground upon which interest can be claimed is under the Interest Act (32 of 1839) which provides that a Court has to allow interest in cases where certain debts or sums of money are payable at a certain fixed time and the payment is not made. In such cases the Court has power to allow interest in cases where certain debts or sums of money are payable at a certain fixed time and the payment is not made. In such cases the Court has power to allow interest to the creditor from the time when such debts or sums were payable. It also provides that if such debts or sums of money are payable at a fixed time otherwise than by virtue of some written instrument and the payment has not been made, the interest may be awarded from the date fixed for such payment provided the payment of it is demanded in writing. It is admitted that the case before us is not covered by any of those provisions embodied in the Interest Act (32 of 1839) since it is not shown that the defendant-appellant was appointed agent on behalf of the plaintiff respondent under any deed providing payment of sums realized by him at a stated time or that money was demanded from him in writing. We are therefore of opinion that under the provisions of Act 32 of 1839, the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to claim interest.

It, however, appears to us to be a settled rule of all the Courts of Equity that an accounting party may under certain circumstances be charged with interest. In Turner v Burkinshaw (2), Lord Chelmsford, L. C. observed :

"It is the duty of an agent to be constantly ready with his accounts. But this must mean that the agent must be ready to render his accounts when they are demanded. If no demand is made upon him it is the simple case of an agent retaining money which he ought to pay over, but which he has not been required to pay; and there is no case, of which I am aware, under such circumstances without anything more, the agent has been made to pay interest."

It would thus appear that if the appellant was called upon to render accounts and refused to do so he would be liable to pay interest.

The learned advocate for the respondent referred us to para. 3 of the plaint where an allegation was made to the effect that the defendant refused to pay the amount due from him or to render any accounts in respect of it and it was contended by him on the basis of this allegation that the respondent had made a demand upon the appellant to render accounts and that he had failed to do so. There is no doubt that this allegation is to be found in the plaint but the difficulty about it is that it does not specify as to when this demand was made and without this information we are unable to calculate the interest which ought to be awarded to the plaintiff.

(1) [1919] 41 All. 254=49 I. C. 696=17 A. L. J. 169.

It was next contended that the attitude of the defendant-appellant throughout had been that he had denied the fact of his agency and under those circumstances he ought to be presumed to have refused to render accounts. We are of opinion that we cannot make any presumption as to the refusal to render accounts at any period prior to the institution of the suit. The refusal embodied in the written statement would only take us to the period when that allegation was made or at any rate when the suit was instituted It cannot obviously, unless there is any evidence to that effect, take us to any anterior date

The learned advocate for the respondent next urged, and we think rightly, that the plaintiff-respondent had been prevented from proving a specific demand made by the plaintiff calling upon the appellant to render accounts by the attitude which the defendant-appellant took in the case. His contention was to the effect that the appellant had denied the very fact of agency and had never taken the present plea. There is no doubt that this is true and in order to do justice in the case we are of opinion that an opportunity should be given to the plaintiff-respondent to prove as to whether he made a demand upon the defendant-appellant to render accounts, and if so, when.

We, therefore, send an issue down to the lower appellate Court to the following effect :

Did the plaintiff-respondent make any demand upon the defendant-appellant to render accounts in respect of realizations, and if so, when ?

The lower appellate Court will give opportunity to both the parties to produce such evidence as they may like to produce in respect of this issue. The finding is to be returned within six weeks. Parties will be allowed to file objections within ten days from the date of the finding.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff appellant seeks to recover his money by sale of the mortgaged property. The facts of the case are that one Mt. Menda inherited certain property from her husband Narain Singh. On 1st November 1909 she executed a mortgage in respect of a portion of that property which consists of house No 17 situate in village Lachha Khera, district Unao, in favour of plaintiff appellant Jagannath Singh for a sum of Rs. 99. The present suit has been brought by the mortgagee appellant to recover the money due on the basis of that mortgage. Mt. Menda died somewhere in the year 1913 and the defendants respondents are the reversioners of her husband. The present suit was instituted in April 1927. The suit was resisted by the defendants respondents on two grounds, among others that no consideration passed under the deed and even if it did pass it was not justified by legal necessity. The learned Munsif, North Unao, who tried the suit came to the conclusion that the deed was for consideration but was justified by legal necessity only to the extent of Rs. 64-4-3 which amount according to his finding, had been borrowed by Mt. Menda from the appellant for the payment of a rent decree obtained by the superior proprietor Kunwar Bahadur against her. The decree for the said amount with proportionate costs was passed in favour of the plaintiff appellant on 18th July 1927.

On appeal against this decree the learned Subordinate Judge of Maliahabad has taken a different view. He has held that the passing of the consideration under the deed in suit has not been established and even if that be held to have been proved it was not established that the money had been borrowed for legal necessity. It was observed by the learned Subordidate Judge that it had not been proved that it was necessary for the widow to borrow this sum for the payment of the decree for arrears of rent obtained against her. He therefore accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit by his decree dated 23rd May 1928. In second appeal it is contended before me that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in holding that the payment of consideration was not established and that the money borrowed by Mt. Menda was justified by legal necessity. I have heard the arguments in this case at length but it appears to me that the plaintiff appellant's case must fail on both points. As to the passing of consideration, there is no independent evidence besides the recital in the mortgage-deed. It is a settled rule of law that the recitals in a deed though binding on the parties to that deed, cannot be considered to be binding upon third parties who are not in any way connected with the deed, and in order to establish that consideration passed under that deed it would be necessary for a creditor seeking to recover money under that deed to establish the passing of such consideration independently of the recitals contained in the deed itself. It is admitted by the larned advocate for the appellant that there is no evidence on the record, apart from the recitals in the deed of mortgage, which could establish the passing of the consideration. Under those circumstances I am compelled to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the payment of the consideration is not established

As to the legal necessity, I also agree with the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge It has been held in several cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council and by the High Courts in India that the payment of a decree for arrears of rent cannot by itself be considered to be legal necessity unless there is evidence to show that the widow had no means to pay that decree and that the borrowing was necessary in order to discharge the debt which if not discharged, would have resulted in the sale of the property in her hands and which she has inherited from her husband. It this were not the rule of law it would be open to a widow to appropriate the entire profits of the property for her own use and benefit without paying rent or revenue which is actually charged on the profits accruing from the property A Hindu female cannot be considered to be entitled, while she is in possession of the property inherited by her, to appropriate the gross profits of the property and to throw the burden of the payment of legitimate charges like those of rent and revenue upon the reversioners I am of opinion that she is only entitled to the net profits of the property which might remain in her hands after the payment of the Government revenue or the rent as the case may be which she must pay in order to continue in possession of the property inherited by her. I would in this connexion refer to two rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Nugenderchunder Ghose v. Kaminee Dossee (1) and Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (2) and three cases of the Calcutta High Court reported in Mahomed Sadat Ali v. Hara Sundari (3), Direswar Das v.

Kamal Kumar (4), and Rameswar Mandal v. Provabati Debi (5). The subject is discussed at great length in the last case by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of Mookerji and Beachcroft, JJ. It has been held in the last case that the mere fact that money is raised for the payment of rent and applied for that purpose is not sufficient to prove legal necessity. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 18 of 1929, Decided on 31st July 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge., Barabanki, D/- 21st May 1928.

Wajib-ul-arz — Entry giving rights to plaintiffs in abadi has binding force even though they lose proprietary right.

Where the wajibularz records the rights of the plaintiffs in the abadi of the village, the entry to the effect that no tenant can build a new structure in the village without the permission of the plaintiff, has binding force even though the plaintiffs lose the proprietary rights, where these rights in the abadi were remnants of the ancient proprietary title of the village which was for a period of over 400 years in the hands of the plaintiffs' family. Judgment.—This is the defendants' appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki dated 4th October 1928, affirming the decree of the Munsif of Ram Sanehighat, dated 21st May 1928.

The subject matter of controversy in the suit, out of which this appeal arises, is a certain right in the abadi of the village Debipur, Pargana Haidergarh, in the district of Bara Banki. Defendant 1, Mr. H. Hunter, has succeeded to the proprietary title of the village by a purchase at a public auction in execution of a decree against the late taluqdar of the village. The other defendants are cultivators residing in the village of Debipur and have recently started to build a structure on plot 84 comprised within the abadi of the village. The plaintiffs' case is that a tenant is not entitled to construct a new building on any portion of the abadi land without the consent of the plaintiffs. The question in the case therefore is as to whether the plaintiffs are possessed of the right which they claim.

The Courts below have answered this question in the affirmative and after hearing arguments I have come to the conclusion that the decision arrived at by those Courts is correct and should be maintained. Ex facie it looks somewhat extraordinary that persons who are not proprietors of the village, as the plaintiffs are admittedly not, should have a right to interfere with the proprietor's mode of enjoyment of lands of which he is the owner. One of such usual modes is to grant permission to tenants to build houses within the abadi site of the village either gratuitously or on receipt of consideration. In this particular case, however, when the matter is approached with care and in the light of the history showing the vicissitudes of title in respect of the ownership of the village the extraordinary nature of the proposition disappears.

According to the narrative recited in that portion of the wajibularz which relates to the history of the title, the village of Debipur was originally founded by one Debi Pande, who was admittedly a remote ancestor of the plaintiffs of this suit. Till the year 1249 fasli both the title and the possession of the village remained with one Loka Pande, a descendant of Debi. In the year 1250 Fasli the village was mortgaged presumably with possession to Chaudhari Lutfullah, the predecessor-in-interest of the first statutory taluqdar of the village Chaudhari Sarfraz Ahmed. Soon after the mortgage the village was incorporated in the taluqdari qabuliat of Lutfullah, a fate not uncommon to a large number of villages now within the territorial limits of most of the taluqa in the provice of Oudh. Finally the grant of the sanad by the British Government at the resettlement of the province after the confiscation of 1858 perfected the taluqdar's title in respect of the village of Debipur. It is quite clear from the record of the case, however, that the vestiges of the old title in the Pandes remained with them and I am happy to observe that at the first regular settlement of the village they were reconsidered and maintained by the then taluqdar.

It appears that the first regular settlement of the village of Debipur was effected and completed in the year 1870-1871. At that time the head of the Pande family was one Sheo Shankar. In the Courts of settlement he instituted three claims in respect of his rights in the village; (1) claim for a certain area of sir lands; (2) claim for rights in the abadi lands of the village and lastly a claim for a certain number of groves. Undoubtedly these were modest and reasonable claims and equally reasonably they were all settled amicably with the result that a compromise petition was presented to the Court on 21st January 1871 in the matter of all the three claims. In the present case we are concerned only with the claim as to the rights in the abadi of the village. In that behalf the petition of compromise states that Sheo Shanker shall be entitled to under-proprietary rights in one bigha of the abadi land which at that time was designated by No. 217. For the rest of his claim in the abadi the compromise states that the plaintiff withdraws it on condition that he would be entitled to re-agitate it in a Court of law in the event of an interference by ejectment from the residential house by the taluqdar (Ex. B-4). The judgment and the decree which follow give effect to the compromise (Exs. B-5 and B-2).

It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the effect of the compromise was to extinguish all rights of the Pandes in the village abadi except that of residence in the house then in their occupation.

This interpretation of the compromise is not to my mind altogether devoid of plausibility but on a careful consideration of the claim and the grounds on which it was made as embodied in Sheo Shanker's petition of 16th March 1870 and of the language of the judgment and the decree following the compromise I have come to the conclusion that Sheo Shanker's claim of rights in the abadi of the village was withdrawn from the cognizance of the Court and left unadjudicated upon with liberty to reagitate it should an interference with his existing rights be made by the taluqdar in future; and this dispossession from residential house was to be reckoned to be the symbol of interference. I realize that this is the right interpretation of the records mentioned above when I come to consider the terms of the wajibularz of the village presumably prepared after the settlement operations had been concluded and judicial pronouncements made in respect of claims of title in relation to the village of Debipur It is true that Pandes lost the village but when the Record-of-Rights, that is the wajibularz came to be prepared, several rights besides the rights which were decreed in favour of the Pandes by the settlement Court came to be recorded in their favour and the record was accepted as correct and valid on behalf of the taluqdar as the endorsement by the Settlement Officer relating to the verification of the wajibularz shows. The wajibularz records the Pandes' rights in the manure and the scattered and stray trees of the village and also their rights in the abadi of the village. These rights are not to be deemed to have been created for the first time by the entries in the wajibularz but the entries in respect of them must be taken to be a record of pre-existing rights The interpretation of the entry in respect of the Pandes' rights in the abadi of the village is not in question. It is agreed that according to that entry no tenant can build a new structure in the village abadi without the permission of the Pandes. These rights to my mind are as I have already said, remnants of the ancient proprietary title of the village which admittedly was for over a period of 400 years in the hands of the Pande family. In this view of the matter the argument that the entry relating to the rights in the abadi is an entry of a custom and that the said custom being unreasonable should not be enforced, need not be considered by me.

The last argument on behalf of the appellant was that the structure in question had been put up on a piece of land already possessed for some time past by the tenants defendants and, therefore the right upon which the plaintiffs rely cannot be exercised in respect of that structure. This argument is answered by the finding that the encroachment is only a recent one.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

* Civil P. C., S. 135 (2)—Person coming to appear as accused in criminal case is exempt from arrest — Money paid to secure release should be refunded — Civil P. C., S. 144.

Where a person is ordered to appear as an accused in a criminal case and comes from another place to attend the Court, he is exempted from arrest under S 135 (2) and such an arrest is illegal. The immunity from arrest is not for the benefit of the Court but for the furtherance of public interest and the better administration of justice. ### Opinion

Stuart, C J.—In this reference it is not stated explicitly what is the question which is referred to the Full Bench under the provisions of S. 14, Local Act 4 of 1925. But it would appear that our opinion is asked as to whether the unreported decision in S. C. Mitra v. Sajjad Husain (Execution of Decree Appeal No 61 of 1927) states the law correctly. I was a party to the decision of that appeal and I do see no reason to doubt the correctness of the decision of the Bench. But the present case appears to me to stand on a somewhat different footing. In so far as the illegality of the arrest is concerned the position of the appellant Cursatji is a very strong one. He was ordered to appear as an accused in a criminal case before the City Magistrate on 28th September 1927. He came from the Indian State of Bharatpur. He arrived in Lucknow on 20th September 1927 and he was arrested on 27th September 1927. It is quite clear that if this arrest had been allowed to remain he would not have been able to be present in person before the criminal Court on 28th September and he was thus clearly exempted from arrest under S. 135, Civil P. C. "while going to or attending such tribunal for the purpose of the case."

His arrest was, therefore, illegal. On the second point I see no reason to differ from my previous view. When a man is arrested illegally and in order to save himself from the consequences of the illegal arrest pays up a sum of money he should be put in the same position as though that arrest had not taken place and if it be possible should obtain restitution Whether in the particular circumstances of the present case he will obtain restitution remains to be seen. But on the law I have no doubt. This is my answer to the reference

Wazir Hasan, J.—My answer is the same as given by the Honourable, the Chief Judge. The privilege given to a person mentioned in S. 135 (2), Civil P. C., of immunity from arrest is a privilege not appertaining to such a person but is enacted in the interest of the Court. If a person is summoned to attend a Court in a particular case and he is arrested while he is going to or attending the Court from which the summons issued before the date on which he is expected by the Court to answer the summons ,it is obvious that the cases before the Court cannot proceed. As observed by Kernan, J., in Shiva Bux, In the matter of (1), a party whose cause is in the list is priviledged eundo, morando et redundo. The question is always one of reasonableness. I have nothing more to add.

Raza, J.—I have very few words to add to the judgments which have already been delivered and in which I concur. In my opinion the exemption conferred by S 135, Civil P. C., is not for the benefit of the individual but for the furthering of public interest and the better administration of justice. The exemption from arrest continues during such period as is reasonably occupied in going to, attending at and returning from the place of trial. My answer to the questions referred to the Full Bench for decision is the same as given by the Hon'ble the Chief Judge.

 (a) Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation of stepson from a family does not automatically separate remaining members when they choose to remain undivided—Joint members must prove that they continued to be joint—They cannot be presumed to have separated.

Where a stepson separates from a family consisting of himself, his father, his stepmother and his step-brother, his separation does not automatically separate the remaining members of the family, who may remain united. It has to be seen whether they did or did not continue to be joint. Person alleging that after separation the remaining coparceners are to be considered as a joint Hindu family must prove that there was no separation among the remaining members originally and where the evidence shows that they clearly desired to live together and did continue to live jointly, they cannot be deemed to have separated. There can be no question of reunion as they had never disunited. A I.R. 1924 P. C. 126, A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 49, A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 149 and A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 580, *Ref. A. I. Judgment.—This is an appeal by Raghubar Singh, his wife Kalawati and his minor son Raja Bakhsh Singh against a declaratory decree granted to Raghuraj Singh, who is a son of Raghubar Singh by a wife now deceased whom he married before he married Kalawati. It is necessary to state the facts leading up to the present suit before we state the points for determination in the appeal. The facts are these. In the year 1917 Raghuraj Singh the present respondent, who then stated that he was about 19 years of age, instituted a suit for partition against his father Raghubar Singh and his stepmother Kalawati. Raja Bakhsh Singh had not then been born. It is admitted on both sides that at that time the family was a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law consisting of Raghubar Singh the father and Raghuraj Singh the son, Kalawati having a right to maintenance and nothing more. Raghuraj Singh claimed an eight annas share. It was not necessary for him to do more than claim a share as a member of the family, but he added in his plaint allegations of an unpleasant character against his father asserting that he was addicted to intoxication and was of immoral habits The plaint in the suit is Ex. 5. Raghubar Singh filed a written reply in which he asserted that Raghuraj Singh was a minor at the time of the institution of the suit. He further asserted that Kalawati was pregnant and that if she bore a son the shares in the family would be altered, and further it was claimed on behalf of Kalawati that she would be entitled to a 5 anna 4 pies share at the time of partition.

It is not known what would have happened if the suit had proceeded to decision on the merits It did not proceed to decision on the merits as the parties arrived at a compromise on 2nd August 1917 This compromise is unfortunately not on the record but we are informed by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that under this compromise his client withdrew his claim to partition agreeing that the family should remain joint, in consideration of receiving a monthly allowance from his father and in consideration of having his debts paid. The plaintiff-respondent was not, however, content to leave the matter as decided by this compromise and we find that in 1921 he instituted another suit for partition By this time Raja Bakhsh Singh had been born. In this suit, again alleging the existence of a joint family he gave as its members Raghubar Singh himself, Raja Bakhsh Singh, and Kalawati, Raja Bakhsh Singh's mother. Later on the names of three daughters born to Kalawati were added. There is no dispute as to the fact that these girls were Kalawati's daughters and the plaintiff-respondent's stepsisters. The second plaint is Ex. 7. Here it is again asserted that the plaintiff's father was a drunkard and of licentious habits. The plaintiff instituted the suit for a one-third share of the property. A written reply was put in on behalf of Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati. This is Ex. 8. In this it was stated that the plaintiff's share could not be more than one-fourth as Kalawati was entitled to a one-fourth share. In the plaint Ex. 7 Kalawati's rights were ignored but there was no reason given to show why they were ignored. The learned trial Judge quoted para. 9, Ex 7, as affording a reason for the exclusion of Kalawati; but on reading this paragraph it is clear that it has no reference to her. The paragraph which is very difficult to understand reads as follows:

"That according to law and terms of the compromise the plaintiff is entitled to get separate possession of his right and share after dividing the family property which comes to one-third according to law and custom, because defendant 1 should get one-third share by way of maintenance during his lifetime."

Defendant 1 was not Kalawati but Raghubar Singh. The paragraph is not comprehensible, but it does not apply to Kalawati. We find that in the written statement Ex. 8 the claim under the Hindu Law of Kalawati is asserted in para. 20. The plaintiff-respondent filed a replication Ex. 9 in which he stated that the paragraph asserting Kalawati's claim was not admitted and that the answer was entered in para. 9 of the plaint. As we have pointed out para. 9 of the plaint has nothing whatever to do with the subject. Ex. A-19 would show that the plaintiff-respondent's pleader when asked to state what he meant by the local custom stated that he meant the custom prevailing in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. We are unable to attach any meaning to this. He further stated that by tribal custom he meant the custom prevailing in the United Provinces. This remark is equally difficult to understand. However we have this much. Ex. A-20 shows that ten issues were framed and the fifth issue (based upon pleadings which have not been revealed to us) said: Is the wife of defendant 1 excluded from a share on partition by any local, family or tribal custom? This would appear to show that the plaintiff-respondent then asserted that Kalawati was debarred from a share under some unspecified custom. Now it is to be noted that according to the pleadings and according to these issues the defendants intended to fight the plaintiff's case largely on the ground that he was debarred by having entered into the previous compromise from applying for partition. It is impossible to say what would have been the result if the case had been decided on the merits as it was decided by another compromise. This is Ex. A-24, which was arrived at on 14th November 1922.

Under this compromise the defendants agreed that the plaintiff should receive a share of one-fourth in the property to be divided off and that he should further receive Rs. 1,600 in cash in respect of his share in the moveable property in addition to such moveables as were in his possession. The plaintiff-respondent agreed that he would pay one-fourth of the amount due under certain mortgage deeds and that he would pay Rs. 2,500 out of Rs. 10,000 in respect of the marriage expenses of each of his stepsisters. He further agreed to pay one-fourth of the maintenance due to a certain Lachmin Kuar. There is nothing in this compromise to show why the plaintiff's share was fixed at one-fourth. He had claimed one-third. The other side had said that under the law he could not be entitled to more than one-fourth but had further asserted that he was entitled to nothing. It is by no means certain that he obtained anything like a one-fourth share in the moveables and he certainly would not ordinarily have been liable under the law to pay such a proportion of the marriage expenses of his stepsisters, girls who were living in the family from whom he had separated. All that the compromise standing by itself establishes is that the plaintiff-respondent had a quarter share divided off. Not one word is said in it as to the relations amongst themselves of Raghubar Singh, Kalawati and Raja Bakhsh Singh. The family property had previously been entered in the name of Raghubar Singh alone as head of the joint family. After the compromise the name of Raghuraj Singh was entered in respect of one-fourth, and the name of Raghubar Singh remained as entered in respect of three-fourths. The entries in the revenue papers have of course no evidential value as to title, but they are sufficient to show that the revenue authorities accepted the entry of the name of Raghuraj Singh in respect of one-fourth of the property and retained the entry of Raghubar Singh's name in respect of the remaining three-fourths, though the responsibility of paying the land revenue in respect of the whole was retained by Raghubar Singh.

The suit out of which the present appeal arises has come into being in the following manner. At some time (apparently in 1927) Raghubar Singh applied for a partition of the three-fourths share standing in his name in certain villages. A certain Chitrakhet Singh (who has nothing to do with this family) also applied for partition of his share in certain villages. The partition applied for was partition by the revenue Courts under Ch 7, Land Revenue Act (2 of 1901). In the course of these partition proceedings Raghuraj Singh took an objection on the question of title to the effect that the recorded proprietary share of Raghubar Singh included the share of his wife Kalawati and his son Raja Bakhsh Singh. Raghuraj Singh was thereupon ordered under the provisions of S. 111, Act 3 of 1901 to institute within three months a suit in the civil Court for the determination of the question whether the recorded proprietary share of Raghubar Singh included the shares of his wife Kalawati and his minor son Raja Bakhsh Singh and the extent of the shares. The present suit was accordingly instituted and was decided on 25th April 1928 in favour of Raghuraj Singh who was given a declaratory decree to the effect that the three-fourths in the name of Raghubar Singh was held as follows:

"One-fourth by Raghubar Singh separately, One-fourth by Raja Bakhsh Singh separately, and one-fourth by Kalawati in lieu of maintenance."

It is against this decree that the present appeal is filed. The plaint did not assert definitely whether the three-fourths share in the name of Raghubar Singh was the property of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his son Raja Bakhsh Singh with his wife entitled to maintenance or whether it was held in separate shares. But on the subsequent pleadings it was clearly asserted that the family of Raghubar Singh and his son Raja Bakhsh Singh was not a joint Hindu family. The plaintiff Raghuraj Singh asserted that after his separation one-third of the income was paid to Kalawati and two-thirds was retained by Raghubar Singh and Raja Bakhsh Singh. His assertion was not accepted and his evidence was disbelieved. The learned trial Judge has said:

"The oral evidence on the record shows that after the plaintiff's separation, the defendants all lived in one and messed in one, being husband, wife and son from that wife. The plaintiff was the son of the first wife and so a discordant element. He, therefore, went out leaving behind him a harmonious family . . . . My finding, therefore, on this issue is that though in fact the three defendants continued to live jointly after the plaintiff had gone out, the separation of the plaintiff was the virtual separation of the defendants also."

The learned trial Judge took this position on the ground that under the law as it stood the only possible conclusion was that Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati had separated inter se. His view was that though they had not separated in fact they nevertheless had separated in law. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has not endeavoured to disturb the conclusion of fact that Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati had continued to live as a joint Hindu family, and it would have been difficult for him to do so in face of the evidence. Shankar Bakhsh Singh has sworn that these persons are members of a joint Hindu family of which Raghubar Singh is the karta. When asked what he meant by a joint Hindu family he said that he meant Raghubar Singh, his younger son and Raghubar Singh's wife lived in one and messed in one. He also said this because leaving out Raghuraj Singh's one-fourth, Raghubar Singh, his wife and his other son possessed his remaining property. Kali Charan Patwari deposed that in respect of one village Raghubar Singh made collections and Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati never made collections. Har Charan Singh another patwari stated that the same conditions prevailed in the village in which he was patwari. Raghuraj Singh himself said that Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Raghubar Singh's wife lived in one house and messed jointly. The collection of rent was done at Raghubar Singh's door but he could not say on whose behalf. He subsequently supplemented the statement by saying that Raghubar Singh, his wife and Raja Bakhsh Singh, after partition lived in one and messed in one but the money of their shares were divided after the partition. He continued that his mother was separate (he meant his stepmother), his father was separate working as manager of his brother, and his brother was separate in ownership. He thus apparently endeavoured in some way to meet the case of jointness but clearly failed. Our finding is clear.

On the evidence the family consists of Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati and all the outward incidents of the family are the incidents of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. Kalawati is not proved to receive any separate income or anything except maintenance by the family. Accepting this view (which is the view of the learned trial Judge), how can his conclusion be supported ? He has quoted a large number of cases of which we need only refer here to two The position in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law after partition has been discussed in two comparatively recent judgments of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. One is Hari Bakhsh v Babu Lal (1) and the other is Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (2). The law as laid down by their Lordships decides that when a separation has been effected between brothers who constitute a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, the fact of such separation raises no presumption that there is a separation of the joint family constituted by one of the brothers and his descendants. It was further laid down that the filing of a plaint claiming partition by a member of the joint Hindu family, if the plaint had been withdrawn before trial, did not result in the family being separate at a later date, although it afforded evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained by the plaintiff. It was further laid down that when one member of a joint family has separated an agreement by the remaining members to continue undivided may be inferred from the way in which their business was carried on after the separation.

Now here it is perfectly clear that the manner in which Raghubar Singh, Raja Bakhsh Singh and Kalawati have carried on their business after the separation of Raghuraj Singh is very strong evidence of their intention to remain undivided. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has urged that these decisions have no direct bearing because their Lordships were not considering a case such as this where a son has separated from a father leaving behind him that father, that father's son by another wife and the stepmother. His case was that the authority of their Lordships was to the effect that in such circumstances as these it must be considered that automatically not only did the stepmother separate herself from her husband but that the minor son, here a child of some four or five years of age, incapable of expressing a choice himself and on whose behalf nobody had communicated any desire to separate, had also automatically separated from his father. We do not consider that there is anything in the decisions of their Lordships which afforded an authority for such a proposition nor can we find anything in the Hindu Law which affords authority for that view. The proposition in itself does not appeal to us as good in law and thus as the case stands we have no hesitation in finding that the mere separation of Raghuraj Singh did not automatically separate the remaining members of the family It has to be seen whether they did or did not continue joint. On the evidence they clearly desired to live together. This was the first point which was discussed. The second point, however, is based upon a finding of the learned trial Judge which is in the nature of the finding of fact. According to him on the pleadings and the conduct of the parties in the previous litigation it must be held that a one-fourth share was granted separately to Raghubar Singh, a one-fourth share was granted separately to Raja Bakhsh Singh and a one-fourth share was awarded separately to Kalawati in lieu of maintenance. He has argued from what he finds in the pleadings and the conduct of the parties. In the first place, as we have already pointed out he has drawn an inference from para. 9 in the plaint Ex 7 which is based on a confusion between Raghubar Singh, the defendant of whom mention is made and Kalawati, the defendant of whom mention is not made.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 126=5 Lah. 92=51 I. A. 163 (P.C.).
(2) A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 49=48 Mad. 254=52 I. A. 83 (P.C.).

His main argument is something of this character. As Kalawati was joined as a party in both litigations it must be taken that Raghuraj Singh had recognized her right to a share in event of partition and was endeavouring to prevent her getting one. There is not much force in this argument. The mere joining of Kalawati means very little for in the second proceedings the names of Kalawati's three minor daughters were entered as parties. They certainly had no right to share Their names were apparently entered in order to open the way to the determination of the expenses of their marriages. The next argument is this. In the second proceedings the plaintiff would have been entitled to a one-third share if Kalawati had been ignored and the general law applied, and he would have been entitled to a one-fourth share if Kalawati's claims were recognized to receive a one fourth share. The learned Judge draws a conclusion from this that Kalawati's claim must have been recognized. An attempt is made to establish these facts by evidence but the learned Judge has not made reference to that evidence. The evidence in question on the side of the plaintiff-respondent consists only of his own deposition. He said:

"I had sued for one-third but I agreed to one-fourth as the pleaders said one share must be given to the mother, one share to my father and one share to my younger brother. This was said by my pleader and by Pandit Chand Narayan, pleader for defendants 1 to 3."

"Cross-examined: My pleader was B. Narayan Lal. The compromise was arranged in Court premises. The compromise was settled a month or two before it was filed in Court. The compromise filed in Court was the compromise arrived at and it was written with the advice of pleaders. . . . When I had filed my plaint of the partition suit my pleader had said that I should get one-third. Subsequently, at the first compromise my pleader said that I could not get more than one-fourth."

Now all this was to show that he reduced his share from one-third to one-fourth in order to provide for a share for Kalawati. It is to be noted, however, that there is not one word in the compromise to this effect. Further there is direct evidence against this statement. Raghubar Singh has deposed:

"Raghuraj Singh had brought another suit in which he was given maintenance from joint family funds. He was given Rs. 137-8-0 per mensem as allowance for maintenance. He again brought a suit for partition. In that suit by compromise the plaintiff was given one-fourth and the rest remained with me. Nobody else separated at the time of that partition. The remaining members of the family remained joint. The share of nobody else was determined. No share was fixed for my wife Kalawati or for Raja Bakhsh. No share was reserved for my wife Kalawati. There was no talk about her share. Even now my family is joint. Raja Bakhsh Singh is seven or eight years of age now. I have got five daughters now. I bear the expenses of the minor son and of the daughters. I am the karta of the family. I make collections of the 12 annas and I take the profit."

Cross-examined. The plaintiff's share was determined as one-fourth without any calculation. The plaintiff agreed to take that share and it was given him . . . . . The one quarter share given to the plaintiff in his second suit was not given on the understanding that my share was one-fourth, my second son's share one-fourth, my wife's share one-fourth. The plaintiff was the eldest son and he was given one or two villages for his subsistence as was the practice in our family and amongst the Thakurs. The plaintiff agreed to take one-fourth and he was given one-fourth. In the second suit the plaintiff claimed one-third. . . . . The partition took place with mutual consent. The compromise in the second suit was also arranged with the advice of my pleaders . . . . . Q. Can you give any reason why the plaintiff's share was fixed at one-fourth in the compromise of the second partition suit? A. The plaintiff was asking for much more and I was giving much less. By and by it was settled that plaintiff should be given one-fourth."

There was also a man Anrudh Singh who said he was present at the time and supported this statement. It was argued against the acceptance of the evidence of these two witnesses that Raghubar Singh had said:

"Nobody got the dispute between me and the plaintiff settled. I and he settled the the dispute. I had not named anything specially which I was offering."

But Anrudh Singh has said that he got the compromise brought about.

We do not find that there was real discrepancy between these statements. Anrudh Singh was a friend of the parties. He happened accidentally to be present in the Court precincts while the question was being discussed. According to his statement he interposed in favour of a settlement. He added to his statement:

"The plaintiff of his own accord said that he should be given one-fourth. At first he was demanding more. Raghubar Singh said he would give nothing. Plaintiff was at first demanding one-third. I can give no reason why plaintiff agreed to take one-fourth. It was his will."

We see no reason why the evidence of Raghubar Singh and Anrudh Singh should not be accepted against the unsupported evidence of Raghuraj Singh. These two men deposed that the matter was settled by a process of haggling. The son asked a third: the father offered nothing. Finally they settled at a quarter. There does not appear to have been any discussion as to the rights of the parties under the law This sounds the most probable way of arriving at a compromise. According to Raghubar Singh pleaders were present but the settlement was left to the parties. This evidence stands unsupported by the evidence of pleaders When Raghuraj Singh produced his evidence Raghuraj Singh could have called his own pleader to contradict the previous allegations He did not do so. Now it appears to us that the conclusion that the matter was settled by pure bargaining and haggling apart from any recourse to claims under the law is supported in a variety of ways. In the first place if the compromise had been, as the plaintiff-respondent suggests, a compromise based on the provisions of the Mitakshara whereby it was settled that Raghubar Singh was entitled to one-fourth, Raja Bakhsh Singh was entitled to one-fourth, Kalawati was entitled to one-fourth in lieu of maintenance and Raghuraj Singh to the remaining one-fourth, why were not these particulars entered in the compromise? They were not entered in the compromise. In the second place as far as we can gather Raghuraj Singh did not receive a quarter share in the moveables. He appears to have received less

In the third place Raghuraj Singh consented to pay Rs 7,500 towards the marriage expenses of his stepsisters. This appears to have made a reduction in his share which was not justified by the ordinary law. When we have it that the most natural way in which to conduct the terms of this promise would have been by bargaining and haggling, when we have it that the compromise contains no specification of the shares of Raghubar Singh, Kalawati and Raja Bakhsh Singh, when we have it that those three persons have continued to live as a joint Hindu family ever since, we find the conclusion to be that Raghuraj Singh took as much as he thought he would get without further trouble and that the remainder was left joint family property. The learned trial Judge appears to us to have fallen into error in assuming that if the case had been fought out to a legal decision Raghuraj Singh would necessarily have obtained a decree. His father Raghubar Singh had said from the very beginning that Raghuraj Singh was estopped from bringing the case owing to his conduct in the previous litigation. We express no opinion as to whether that plea was a good plea or a bad plea. It has not been decided. We are in no position to assume what would have been the result of the litigation if the suit had been decided on the merits . The suit might well have gone up to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee for the point was a point which could have been a point of difficulty and the valuation was Rs. 50,000. But once it is taken into account that there were points of difficulty in the case, that the litigation might be protracted and that Raghuraj Singh might not have been in a position to find funds for protracted litigation why should it be assumed (as the learned Judge has apparently assumed, for we do not find that he accepted Raghuraj Singh as telling the truth on the subject) that it must have been intended to award a quarter share to Kalawati in lieu of her maintenance? We find that there is no justification for this view.

We return once more to the law on the subject. We have already discussed the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hari Bakhsh v. Babir Lal (1) and Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (2). We refer now to three decisions of this Court: Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh v. Sheo Nath (3) and Sarju Prasad Singh v. Nandgopal Singh (4). The second laid down:

"That when it is proved that one member of a joint Hindu family has separated from his coparceners, a person, who subsequently alleges that the remaining coparceners are to be considered a joint Hindu family among themselves, must prove one of two things. He must either prove that there was no separation among the remaining members originally or he must prove that there has been a separation followed by subsequent reunion.

"Under the Mitakshara Law there is a presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter are separated and any agreement among the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact."

The last decision is Mt. Menda Kuer v. Mirtunjai Bakhsh Singh (5). This is the decision to which the learned Judge has referred as 1 Luck. Cases p 516. He considered that this decision supported his view. We are unable to find that it supported his view in any way and his conclusion that though in fact the three defendants continued to live jointly after the plaintiff had gone out the separation of the plaintiff implied the virtual separation of the defendants inter se is not borne out Apart from anything else there is strong evidence from their conduct that they had not separated and had continued to live jointly As they continued to live jointly there is no question of reunion They had never disunited. The position of Mt. Kalawati is exactly the same as the position of any wife in a Hindu joint family She is entitled to maintenance. Nothing separate has been assigned to her for maintenance. In any circumstances it would be difficult to see what right the plaintiff could have in revenue proceedings to object to the separation of the three-fourth in favour of a family which alleged itself to be a joint family. We, therefore, allow this appeal and direct that the plaintiff-respondent's suit stand dismissed The plaintiff-respondent will pay his own costs and the costs of the opposite parties in both Courts. The defendants will receive one set of costs.

Deputy Commissioner, Manager, Court of Wards, Ajodhia Estate—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 102 of 1929, Decided on 23rd August 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 17th December 1928.

(a) Oudh Rent Act, S. 3 (8)—In suit for under-proprietary rights claim cannot be put to agricultural land.

Plaintiffs suing for under-proprietary or other possession of certain plots against the taluqdar can have no claim as to agricultural land. They can set adverse possession but such adverse possession is only that of a tenant and the mere fact that they were formerly village zamindars does not give them any title. [P 433 C 2, P 434 C 1]

(b) Oudh Rent Act, S. 3 (8)—Exclusive right of fishing does not convey under proprietory right to land below tank.

An exclusive right of fishing in a tank does not amount to a right in the land below the water and plaintiffs possessing such rights are not entitled to be considered as under-proprietors of that land. [P 434 C 1]

(c) Adverse possession—Under-proprietors—It is not necessary to prove actual litigation with taluqdar.

To prove adverse possession it is not necessary that there must have been litigation on the subject between the taluqdars and the claimant. It is sufficient if it is proved that the title is entirely opposed to the interests of the taluqdar and that the latter being aware of the title has stood by and done nothing. Where the claimants establish that they got under-proprietary rights under a sale which has not been contested by the taluqdar, they are entitled to the rights claimed: A. I. R. 1919 *P. Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for under-proprietary or other possession of certain plots against the taluqdar. The plaintiffs were ejected from some numbers by the revenue Court and they then brought this suit in respect of these numbers and certain others The suit was entirely dismissed by the Court below. The numbers may be divided into three groups; the old Nos. 624 and 476 are tanks, No. 452 is a grove and the other numbers are agricultural land As to the latter, the plaintiffs have no claim. They can only set up at best adverse possession, but such adverse possession is only that of a tenant, and the mere fact that they were formerly village zamindars does not give them any title.

As to the tanks it was never denied by the defendant that the plaintiffs had an exclusive right of fishing in these tanks. This is the only right which was conceded to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs by the settlement decree of 1872. An exclusive right of fishing does not amount to a right in the land below the water, and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs are not entitled to be considered under-proprietors of that land, although had their claim to an exclusive right to fishing in the water been contested they would no doubt have been able to obtain a declaration in their favour in accordance with the settlement decree. But as their right was not denied, I agree with the Court below that they were not entitled to any decree of this nature.

There remains No. 452, now No. 484. At the time of the settlement decree of 1872 the plaintiff's predecessor Bhawani Prasad obtained an entry in his favour as to three out of four groves, one of which was No. 452, but later the decree was amended in the year 1877 when it was ordered that the number not granted to Bhawani Prasad was No. 452 which was entered as belonging to one Bhandan Pande. Who Bhandan Pande was is not known, but he was described as a stranger and, therefore, he could not have been a member of the plaintiff's family. The plaintiffs, therefore, were unable to prove that No. 452 belonged to them from the time of the settlement decree and they had to fall back on the second plea which was raised in the plaint in respect of all the numbers, namely a plea of adverse possession. The lower Courts have not done justice to the evidence on this subject. It is proved that at the time of the new settlement in 1893 this grove was described as being in the possession of a mortgagee from the mortgagor Bhawani Prasad. Consequently, in spite of the settlement decree of 1877, it appears that Bhawani Prasad, who was the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title, was able to re-assert the claim in this grove which he had made in the year 1872. In 1897 Bhondu who is the nephew of Bhawani Prasad, together with Pothi Ram, who was his own nephew, sold the grove No. 452 to one Mahabir. Mahabir in his turn sold the grove to a stranger in the year 1912 and Bindeshri Misir, who is the father of one of the plaintiffs and the nephew of Bhondu Misir, brought a suit for pre-emption and obtained a decree and dhakil dihani. This order of possession was given in the year 1914 and the plaintiffs have been in possession over since.

It has been stated in argument that these facts are insufficient to establish a title by adverse possession in view of a ruling of this Court reported in Barjor Singh v. Sidh Nath (1). In that ruling it was laid down that such possession had to be actual, physical, exclusive, hostile and continued from the time necessary to create a bar under the statute of limitation. In this case there is in my opinion no question that the plaintiff who obtained possession or who recovered possession by a pre-emption decree, obtained actual, physical, exclusive, and continued possession. The word "hostile" cannot be considered to mean that there must have been litigation on the subject between the taluqdar and the plaintiffs It is sufficient if it is proved that the title is entirely opposed to the interest of the taluqdar, and that the latter, who must have been aware of the title so set up,

> "stood by and did nothing while the plaintiffs continued in possession in direct contravention of his alleged rights."

These are the words used by their Lordships of the Privy Council in defining adverse possession in the case of Arunachellum Chetty v. Venkatachalapathi Guruswamigal (2).

The plaintiffs, therefore, have in my opinion established a title to the grove No. 452, and the title must be that which the vendor purported to sell in 1912 by means of the sale-deed for which they obtained a decree of pre-emption, seeing that the taluqdar has never attempted to contest that sale. I have read the sale-deed and it appears that the title was one equivalent to under-proprietary rights and has been described correctly by the plaintiffs as dehdari. The plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled in my opinion to a decree for dehdari rights in respect of grove No. 452, now No. 484 only, but their suit has been rightly dismissed in respect of the other numbers subject, as I have said, to their fishing rights in Nos. 625 and 476.

Judgment.—The material facts relating to the dispute which has given rise to the present appeals are that one Ganesh Prasad obtained a simple money decree against Munna, father of Abdul Rahman, the objector appellant and of Abdul Hamid minor who is respondent 2 in these appeals. The decree-holder Ganesh Prasad applied for attachment and sale of the property in suit in execution of his decree. As the property sought to be sold was ancestral the decree was transferred for execution to the Collector on 30th June 1921. The sale was fixed before the Collector for 20th July 1921 but it did not take place on that date as the judgment-debtor paid a part of the decretal debt and got the sale postponed to 20th October 1921. About a month later, on 23rd August 1921 the judgment-debtor Munna executed a deed of gift in respect of the property in suit in favour of his two sons Abdul Rahman appellant and Abdul Hamid respondent 2. It is the validity of this gift which is the principal matter of controversy in the present appeals On 19th October 1921 the judgment-debtor paid off the balance of the decretal amount and on 20th October 1921 the property was released by the Collector On the same date Munna also got the deed of gift dated 23rd August 1921, registered.

Another chapter of the case begins with a pronote dated 18th July 1921 executed by Munna in favour of Gaya Prasad respondent 1. This money was borrowed in order to make part payment of the decretal debt of Ganesh Prasad and seems to have constituted part of the money which as stated before was paid by Munna to Ganesh Prasad on 20th July 1921. On 2nd September 1925 Gaya Prasad obtained a decree on the basis of the pronote just mentioned. Gaya Prasad also had another similar decree against Munna. After the death of Munna the decree-holder respondent Gaya Prasad applied for execution of his two decrees by attachment and sale of the property in suit claiming it to be the assets of his deceased judgment-debtor Munna. Abdul Rahman appellant filed objections in both the execution cases on the allegation that the property sought to be attached and sold did not belong to Munna at the date of his death inasmuch as it had been transferred by him to the appellant and his minor brother respondent 2, under the deed of gift dated 23rd August 1921 and was therefore not liable to attachment or sale in execution of the decree against Munna. Both the objections were tried together and dismissed by the learned Munsif on the ground that the deed of gift dated 23rd August 1921 was void under R. 11, Sch. 3, Civil P. C. This decision has been upheld on appeal by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The objector has come here in second appeal. Two contentions have been urged on his behalf in support of the appeal. The first contention is that the transaction of gift relied upon by him was inchoate and incomplete on 23rd August 1921 and became a completed transaction only on 20th October 1921 when the deed of gift was registered. The argument is that as the property had been released by the Collector before the registration of the deed of gift therefore the alienation was not invalidated by R 11, Sch. 3, Civil P. C. I find myself unable to accept this contention. Both the lower Courts are agreed in finding that the transaction of gift was completed on 23rd August 1921 and I think that the finding arrived at by them is quite correct. The learned counsel for the appellant admits that the only ingredients necessary for the completion of a valid gift under the Mahomedan Law are the declaration by the donor, acceptance by the donee, whether express or implied, and the delivery of possession to the donee, either actual or constructive. He concedes that registration is not necessary to complete a gift under Mahomedan Law. The only one of these ingredients which is said to have been wanting on 23rd August 1921 was the element of delivery of possession. But the matter is concluded by the finding of both the lower Courts. In fact it seems to me that no other finding was possible The deed of gift, Ex. 1, speaks of possession having been delivered to the donees who were both the sons of the donor one of whom was a minor. In the case of the minor son at least the mere declaration by the father was sufficient. As for the elder son who is the objector appellant, we have his express admission contained in the petition of objection dated 23rd July 1928 to the effect that he had been put in possession of the gifted property from the date of the gift. I have, therefore, no hesitation in agreeing with the Courts below, that when the deed of gift had been executed on 23rd August 1921 the transaction was accompanied with delivery of possession to the donees and the transaction of gift was therefore complete on that date. As rightly conceded by the learned counsel for the appellant the subsequent registration was wholly unnecessary under the Mahomedan Law and was a superfluous act. S. 47, Registration Act lays down that:

"A registered document shall operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration."

Thus it will be clear that the registration of the deed of gift on 20th October 1921 cannot have the effect of novation of the gift. If any such object was intended the proper course for the donor to have adopted was to execute a fresh deed of gift. As it is, the deed of gift dated 23rd August 1921 must be deemed to take effect from the date of its execution even though it was registered some months later As admittedly the property which formed the subject of gift was under the control of the Collector on the date of the gift and as no written permission of the Collector was obtained as required by R 11, Sch. 3, Civil P. C. the gift was incompetent, and the decision of the lower Court is quite correct.

The next contention urged by the learned counsel for the appellant is that R. 11, Sch. 3, is applicable only to those cases in which a sale has actually been made by the Collector and where the alienation made by the judgment-debtor is in conflict with the transfer made by the Collector. He has argued that if the decree is satisfied by the judgment-debtor and no occasion arises for the Collector to take any action for the enforcement of the decree, then in such a case R. 11, Sch 3, has no application and any transfer made by the judgment-debtor must be held to be valid. He has in support of his argument referred by way of analogy to cases of private alienation of property after attachment and of transfers pendente lite and pointed out that in both these classes of cases the transfers are invalid only as against the claims enforceable under the attachment or claims arising under the decree or order passed in the pending suit. I regret I am not impressed with the soundness of this argument. The argument will be sufficiently answered by a comparison of the language used by the legislature in R. 11, Sch. 3, with the language used in S, 64, Civil P. C. and S. 52, T. P. Act. In S. 64, Civil P. C., it is expressly provided that the alienation "shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment." Similarly in S. 52, T P. Act the words use are that.

"The property connot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein."

Thus it is perfectly clear that in the case of attachment as well as in cases of transfers pendente lite the legislature has in express terms defined the extent to which the transfers would be invalid. On the contrary the language used in S. 11, Sch. 3, is quite different. The rule provides that in cases to which the rule applies the judgment-debtor:

"Shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate any such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector"

The use of the word "incompetent" seems to show clearly that whilst the property is under the control of the Collector the judgment-debtor is disqualified from entering into any transaction in contravention of the terms of R. 11, Sch. 3. The disqualification imposed by the rule is absolute in its nature, making transactions entered into by the judgment-debtor contrary to the provisions of R 11 altogether void, and not merely voidable as against the Collector or persons claiming under him. The matter is concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gauri Shankar Balmukand v. Chinnumaya (1). In that case, it appears that a somewhat similar contention, with reference to S. 325-A, Civil P. C. (Act 14 of 1882) which corresponds to R. 11, Sch. 3 of the present Civil Procedure Code as urged before their Lordships Their Lordships make reference to the contention urged before them in the following terms:

"It is contended that S. 325-A is not to be read in the complete and operative sense natural to the words, that is to say, of incompetency to mortgage such property, but must be read with an implied limitation. The limitation suggested is that there still remained in the judgment-debtor a power to mortgage the property so as to become operative over any residue that might arise to the latter after the Collector's administration had ended."

Their Lordships rejected the contention and held that the mortgage made by the judgment-debtor while the Collector could exercise the powers given to him by Ss 322 to 325 Act 14 of 1882, was absolutely void and not merely voidable as against the Collector and those claiming under him. This contention also is, therefore, without force.

The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed with costs.

[P 438 C 1]

Radhe Krishna—for Appellant.

Hakimuddin and Naziruddin — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a dispute between two neighbours in the town of Unao. The first dispute took place in 1926 when the present defendant, who is the appellant before me, wished to construct a wall adjoining the wall of the plaintiff's house. The dispute was submitted to arbitration and the arbitrator, who is stated to be the Government Pleader of Unao, made an award containing inter alia the following clause :

"That the wall on the side of Munshi Ram Narain shall be absolutely blank, i. e., it shall have no cornice, eaves, drains, spouts, doors or window in it on the side of Munshi Ram Narain."

and there is another condition namely :

"that a parapet over the house roof shall be at least six feet in height so as to prevent people peeping through it to the north."

The intention of this award is manifest. It is in the first place that the wall of the defendant shall not be constructed in such a way as to interfere with the rights of the plaintiff in respect of his existing constructions, and in the second place it is intended to provide that the defendant shall not by his further constructions interfere with the right of privacy possessed by the plaintiff, otherwise there is no point in the order requiring the parapet to be six feet high. The defendant not being satisfied with this state of affairs proceeded to extend his wall beyond the boundary of Munshi Ram Narain's house, and on a portion of it, which he has constructed across a plot of land described now as rasta or path, he has in the first place constructed two doors. One an entrance to his house and the other an entrance to a new latrine and above this he has constructed a wall with a window in it which has been shown by the personal inspection of the Munsif to overlook about one-third of the court-yard of Munshi Ram Narain. There is no question that by making these constructions the defendant has offended against the spirit of the award made by the arbitrator.

The Munsif dismissed the suit and owing to the position of the defendant, who is a vakil practising in Unao, an application was made by the plaintiff to have the appeal heard in Lucknow. This application was granted by Hasan, J., and the appeal was heard by the Third Additional Judge of Lucknow and almost entirely decreed.

The defendant now appeals. The first point raised deals with the window. Now it was certainly intended by the arbitrator that no window should be made in the wall of the defendant which could overlook the court-yard of Munshi Ram Narain and the learned Judge has, with great fairness towards the defendant, allowed that the award should be restricted to that portion of the wall which was in dispute in the first case and should not be further applied to an extension of the wall. But even on this view he has felt constrained to interfere with the window. Had this been a window of a room used for the legitimate purpose of obtaining light and air, there might have been something to be said for the defendant, but the Munsif himself found that the window was useless. It is merely set in a wall and gives neither light nor air at any room. Sir George Knox remarked in the case of Abdul Rahman v. Bhagwan Das (1) :

"there is a great deal to be said in favour of the right of privacy being more substantially and materially invaded by apertures which would permit a person to look on without being observed, than by the existence of an open space where the presence of the looker on would at once be conspicuous and could easily be guarded against."

This ruling is perhaps not intended for general application and the remarks should certainly be read with the previous remark in the same judgment that every case of this kind must be governed by its particular facts and that the question in every such case is whether the construction amounts to a substantial interference with the right of privacy. A right of privacy is assumed to exist in all Indian towns, and this has been laid down both by the late Misra, J., in the case of Mt Subhaga v Mt. Janki (2), and Raza, J., in the case of Sardar Husain v. Ahmad Husain (3). Misra, J., in the first of these rulings also said that the mere fact that the house was not at the time occupied by pardahnashin ladies would not affect the right of privacy enjoyed by the owner. In the present case I have no doubt that a right of privacy appertains to the plaintiff's house and that his was acknowledged by the parties themselves at the time of the arbitrator's award. I also find that a window such as that constructed by the defendant does infringe upon the right of privacy possessed by the plaintiff, and I consider that the order passed by the lower Court in respect of this window is a proper one and should be maintained

The second question relates to the construction of certain eaves on the wall. These are in my opinion in direct contravention of the award. At the best it could only be said that they are constructed on an adjoining extension of the old wall, and they are bound to cause damage to the plaintiff's wall underneath by the fall of water. I agree with the lower Court that these eaves should be removed or dealt with in such a way that they no longer project from the defendant's wall.

The third point for consideration is the latrine constructed by the defendant to the west of the new main door. The finding of the Court below is that this latrine opens on to a chabutra which belongs to the plaintiff in the sense that it was built by him along with the rest of his house some 12 years ago. I see that when the defendant applied to the Municipal Board for permission to make his new building he did not in his map show any outside door to this latrine. This appears to be an afterthought and consequently was not necessary to the original design. It has been argued at length that as the plaintiff was unable to prove that he owned the land on which the chabutra stands, the defendant has a good right to use that chabutra as a means of access to his new latrine. I cannot accept this view. Whatever may have been the right of the plaintiff to the land, he is certainly entitled to the use of his own chabutra and the defendant has no right to interfere with that right. I find, therefore, that he is not entitled to open a door on to the chabutra nor is he entitled to have his napdan placed on the chabutra. An alteration of his napdan will not cause him much trouble as I see by the map that he took the precaution of constructing it so that it can equally well be opened on to the lane. As to the door it is argued that it need not be removed.

This argument cannot be rebutted. The only question is whether it can be used and it certainly cannot be used. If it is any satisfaction to the appellant the order as to the removal of the door may be converted into one ordering it to remain permanently closed. The only remaining subject of dispute between the parties is about certain water spouts which are made so as to discharge their water on the plaintiff's chabutra. This point was not seriously pressed in appeal and I see no reason to interfere with the very proper order passed by the Court below.

A cross-objection was made as to the main door on the ground that that controverts the award in the former suit and an attempt also was made to raise the question as to the plaintiff's right or ownership in the land on which the chabutra has been built. I do not consider that the award could be made to extend to the door leading on to the lane beyond the plaintiff's house, and I hold that the finding of the Court below as to the ownership of the land is a question which cannot be challenged in second appeal.

I am therefore not disposed to interfere with the judgment of the Court below either in the interests of the appellant or in that of the respondent, and I dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objection with costs.

Second Appeal No. 59 of 1929, Decided on 3rd September 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Sitapur, D/- 7th November 1928.

 Mahomedan Law—Maraz-ul maut—Gift from husband to wife in lieu of dower is not a bequest and is not subject to doctrine of marazulmaut.

A gift by a husband to his wife during marazulmaut, in satisfaction of his obligation to pay the dower debt cannot be treated as testamentary for the simple reason that had not the husband discharged his legal obligation, his estate in the hands of his heirs would have been liable to satisfy the same obligation. Such a gift being for consideration, is irrevocable and cannot be treated as bequest and, therefore, it is not subject to the doctrine of marazulmaut.

Ali Muhammad and Ishwari Prasad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, dated 7th November 1928, affirming the decree of the Munsif of the same place, dated 23rd May 1928.

One Ahmad Ali made a gift of all his property in favour of the defendant, Mt. Amiran. The gift was evidenced by a deed dated 17th August 1927. Ahmad Ali died on 5th September 1927. The plaintiff, Sadiq Ali, is Ahmad Ali's uncle and claims title to the gifted property on the ground of inheritance.

The deed recognizes the defendant as a lawfully wedded wife of Ahmad Ali and purports to make the gift in consideration of the dower of Rs. 500 due from the donor. The value of the subject-matter of the gift is also stated in the deed approximately to be Rs. 1,000.

The plaintiff challenged the validity of the gift on various grounds but only one of such grounds now survives and constitutes the sole point of argument in this appeal. The lower Courts are agreed that the defendant was the married wife of Ahmad Ali and they are further agreed that the gift was made by Ahmad Ali during marazulmaut. The attack by the plaintiff on the gift in question is based on the last mentioned finding. It was argued in the Courts below and the argument is repeated before us that the gift having been made during marazulmaut operates in law as a bequest and being in favour of an heir is wholly void under the Hanafi Mahomedan law. The question for decision, therefore, is as to whether the gift of 17th August 1927 is subject to the doctrine of marazulmaut The Courts below have answered this question in the negative and the main ground on which the answer rests is that the gift being for consideration is virtually a sale and the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Eshaq Chowdhry v. Abedunessa Bibi (1) is cited in support of the view taken

We are far from affirming broadly the proposition that all transactions known in Mahomedan law as hibabilewaz are or can be treated as transactions of sale. That the two transactions may bear close analogy in their results is not a sufficient ground in our opinion for holding that they are convertible terms. One of us had occasion to consider this matter at some length in the case of Bashir Ahmad v. Mt. Zubaida Khatun (2) and again in Talib Ali v. Kaniz Fatima Begam (3).

(1) [1915] 42 Cal. 361=28 I. C. 692=19 C. W. N. 925.
(2) A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 186=1 Luck. 82.
(3) A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 204=2 Luck. 575.

We are of opinion that the decree under appeal should be upheld but on a different ground. The general proposition of Mahomedan Law is that a gift, simple or bilewaz, is subject to the doctrine of marazulmaut and the effect of that doctrine is that the gift inter vivos acquires for all practical purposes the character of a testamentary disposition, though technically it is not a "legacy": Ch. 8, Book 8, Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, Vol. 1

In the Baillie's Digest referred to above several illustrations of cases are given where a gift made during marazulmaut is placed on the footing of a bequest These illustrations, it is significant to note, are all cases of revocable gifts and there is not one single case of an irrevocable gift. Being a testamentary disposition in its nature and incidents, it follows that a gift in marazulmaut can be revoked and we think that the converse proposition that where the gift is not revocable it cannot be treated as a bequest is equally true. A gift of the latter description, therefore, is not subject to the doctrine of maraz-ulmaut.

In this case it must be held that the gift by Ahmad Ali to his wife, the defendant, cannot be placed on the footing of a bequest. Such a gift :

"cannot be retracted because the object of the gift is an improvement of affection (in the same manner as in the case of presents to relations) and as the object is obtained, the gift cannot be retracted"

Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, p. 446 "The increase of affection excited in the wife by the gift is supposed, by the law, to be a return which she pays for it, and which consequently deprives the donor of the power of retraction . see the foot-note in Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, p. 496."

When, therefore, there is a gift bilewaz by a husband in favour of his wife the consideration underlying it is not merely the material value of the thing received by him in exchange but also the personal element of the improvement of affection and love which naturally does not exist in a disposition to take effect after the death of the husband. Further when a gift is made during marazulmaut by a husband to his wife in satisfaction of his legal obligation to pay the dower debt as in the present case, such a gift cannot be treated as ambulatory or testamentary for the simple reason that had the husband not discharged his legal obligation by means of the gift his estate in the hands of his heirs would be liable to satisfy the same obligation. If, therefore, the nature of this particular gift is such that it cannot be treated for the purposes of the distribution of the assets on inheritance as a bequest it follows according to our judgment that it is a gift not subject to the doctrine of marazuzmaut It may be added that a wife is a relation within the prohibited degrees and, therefore, a gift simple or bilewaz in her favour is irrevocable

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs

(a) Civil P.C., Sch. 3, Para. 11—Construction—Provisions must be construed strictly and sale by judgment-debtor without Collector's written permission is void.

The provisions of para. 11 must be construed strictly and the declaration that a judgment-debtor shall be incompetent to alienate his property must be read in the exact and plain sense which the words imply. Where therefore a judgment-debtor effects a sale of property under attachment in execution of a money decree, and the permission of Collector has not been obtained the transfer is not only voidable but is void . *A. Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Thakur Amir Haider Khan against the dismissal of the suit which he brought to redeem a mortgage dated 14th September 1889 (Ex. A-1). This mortgage was executed by Saadat Khan in favour of Rawat Sheoratan Singh. The deed mortgaged with possession a share of 3 annas 3 pies 2 karants and 3 jaos in the village Jugrajpur and the hamlets of Rukunpur and Takhatnagar. The plaintiff asserted that he had obtained the right to redeem this mortgage by virtue of a sale deed Ex. 1 dated 18th July 1918 by which Mahomad Husain Khan the successer-in-interest of Saadat Khan transferred to him by sale the property mortgaged by Ex. A-1 in addition to properties in Rajapur and Rampur. In order to understand the questions for determination in this appeal, it is necessary to state the facts of other transactions which took place after the execution of Ex A-1.

A certain Nidha Bibi obtained a simple money decree against Mahomad Husa in Khan. This decree was passed on 20th January 1912 in Suit No. 125 of 1911. Some time towards the end of 1914 Nidha Bibi attached in execution of this decree a share in village Jugrajpur, which admittedly included the property mortgaged by Ex. A-1. The execution of the decree was transferred to the Collector (in this case the Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareli) under the provisions of S. 68, Civil P. C The Collector was in a position to exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immovable property the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paras. 1 to 10, Sch 3, Civil P. C. A suit was brought by the Court of Wards, which was then in charge of the estate of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh (who was the successor-in-interest of Rawat Sheoratan Singh the mortgagee under Ex. A-1) against Mahomad Husain Khan. This suit was based upon Ex. A-1 and certain deeds which were alleged to be deeds of further charge. This suit was brought some time in 1915 after the order of attachment had been made It did not proceed to judgment on the merits. We find from Ex. A-9 that Mahomad Husain Khan (who was recognized as the successor-in-interest of Saadat Khan by the Court of Wards which was managing the estate of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh) and the Court of Wards arrived at a compromise, under which it was agreed that the claim should be settled for a nominal amount of Rs. 20,930. It was further, however, agreed that no money should be paid, but that the whole of the property mortgaged under Ex. A-1 should be transferred by deed of sale from Mahomad Husain to the Court of Wards as representating the estate of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh. The result should have been to give the mortgagee full proprietary title in the mortgaged property.

In pursuance of this compromise a sale deed Ex A-7 was executed on 17th April 1916. This sale deed was signed by Mr. H. S Rix, I. C S, as representing the Court of Wards in charge of the estate of Rawat Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh. He was also the Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareli. It does not appear to have been brought to the notice of this officer that at that time he was in charge of the proceedings in attachment in connexion with the share in Jugrajpur and the connected hamlets While the execution proceedings in attachment of the sale were proceeding, the plaintiff-appellant Thakur Amir Haider Khan appears to have entered into negotiations with the same Mahomad Husain (whom he also recognised as the successor-in-interest of Saadat Khan the mortgagor under Ex. A-1) and on 18th July 1918 Mahomad Husain executed the sale deed Ex. 1, to which we have already referred, by which he transferred to Amir Haider Khan the property which we have already described, that is to say, the property mortgaged under deed Ex. A-1, and some other property in Rajapur and Rampur. After the execution of Ex. 1 the plaintiff-appellant applied to the sales officer on 25th February 1919 (application Ex. 16) for permission to deposit the amount due to Mt. Nidha Bibi under her decree and thus obtain a release of the attachment. The copy containing the reference to the application and the order does not bear the name of the sale officer, but we have ascertained from the subsequent proceedings that the sale officer in question was a Deputy Collector called Lala Ram Gopal who was Treasury Officer of Rae Bareli This officer was not the Collector. He had been deputed by the Collector to conduct the execution proceedings On 5th March 1919, the plaintiff-appellant's agent was ordered to deposit Rs 6,000. He did so. It is to be noted that at that time there had been a change in the office of Deputy Commissioner. During February and March 1919 Mr. C. E. D. Peters, I. C. S., was Deputy Commissioner. The Civil List shows that Mr A. G. Shirreff, I. C. S., became Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareli on 23rd April 1919. On 25th April 1919 Mr. Ram Gopal noted that Rs. 6,000 had been deposited (Ex 10), but that the balance of the decretal amount due had not been deposited. On 17th May 1919, Rs. 776-15-6 more were deposited on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant (Ex. 11). On 28th July 1919 Mr. Ram Gopal paid the full amount of Rs. 6,776-15-6 to Mt Nidha. The attachment was removed.

In the trial Court the defendant who is the representative of the mortgagee under Ex. A-1 questioned the right of the plaintiff to redeem on the ground that he had not obtained the written permision of the Collector, which is required by the provisions of para. 11, Sch. 3, to the alienation of the property by Mahomad Husain Khan. The plaintiff-appellant replied that the defendant-respondent, who asserted that he had obtained complete proprietary title in the property under the provisions of Ex. A-7, had also not obtained the written permission of the Collector to the alienation in his favour. The learned Judge decided that the alienation in favour of the plaintiff was void owing to his failure to obtain the written permission in question He decided that the alienation in favour of the defendant was also void owing to his failure to obtain the written permission in question in so far as Sch. 3 was concerned, but that it was a good alienation inasmuch as it was not a private transfer of the property attached within the meaning of S. 64, Civil P. C.

The learned counsel for the defendant-respondent has argued that the alienation in his favour was good, and that on that ground alone the suit of the plaintiff-respondent should be dismissed We consider that we are justified in the finding that it cannot be held to be good as a transfer other than a private transfer. In respect of the other ground which he pressed that he had obtained the written permission of the Collector to the alienation in his favour, inasmuch as the Collector himself signed the deed Ex. A-7, we have only to say that we consider that in the present case it is advisable not to decide that point, as it cannot be decided finally now against persons other than the plaintiff in his present capacity, and as its decision is not necessary for the decision of this appeal. It is of course clear that Mahomad Husain Khan's right to redeem may still be brought forward in a subsequent suit, and to hold definitely either that the defendant-respondent has acquired full proprietary rights or that he has not acquired full proprietary rights would only complicate decision in a future suit, in which such a pronouncement would not operate as res judicata.

It is, however, clear that the plaintiff-appellant must succeed on the strength of his own title and not by questioning the proprietary rights of the defendant-respondent. We can decide this case simply on the following point. Has Thakur Amir Haider Khan obtained a right to redeem the mortgage Ex. A-1? He bases this right in the first place upon a purchase of the right to redeem from Mahomad Husain Khan, that is to say on Ex. 1. We are not concerned greatly with the question as to whether Mahomad Husain Khan was the sole successor-in-interest of Saadat Khan. We consider that the defendant-respondent was not wise in suggesting that he was not sole successor. It seems that he himself treated him as sole successor. But we find that the execution of Ex 1 has given the plaintiff-appellant no right to redeem. The provisions of para 11, Sch. 3, must be construed strictly. In Gauri Shankar Balmakund v. Chinnumaya (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were dealing with S. 325-A of the old Civil P. C. (Act 14 of 1882). That section is identical with the present para 11, Sch. 3. There the case was a case of transfer by mortgage. Here it is a case of transfer by sale. But the nature of the transfer is immaterial. It was pressed before their Lordships that S. 325-A was not to be read in the complete and operative sense natural to the words, that is to say, of incompetency to mortgage such property, but must be read with an implied limitation. Their Lordships repelled that suggestion. They considered that the words must be read to give the obvious meaning and that there was a complete incompetency. They say :

"In short the sole point in this appeal is whether a declaration by statute that a judgment-debtor shall be incompetent to mortgage his property is or is not to be read in the exact and plain sense, which the words imply."

They went on to hold that the declaration must be read in the exact sense which the words imply. In these circumstances the transfer was not only voidable. It was void, because the written permission of the Collector had not been obtained.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has argued that the written permission of the Collector was obtained to the alienation in his favour. He admits that the Collector signed nothing, and he admits that the Collector was never asked to give his permission in writing; but he suggests that the fact that the officer conducting the proceedings permitted the plaintiff-appellant to pay Rs. 6,776-15-6 in satisfaction of the decree in favour of Mt Nidha must be taken as an implied permission in writing. The argument appears to us to be a dangerous argument for the plaintiff-appellant to put forward, for if it were considered that a failure to object on behalf of the Collector to an alienation is tantamount to a written permission to alienate, the defendant-respondent would be on much stronger ground owing to the fact that the Collector himself had signed the sale deed Ex. A-7 in his favour, the sale deed in question being of a date prior to the date on which Ex. 1 was executed. But in any circumstances there cannot be a decision in favour of the appellant on this point. In the first place the officer conducting the sale (who is generally known as the "sales officer") was not the Collector and he had no authority to give any written permission. The facts that he permitted the plaintiff-appellant to deposit the money and thereupon withdrew the attachment do not to our mind show that he gave permission to the alienation in the plaintiff-appellant's favour. But in any circumstances he had no authority to give permission. The plaintiff-appellant's appeal must fall upon that ground.

(1) A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 168=46 Cal. 183=45 I. A. 219 (P. C.).

The learned counsel for the appellant has argued further that under the provisions of S. 91, Act 4 of 1882, he has a right to redeem. His case here is that Mt. Nidha Bibi was the judgment-creditor of the mortgagor, and that she had obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property. Under S. 91 she could redeem the property. That is so. But the plaintiff-appellant was not a judgment-creditor of the mortgagor The learned counsel argues that, having paid off Mt. Nidha Bibi's decree, he had acquired her right to redeem We cannot accede to that proposition. He further suggested that he must be held, because he had paid off the amount due on the decree, to have an interest or charge on the right to redeem the property. We are unable to accept that argument. It appears to us that the plaintiff-appellant had no interest in the payment of Mt Nidha Bibi's decree. S. 69, Act 9 of 1872, would not apply. But even if he had an interest in the payment of Mt. Nidha Bibi's decree his remedy would have been against Mahomad Hussain Khan for reimbursement We consider that it is possible that he might have had a claim under S. 70 Act 9 of 1872, as he had lawfully paid the money for Mahomad Husain Khan, and did not intend to do so gratuitously, and Mahomad Husain Khan had enjoyed the benefit of his payment But that fact would give him only a remedy against Mahomad Husain Khan. It would not enable him to redeem the mortgage Ex. A-1. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has urged the hardship on his client who, as he points out, has paid Rs. 6,776-15-6 and obtained no benefit for having done so. That fact, however, cannot give him a right to redeem when he does not possess one otherwise. It is to be noted, that his sale deed not only covers the property mortgaged which was attached under Mt. Nidha Bibi's decree, but also other property which was not attached under the decree. In so far as the property not attached under the decree is concerned the transfer in his favour appears to have been a good transfer. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Certain cross-objections were filed. The learned counsel has explained that he only filed these cross-objections in order to be in a position in event of it being found that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to redeem the property to obtain an increase of the amount payable on redemption. As the appeal has failed the cross-objections fail automatically The parties will pay their own costs of the cross-objections Execution Decree Appeal No 71 of 1928, Decided on 18th July 1929, from order of Addl. Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 5th October 1928.

 Civil P. C., S. 60, Proviso—Right of Gangaputra to receive offerings is right of personal service and cannot be attached—But right of occupation of particular spot on bank together with physical articles is liable to attachment.

The right of Gangaputra to receive offerings is merely a right of personal service and as such cannot be attached. But his right of occupation of a particular spot on the banks of the river for the purpose of putting up his chauki is distinct from the personal right of receiving offerings and as such is not exempt from attachment or sale in execution of a decree. Similarly the physical articles, namely chaukis or wooden platforms are properties which are liable to attachment: (Case law considered). [P 445 C 2, P 447 C 1]

Mahabir Prasad for R. D Sinha—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The Kashmiri Bank Ltd., Fyzabad, in liquidation, obtained a simple money decree on 25th November 1919, against Panda Ganpat Prasad Gangaputra of Ajudhya, district Fyzabad. The decree-holder made an application for execution of the decree by attachment and the sale of certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. One of the items of property sought to be attached and sold, with which alone we are concerned in this appeal, is described in the application for execution in the following terms.

"Chaukis on the bank of river Sarju City Ajudhya, Pergana Haveli Awadh, Tahsil and District Fyzabad, numbered below in the name of Panda Ganpat Prasad son of Joti Sarup. 20, 77, 78, 79, 150, 164, 165, 184, 254, 255, 256, 298, 299, 300, 323, 324, 325, 334, 340, 341, 345, 348, 349, 350, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, and 100. Total 30 plots."

The judgment-debtor objected that the chaukis sought to be sold did not constitute any property, which could validly form the subject of attachment and sale in execution of the decree. He pleaded that the right to chaukis was only a personal right, which was exempt from attachment by virtue of S. 60, Cl. (f), Civil P. C. The Munsif accepted the objection of the judgment-debtor On an appeal by the decree-holder the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad set aside the order of the Munsif and declared that the chaukis in dispute were liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree The judgment-debtor Panda Ganpat Prasad has come here in the second appeal.

Mr. Hyder Husein the learned counsel for the judgment-debtor appellant has contended that the right to chaukis consists merely of the right to receive offerings from pilgrims, who go to bathe at the ghats of river Sarju in lieu of services rendered by the Gangaputras. He argued that such a right is merely a personal right, which is exempted from attachment by S. 60, Cl. 5, Civil P C. The learned counsel for the respondent has on the other hand maintained that the right to chaukis consists not merely of the right to receive offerings from the clients but also of the right of occupation of particular spots on the bank of the river and that both these rights constitute property, which is heritable as well as transferable It will be clear, on the contentions of the learned counsel of the parties, as set forth above, that the determination of the question in controversy between the parties must rest to a great extent upon the determination of the nature of the rights possessed by the judgment-debtor which are sought to be attached and sold. We have already quoted the description of the property as given in the application for execution. We regret that the trial Court did not clearly elucidate the position of the parties as regards the right to chaukis, which formed the subject of controversy in the execution proceedings. However, the learned counsel for the parties are agreed before us that the bank of river Sarju is Government Nazul land and that the various Gangaputras are in occupation of different spots on the ghats of the river Sarju, on which spots they place wooden chaukis or platforms where the pilgrims come and sit. These pilgrims generally after they have had their bath make voluntary offerings to the particular Gangaputra on whose chauki they sit and put their clothes. Though the Gangaputras have no proprietary right in the land on which they place their chaukis, and whatever may be the rights as between them on the one hand and the Government Nazul department on the other, yet there can be no doubt that they have at the least a right of occupation of the particular spot in their possession. The question therefore is whether this right of occupation of the particular spot on which the judgment-debtor is entitled place his chauki, assuming it to be nothing more than a possessory right, can be subject to attachment and sale or not. In order to answer this question let us analyse the position a little more closely. The right to chaukis may consist of one or more of the following four rights

(a) right to ownership of the land on which the chaukis are placed,

(b) right to receive offerings from the persons who visit the ghats for bathing,

(c) right to the occupation of the particular spot on which the judgment-debtor is entitled to put his chaukis independently of the rights between him and the Government Nazul, and

(d) right to ownership of the wooden platform called the chauki.

As regards the right to the ownership of the land it is admitted that the judgment-debtor has no such right of ownership No claim for attachment or sale can therefore be based on this ground.

As regards the right to receive offerings from pilgrims we have no doubt that such a right is merely a right of personal service, which cannot be the subject of attachment and sale. This right of a Gangaputra or ghatia to receive offerings from pilgrims is similar to the right of a shebait or poojari to receive offerings at a Hindu shrine or the right of a Mahabrahman to get alms and offerings on the death of any person. The nature of such rights has been the subject of discussion in various cases

In Ganesh Ramchandra Date v. Shankar Ramchandra (1), it was held that the vritti by virtue of which certain religious ceremonies were performed on the river Godavari on behalf of the pilgrims who paid fees to the holders of priestly offices for the performance of such religious ceremonies at or about the time of their performance was a hereditary priestly office and that it was a "right of personal service within the meaning of Cl. (f), S. 266, Civil P. C. (Act 14 of 1882), and therefore protected from attachment."

Similarly in Govind Lakshman v. Ramkrishna Hari (2), it was held that jyotishi vritti was a right to receive certain emoluments as a reward for personal service and therefore not liable to attachment.

In Raja Ram v. Ganesh (3), Ranade, J., in an instructive judgment held that a vritti cannot be sold in execution of a decree. He remarked on p. 135 that:

"compulsory alienation by way of sale in execution decrees has been disallowed in all cases as being not only opposed to Hindu Law and public policy but against the provisions of S. 266 as being right of personal service . . . . . Such compulsory sales might transfer such properties to persons disqualified to perform the duties of the office. In the case of private alienation this objection does not hold equally good and private alienations are not absolutely prohibited."

Further on p. 136 he observed:

"That the rules of succession depend upon the nature of each particular foundation or office and in respect of it custom and practice must govern and prevail over the text law which admittedly prohibited both partition and alienation . . . . . By force of custom, however, a limited right of partition and alienation might be established and custom must be ascertained by evidence in each class of cases."

We are in entire agreement with this exposition of the law on the subject

In Kali Charan Gir v. Bangshi Mohan Das (4) and Jaggurnath Roy v. Kishen Pershad (5) it was held that the rights of a shebait or other person to perform worship of a Hindu idol cannot be transferred. Similar view was taken by the Madras High Court in Narasimma Thatha Acharya v. Anantha Bhatta (6).

In Jhumman Pande v. Dinoonath Pandey (7), Durga Prasad v. Genda (8) and Durga Prasad v. Shambhu (9), it was held that birt mahabrahmani is a right of personal service and cannot be attached. The same principle underlies the decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, relating to mahabrahmani dues in Bhagwan Din v. Mani Ram (10); Baddu v. Babu Lal (11) and Mahesh Prasad v. Bharath (12)

The learned counsel for the respondent has relied upon four cases: Sukhlal v Bishambhar (13); Lokya v. Sulli (14); Suraj Prasad v. Ganesh Ram (15) and Gaya Din v. Gur Din (16) In Sukhlal v. Bishambhar (13), there was a mortgage by one Mahabrahman in favour of another Mahabrahman and the mortgage was upheld. In Lokya v. Sulli (14), the only question was whether the birt jajmani was heritable and partible. In Suraj Prasad v Ganesh Ram (15), it was held that the right of a ghatia was a right to property and heritable under Hindu Law. Lastly in Gaya Din v. Gur Din (16), it was held that the right to receive offerings was capable of passing to the heirs by inheritance and also therefore subject to partition. We do not wish to express any opinion as regards the heritability or the power of making partition or private alienation in respect of such rights as no such questions arise in the present case, but we have no hesitation, on a review of all the authorities cited before us, in holding that the right of a Gangaputra to receive offerings is merely a right of personal service and as such cannot be sold in execution of a decree.

As regards the judgment-debtor's right of occupation of a particular spot on the banks of the river for the purpose of putting his chauki in order to carry on his profession it is unnecessary for us to enter into the question as regards the rights possessed by him in this respect as against the Government Nazul, but we are inclined to agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, that such a right of occupation of specific portions of the river bank as described by various numbers given in the application for execution is quite distinct from the personal right of receiving offerings and as such is not exempt from attachment or sale in execution of the decree. Similarly the physical articles namely chaukis or the wooden platforms placed on the ghat are also properties which are liable to attachment and sale.

For the above reasons we agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

PULLAN, J.

Muhammad Khan and another—Plaintiffs—Appellants.

v.

Sheo Bhikh Singh and others—Defendants—Respondents

Second Appeal No. 77 of 1929, Decided on 8th August 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, D/- 24th January 1929.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100 — Appellate Court cannot interfere if decision of lower Court, though defective is based on findings of facts.

The appellate Court cannot interfere with the decision of the lower Court in second appeal only on the ground that it is defective if it is based on findings of facts. But where the lower Court goes beyond findings of facts, and its decision is wrong, the appellate Court can interfere. [P 447 C 2]

Under S. 91 the only evidence as to a grant when it has been reduced to the form of a document is the document itself unless secondary evidence as to its contents is admissible. Only Cl. (c), S. 65, which makes secondary evidence of lost originals admissible can be applied to such a case; but where there is no evidence on record that the document has been lost Cl. (c) is inapplicable and a finding of Court based on existence of an ijazatnama which is said to be lost is erroneous in law. [P 448 C 1]

(c) Custom—Land cannot be claimed as reserved for burning corpses in absence of special custom, merely because some dead bodies had been burnt there.

Failing evidence that there is some special custom by which the land is reserved for the purpose of burning the dead bodies, the mere fact that certain dead bodies have been burnt there, gives them no title to a person to resist the claim to occupy the land by virtue of a lease. [P 448 C 1]

(d) Possession—Court of Wards representing zamindar holds possession of parti land of village presumed to be in possession of zamindar — Mere possession without title does not confer any right to possession.

The parti land of a village is presumed to be in the possession of the zamindar and Court of Wards representing the zamindar must be held to be in possession of the land. Mere physical possession without any title gives no right and, where the defendants are unable to set up any title though they may have been in physical possession of the land, they cannot set up any right. [P 448 C 1]

Ali Zaheer—for Appellants.

Radha Krishna—for Respondents.

Judgment—In this case the plaintiffs obtained a lease from the Court of Wards managing the estate of the Raja of Dalippur in respect of two numbers which are described in the revenue papers as parti land. The case was brought because possession was contested by the defendants who alleged that the greater portion of this land had been granted to them by the Raja himself by means of an ijazatnama for the purpose of planting a grove and that furthermore they had a right to burn their dead on the land.

The first Court decreed the suit but the lower appellate Court reversed this finding and I am asked in appeal to restore that of the Court of first instance.

There can be no question that the judgment of the Court below is in many respects defective but I could not on this ground alone interfere with it if it were held to be based on findings of fact arrived at by the Court below. I have considered all the findings of the Court below very carefully and I am of opinion that in so far as they are findings of fact they have no effect on the suit, and where they go beyond being findings of fact they are demonstrably wrong. The defendants base their title on an ijazatnama which they said they lost and which is supposed to have been granted to them six years ago by the Raja of Dalippur before his estate was taken under the Court of Wards. Under S. 91,

Evidence Act, the only evidence as to a grant when it has been reduced to the form of a document is the document itself unless secondary evidence as to its contents is admissible Secondary evidence could only be admissible under the terms of S 65, Evidence Act, and the clause applicable could only be Cl. (c), but this clause is not applicable because there is no evidence on the record to show that the document is lost. Thus any finding of the lower Court based upon the existence of the ijazatnama is erroneous in law

The second finding is that the defendants used some portion of this land as chiari, that is to say, they had on occasions burnt corpses on the land Failing evidence that there was some special custom by which this land was reserved to the defendants for the purpose of burning their dead, I am unable to hold that the mere fact that certain dead bodies had been burnt there gives the defendants any title to resist the plaintiffs' claim to occupy the land in virtue of the lease

The other two findings of the Court appear to be, first, that the Court of Wards was not in possession and secondly that the defendants were in possession, but the Subordinate Judge does not say when the Court of Wards was not in possession, or how the defendants came into possession. Mere possession is admitted by the plaintiffs but possession without title cannot give any right to the defendants. Nor can it be understood how it could be found that the Court of Wards was not in possession They represented the zamindar. The parti land of the village is presumed to be in the possession of the zamindar, and as the defendants have been unable to set up any title, although there may have been physical possession, the Court of Wards must be held to be in possession as zamindar.

I cannot, therefore, hold that the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below make a decision based as it is on a most inadequate appreciation of the facts of the case, insusceptible to failure in second appeal. On the facts I have no doubt that the plaintiffs obtained a valid lease from the Court of Wards for a plot of land which the Court of Wards was entitled to give on lease, and the defendants had no title whatever on which to resist the plaintiffs. The evidence of the Raja himself in so far as it is admissible is of very little value He did not even remember if the land was parti or a grove, and although he attempted to help the defendants by writing a letter to the Court of Wards after the plaintiffs' lease was granted, and he ventured also to say that the land appeared to be chiari, he could only say that he had been told that the ijazatnama had been lost, and he was unable to state on what ground he held the land to be chiari. In my opinion the Court of first instance was right and the lower appellate Court was entirely wrong

I allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

PULLAN, J.

Pirthipal Singh — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Hari Saran Das and another—Plaintiffs and Defendant—Respondents.

Second Rent Appeal No. 32 of 1928, Decided on 27th February 1929, from an order of Addl. Dist Judge, Gonda, D/- 1st January 1928.

Local Rates Act (1 of 1914), S. 8 (a)—Under-proprietor is liable to pay for maintenance of rural police under Cl. (a).

Section 8 clearly lays down two payments which are connected by the word "and" immediately preceding the letter (a) which commences the second portion of that section. This portion prescribes a payment in lieu of an amount previously collected under the United Provinces Local and Rural Police Act, which is now to be levied as a local rate. An under-proprietor is liable to pay for the maintenance of rural police under Cl (a).

[P 449 C 1]

K. P. Misra—for Appellant.

Mahesh Prasad—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal has been filed by an under-proprietor in order to contest his liability to pay local rates to the taluqdar. In the Court of first instance a calculation was made which is now admittedly incorrect. In first appeal the matter was not decided at all because the Judge satisfied himself by saying that nothing was shown in support of the plea. Now the appellant accepts the arithmetical accuracy of the calculation which has been filed by the learned advocate for the respondent ; but he admits only his liability to pay the first portion of the sum arrived at, namely, an item of Rs. 6-9-9 which is the sum due as local rates under the first portion of S. 8, Local Rates Act (1 of 1914). He contests his liability as to a sum of Rs. 7-6-3 alleged to be due under Cl. (a) of the same section, contending that under S. 17 of the same Act no sum is now due from under-proprietors for the maintenance of the rural police and, therefore, Cl. (a) can only refer to sums due before 1914 when the United Provinces Local and Rural Police Rates Act, 1906, was repealed by Act 1 of 1914. In my opinion the contention is incorrect. S. 8 clearly lays down two payments which are connected by the word "and" immediately preceding the letter (a) which commences the second portion of the section. This portion prescribes a payment in lieu of an amount previously collected under the United Provinces Local and Rural Police Rates Act, which is now to be levied as a local rate. And S. 17 carries this further by pointing out that as the police rate is now included in the local rate no additional sum can be levied from an under-proprietor for the maintenance of the rural police.

The last point raised by the appellant is that even if this is the case he should not have to pay, because there is no proof that at the time of the commencement of the Act he was liable for payment of any of the rates payable under the United Provinces Local and Rural Police Rates Act, 1906. He says that if he paid anything at all he paid it under an agreement of the year 1866. It may be that his agreement was entered into in the year 1866, but it continued to subsist after the Act of 1906 was passed ; and whatever payment was made for the upkeep of the police after the passing of that Act must be held to be a payment made under that Act. Moreover this point was decided by the Court of first instance and has not been clearly challenged in appeal. In my opinion the appellant is liable both for the sum of Rs. 6-9-9 per annum due as local rates proper and for the sum of Rs. 7-6-3 due as local rates in substitution for the old police rate. The amount due, therefore, for one year is Rs. 14 and for one and a half years is Rs. 21. I allow the appeal to this extent that the decree of the local Court is modified and the sum of Rs. 21 is substituted for the amount previously decreed on account of local rates. As the difference between this decree and that of the Court of first instance is only Rs. 0-9-2, this practically amounts to dismissal of the appeal ; but under the circumstances of the case I order the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

First Appeal No. 104 of 1928, Decided on 31st July 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, D/- 30th April 1928.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 74—Subrogation—Where mortgagee takes renewal of previous liabilities in full satisfaction no question of subrogation arises.

Where a deed of mortgage is executed in satisfaction of amount due on prior deeds and an advance in cash, there being prior and puisne mortgagees, the subsequent mortgagee cannot claim priority on the ground that the deeds have been kept alive and can be pleaded to give them priority over subsequent alienations by the mortgagor. It is not a case where a subsequent mortgagee has paid off prior liabilities incurred by the mortgagor in favour of third parties and no question of subrogation arises. [P 450 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act — Mortgagee allowing right to recover money on basis of previous liabilities to be lost by time, cannot claim priority.

A mortgagee taking fresh deed in satisfaction of previous liabilities cannot claim priority on basis of the earlier mortgages when he allows his right to recover money on basis of earlier mortgages to be lost by lapse of time: 33 Cal. 527 (P.C.) and 17 O. C. 33, Rel. on. [P 451 C 1]

Hyder Husein and A. C. Mukerji—Appellants.

H.N Misra and Kunj Behari Shukla—for Respondents

Judgment.—The facts of this appeal are as follows : The plaintiffs-appellants came into Court for relief on the basis of a deed of simple mortgage dated 7th

August 1914. There is no doubt as to execution of the deed. There was, however, contest on many points. The deed had been executed by a certain Autar Singh and professed to transfer joint family property. Although Autar Singh was held competent to transfer the property the learned trial Judge found in respect of his sons (who now represent the family) that they were not obliged to pay interest at the rate which Autar Singh had agreed to pay and the amount claimed was substantially reduced. The reduction of interest is not challenged by the plaintiff-appellants. In the array of parties were certain persons who were joined as puisne mortgagees It was put forward on contest not only that there were puisne mortgagees but that there were many prior mortgagees The prior mortgages were set forward and in the decree provision was made for the recognition of these prior mortgages The suit was instituted on 6th August 1927. Later on the plaintiffs applied for permission to amend the plaint. The main modification proposed was this The deed of mortgage on which the suit was based was executed in satisfaction of the amount due on two prior deeds and an advance in cash. In the proposed amendment it was set forth that the plaintiffs should be allowed priority in respect of the amounts due under the prior deeds The learned trial Judge refused to permit the amendment of the plaint and did not touch on the point in his judgment. The appeal before us has been argued upon the basis that the amendment had been allowed but that the point had been decided against the plaintiffs.

It will be necessary in the first place to state particulars as to the dates of these respective deeds. There are in the first place two registered deeds of mortgage, one of 4th May 1904 and the other of 5th March 1909, in favour of third parties. There can be no doubt as to the fact that the holders of these deeds can claim priority against the appellants. The next deed which we come to is a deed dated 21st July 1909 (Ex. 2) This is in favour of the plaintiffs' predecessor in-interest. It is a deed of simple mortgage for Rs. 500 cash This is Ex. 2. Then follow deeds in favour of third parties of 27th July 1909, 14th October 1910, 22nd July 1912, 1st July 1913 and 8th August 1913. Next comes a deed of further charge dated 23rd December 1913, in favour of the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest. This was a deed for Rs 200 This deed is Ex. 3.

Now we have it that the deed of 7th August 1914 which is for Rs. 2,200 was executed for the following consideration:

|---|---|---|
| For satisfaction of the principal on two deeds Exs. 2 and 3 ... ... | Rs. | 700 |
| For interest on the two deeds Ex. 2 and 3 ... ... | " | 1,000 |
| Paid in cash .. ... | " | 400 |

This is the deed on which the plaintiffs claimed for principal and interest Rs 39,651.

It will be observed that the plaintiffs would not have as great advantage in setting up Ex. 3 as setting up Ex. 2. What the plaintiffs are doing is this They are asserting their rights under the deeds Exs. 2 and 3 claiming that those rights have been kept alive and can be pleaded to give them priority over subsequent alienations by the mortgagor It is not a case in which a subsequent mortgagee has paid off prior liabilities, incurred by the mortgagor in favour of third parties This is a case in which the mortgagee has himself taken a renewal of previous liabilities in full satisfaction. As we understand it there can be no question of subrogation in the particular circumstances. But even if it were possible for such a claim to be put forward the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mohammed Ibrahim Husain v. Ambika Prasad Singh (1) is sufficient to show that these pleas are barred by limitation. The facts there were as follows :

A certain Girwar Singh had executed a zarepeshgi lease on 20th November 1874 Twelve thousand rupees due under this lease were repayable in September 1887. On 17th Feburary 1888 the successor of Girwar Singh executed a deed of mortgage One of the conditions of the mortgage was the payment of the amount due under the zarepeshgi lease. When the suit was brought eventually on the basis of the mortgage of 17th February 1888, certain persons set up transfers of dates between 20th November 1874 and 17th February 1888. The holders of the mortgage of 17th February 1888 claimed priority because they had paid off the amount due under the zarepeshgi lease. Their Lordships rejected this plea for the following reasons :

(1) [1912] 39 Cal. 527=14 I. C. 496=39 I. A. 68 (P.C.).

"But as the Rs. 12,000 were under the zarepeshgi deed of 20th November 1874, repayable in Jeth 1294 Fasli (September 1887) and this suit was not brought until 22nd September 1900, the claim of the plaintiffs to priority is barred by Art. 132, Sch. 2, Lim. Act."

The facts here are similar. On the date when the present suit was brought, 6th August 1927, all reliefs based on Ex. 2 and Ex. 3 were time barred. A somewhat similar matter was before the Judicial Commissioner in 1913 The then Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Lindsay decided the appeal in this matter : Deputy Commr. of Lucknow v. Sukhnandan (2) He discussed the question at pp. 43 to 46. We are in full accord with what has been stated in that decision. This disposes of the only grounds on which the appeal was argued The learned counsel abandoned grounds 5 to 7. The appeal is dismissed with costs. There will be two sets of costs. Raja Bhagwan Bukhsh Singh will get his costs separately and the remaining respondents who are represented by the same learned counsel will receive one set of costs.

Where the parties give their consent to the Court as to the procedure which the Court is to adopt in matter of coming to a decision on the merits of the case and they also give their consent that such a decision will be binding on them, it is tantamount to saying that the decision will be final and no right of appeal will be exercised by the parties. The parties cannot resile from the agreement and an appeal is incompetent. Wasim and Zahur Ahmad—for Appellant.

Mahabir Prasad Srivastava—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is the defendant's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated 20th October 1928 confirming the decree of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated 18th May 1928. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration of certain easement rights in relation to his residential house The proceedings in the suit while it was pending in the Court of first instance abruptly terminated under an agreement of the parties. That agreement was as follows:

"At this stage the parties agree to leave the case for decision to the Court. They agree that they will not produce any oral or documentary evidence. They agree to abide by the decision of the Court whatever it may be. They give to the Court power to take into account the documents already on the record and to summon any evidence it likes. They do not put any sort of limitation on the powers of the Court. "

In pursuance of this agreement the Court pronounced its decision and it happened to be in favour of the plaintiff. From the decision of the first Court the defendant preferred an appeal to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow who, on a preliminary objection taken by the plaintiff, held that the appeal was incompetent. He accordingly dismissed the appeal.

In second appeal it is contended that the agreement on its construction does not preclude the defendant from exercising his right of appeal which is given to him by law, that is S. 96, Civil P. C, 1908, and secondly that, in any event the decision of the Court being neither a decision of an arbitrator nor on a settlement or adjustment of the claim, as contemplated by O 23, R. 1, Civil P. C. the decree of the Court of the first instance was appealable, notwithstanding the agreement.

The learned advocate for the appellant cited the decision of the High Court of Madras in Sankaranarayana Pillai v. Ramaswamiah Pillai (1). This decision, if we may respectfully say so, is exhaustive in its nature and deals with cases decided both in England and in India bearing on the question now being considered. Reference was made to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pizani v. Attorney General for Gibralter (2), and to the decision of the House of Lords in Burgess v. Morley (3). Amongst other cases reference was made also to the case of Saiyan Zain v. Kalabhai Lallubhai (4) and Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. T. Ramayya (5).

Little need be said on the question of construction of the agreement, which we have reproduced in extenso in the foregoing part of this judgment. We think that the words are clear and emphatic. The parties gave their consent to the Court, to the procedure which the Court was to adopt in the matter of coming to a decision on the merits of the case then before it and they also gave their consent that such a decision will be binding on them. This is tantamount to saying that the decision shall be final and no right of appeal will be exercised by either of the parties. This being our construction of the agreement in question, we think that there is nothing in general principles which will have the effect of permitting any one of the parties to resile from the agreement Reference in this connexion was made to the provisions of S 23, Contract Act, 1872. We are of opinion that that section has no application to the present case. The agreement with which we are concerned in the present case is not an agreement by which any party "is restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of any contract."

In the first place there is no absolute restriction placed on any party from enforcing his rights. Indeed the rights were in controversy between the parties in the suit in which the agreement was arrived at. What was restricted was the right to challenge the propriety of the decree of the Court of first instance. That clearly was a right in a rule of procedure provided by law. Secondly the case in which the agreement was made was not a case to enforce rights under or in respect of any contract.

Decisions in the High Courts in India have mainly proceeded on two lines, one that there is no right of appeal, if the agreement is considered to be an adjustment of a suit within the meaning of O 23, Civil P. C., and secondly if the effect of the agreement is to constitute the Court an arbitrator in respect of the controversy in the suit. We are of opinion that it is not necessary that an agreement to support the exclusion of the right of appeal must always rest on one or the other of the two grounds just now mentioned If the agreement is not void by the effect of any rule of law, we see no reason why it should not be enforced as an agreement We have already rejected the contention that S. 28, Contract Act, 1872, makes the agreement void. This agreement has all the necessary elements of a valid contract. It is not disputed that it is supported by consideration and is free of any taint of undue influence, mistake or misrepresentation. We think that it is legally binding on the parties and according to the decision of their Lordshtps of the Judicial Committee in the case of Moonshi Amir v. Inderjeet Singh (6), it is equally binding on the conscience of the parties.

The only matter which now remains to be considered is the argument that S 96, Civil P. C., gives a right of appeal to every party who feels aggrieved of the decision of the Court of first instance and that this right is not subject to any contract which may exist between the parties. It appears to us that there are two answers to this argument. The right of appeal is clearly made subject to "any other law for the time being in force." One of such laws is the law of contract. According to that law a party is entitled to the benefits of an agreement if it is a valid and enforceable agreement. We have already said that the agreement before us is of such a nature. Another answer is that sub-S. (3), S 96, Civil P. C., 1908 clearly provides that no appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties. As against the applicability of this subsection, the argument on behalf of the appellant is that there is "no decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties" in the present case, because there was no adjustment of the suit under O. 23, Civil P. C. We are unable to accept this argument.

Sub-S. (3) to which reference has just now been made does certainly include decrees passed in consequence of an adjustment under O. 23, Civil P. C., but the subsection is not limited to that class of decrees only. There may be other decrees than decrees on adjustment passed by the Court with the consent of parties, and the decree in the case before us was such a decree. There can be no doubt on a proper construction of the agreement that the parties gave their consent to a decree which the Court may pass in the subject matter of the controversy involved in the suit. This being so, we are of opinion that the appeal in the Court below was incompetent and so is the second appeal in this Court. This view would seem to be in accordance with the view of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ramchandra Deo Garu v. Chaitana Sahu (7).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2 of 1929, Decided on 3rd September 1929, from decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 22nd November 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Findings of facts to preclude second appeal must be precise and definite.

To preclude a second appeal on a question of fact there must be a precise and definite finding on that question. Mere rambling suggestions and a bare possibility of certain view of evidence being plausible are not findings of facts against which appeals could be excluded. [P 453 C 2 ; P 454 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Antecedent debt—Sums admitted to be paid in part consideration of deed do not constitute antecedent debt.

Khaliquzzaman—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale of certain immovable property on the foot of a deed of mortgage dated 16th April 1914 and a deed of further charge dated 6th March 1916. Both these deeds were executed by one Ram Adhin. Ram Adhin has since died and his sons are the defendants to the suit. The plea in defence is that the mortgaged property being joint family property could not be burdened by Ram Adhin for debts which were not binding on the family. The plaintiff did not admit that the property was ancestral joint family property but the Courts below have decided this matter against the plaintiff and the decision has been accepted as correct and binding before us on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent. The question which remains for consideration is as to the binding character of the debts incurred under the two deeds mentioned above.

The deed of 16th April 1914 was executed in lieu of a debt of Rs. 500 principal. It carried interest at the rate of 15 per cent per annum. The details of the total amount of the consideration were specified in the deed and with the exception of a sum of Rs. 50 which was admittedly advanced in cash at the time of the execution of the deed the rest of the consideration was a debt previous in time The question which arose in those circumstances was as to whether the previous loans could be treated as items of antecedent debt or were advances made in connexion with the mortgage transaction The Court of first instance decided this question against the plaintiff. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Additional District Judge of Bara Banki took a contrary view of the evidence in the case bearing on this part of the controversy. He held that according to the evidence, the entire sum of Rs. 450 ranked as antecedent debt Before we accept this decision of the learned Judge as a finding of fact conclusive in second appeal we must emphasize a point of view which is occasionally lost sight of by the Courts below. The law allows second appeals only on questions of law and on such questions as are stated in the rules of procedure and a second appeal on no other question is allowed. From this it follows that there is no second appeal on a question of fact ; but to preclude a second appeal on a question of fact there must be a precise and definite finding on that question. Mere rambling suggestions and a bare possibility of a certain view of evidence being plausible are not findings of facts against which appeals could be excluded.

In this particular case though we do hold that having regard to the contents of the judgment under appeal as a whole there is a finding of fact that the sum of Rs. 450 constitutes antecedent debt in the sense that it is made up of previous loans disassociated with the mortgage in suit the learned Judge in the Court below has indulged in remarks and observations which are indefinite, vague and open to more than one interpretation

So far as the consideration for the mortgage of 16th April 1914 is concerned, it remains now to decide the validity or otherwise of the remaining item of Rs 50 admittedly borrowed at the time of the execution of the deed of mortgage Clearly it is not an antecedent debt. The learned Judge of the Court below upholds it on the ground of legal necessity. This again is a finding of fact having regard to the evidence on which it could be based and which the learned Judge has accepted as reliable. This disposes of the deed of mortgage.

The deed of further charge dated 6th March 1916 was executed for a total consideration of Rs 150. This is divided into three items of Rs. 33, Rs. 35 and Rs. 82 As regards the first sum of money, the learned Judge in the Court below is of opinion that this was advanced for legal necessity and having held that the evidence was trustworthy he finds it proved as such. This finding must be accepted.

As regards the other two sums of money forming the consideration of the deed of further charge, he is of opinion that they constitute antecedent debts. It is agreed now that the learned Judge was in error in doing so. The plaintiff clearly admitted that these two sums of money were paid by him as part consideration of the deed in question This being the plaintiff's case the learned counsel for the respondent was right in disassociating himself from the finding of the learned Judge in the Court below that these sums of money constituted antecedent debts. The argument before us is that their validity is justified by legal necessity. In support of the argument reliance is placed solely on the evidence of the plaintiff himself. In these circumstances we are called upon to decide a question of fact in this second appeal and our decision is that the plaintiff's evidence alone is not sufficient to support the case that these sums were advanced by the plaintiff to Ram Adhin for purposes which would amount to legal necessity under the Hindu Law; but apart from this the evidence in itself is vague. We accordingly hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the loan of Rs. 35 and Rs. 82 is justified by any legal necessity.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by dismissing the plaintiff's suit in respect of the two sums of Rs. 35 and Rs. 82 and the interest thereon which were claimed as part consideration of the deed of further charge dated 6th March 1916 (Ex 2). The rest of the decree is upheld. The parties will receive and pay costs in all the three Courts in proportion to their success and failure. A fresh decree of sale according to law shall be prepared in this Court allowing six months' time to the defendants to satisfy the amount for which the decree will now be made (The fact that the appeal was from an order of remand was not brought to the notice of their Lordships at the time of hearing. But it was subsequently brought to their notice whereupon the following order was passed.

Order.—This appeal was from an order of remand which our judgment upholds. A finding of the lower appellate Court as to the amount of mortgage money due to the mortgagee was modified. At the time when we were dictating our judgment in Court it was not brought to our notice that we were hearing an appeal from an order of remand under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. This being so, we directed that a fresh decree of sale be prepared in this Court This was obviously erroneous. We accordingly withdraw the last portion of our judgment now quoted :

" The parties will receive and pay costs in all the three Courts in proportion to their success and failure. A fresh decree of sale according to law shall be prepared in this Court allowing six months' time to the defendants to satisfy the amount " for which the decree will now be made. "

As to the costs so far incurred in all stages of the litigation our order is that they will abide the event.

Civil Revn. No. 40 of 1929, Decided on 7th August 1929, against order of Sub-Judge, Unao, D/- 8th April 1929.

Civil P. C., S. 11, Expln. 4—Omission by sub-mortgagee to claim amount due on sub-mortgage does not bar fresh suit.

It is not incumbent on the sub-mortgagee to claim payment in a redemption suit by a puisne mortgagee. By failing to do so he risks his own security but he cannot be barred from bringing a suit against his own mortgagor to recover the sum advanced by him. The first suit does not also operate as res judicata when the matter in issue (that the sub-mortgage was fictitious) in the suit was not brought to the knowledge of the sub-mortgagee whose presence was not compulsory at the hearing; 15 Bom 692 and 28 All. 638, Dist. [P 455 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by a Judge of the Small Cause Court. The plaintiff Sheo Shankar is a sub-mortgagee and he has brought this suit under S. 68, T. P. Act, to recover his share of the sub-mortgage executed in his favour on 17th June 1921 by the prior mortgagee Jagannath. This Jagannath had in his favour a mortgage dated 5th June 1912 and this was redeemed by one Sidh Gopal, a puisne mortgagee, by means of a suit in the Court of the Munsif which was decided on 28th November 1927 In that suit the present plaintiff was impleaded as a defendant. He made no appearance and in his absence a decree was passed for redemption on payment of a sum of Rs. 1,200 to Jagannath.

This application has been admitted on the ground that the lower Court made a mistake in law and that he should have held that the decision of the Munsif dated 28th November 1927, operates as res judicata against the present suit The plea of res judicata was taken in the Court below in reference only to an alleged finding by the Munsif that the sub-mortgage in favour of the present plaintiff was fictitious. What the Munsif said was:

"defendant 1, (i. e. Jagannath) swears that the mortgage-deed executed by him in favour of defendants 2 and 3 (one of whom is the present plaintiff) is fictitious. Under the circumstances I decree the plaintiff's claim for redemption on payment . . . . . of the sum of Rs. 1,200."

No doubt this is equivalent to a finding by the Munsif that the sub-mortgage can be disregarded as being fictitious, but it is evident that this finding is based entirely on a statement made in Court by Jagannath and the matter was not in issue to the knowledge of the present plaintiff whose presence at the date of hearing was not compulsory. The lower Court was therefore right in holding that the judgment of the Munsif in so far as this finding is concerned, did not operate as res judicata in the present suit. But in the grounds of revision before me a slightly different position is taken. It is argued not that this specific finding of the Munsif operates as res judicata but that the failure of the present plaintiff to claim the amount due on his sub-mortgage in the previous suit is the bar. It is sought to bring this omission under Expln. (4), S. 11, Civil P. C. It is argued that the sub-mortgagee was a necessary party to a suit for redemption and he must claim payment of his sub-mortgage in the redemption suit Reliance is placed on a ruling of the Bombay High Court reported in Narayan Vithal v. Ganoji (1) and on a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Gokul Das v. Devi Prasad (2), but neither of these rulings help the applicant in the present case. All that they lay down is that if the person claiming redemption so desires he is entitled to have an account taken of the sub-mortgages if any. But there is nothing in these rules or, as far as I know, elsewhere which makes it incumbent on the sub-mortgagee to claim payment in the redemption suit. By failing to do so he risks his security but it has never been held that he cannot bring a suit against his own mortgagor to recover the sum advanced by him under S. 68, T. P. Act Thus I am unable to find that the lower Court is in error either on the issue which he decided or on the question raised in a different form for the first time in this Court. The plaintiff was entitled to his

First Appeal No. 136 of 1928, Decided on 22nd August 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Sitapur, D/-16th August 1928.

Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 18—After preliminary decree in partition suit, application for final decree is proper course and fresh suit for absolute partition does not lie—Art. 181, Lim. Act, does not apply to such application — Such application, however, affects properties then in suit and not new properties.

Where in a partition suit a preliminary decree has been passed, the proper course for parties asking for partition is to make a further application for final decree for partition and a fresh suit for absolute partition does not lie. Such an application can be made at any time as there is no limitation to an application made in partition suit after the passing of a preliminary decree. Art. 181 does not apply to such a case. An application for the passing of a final decree in continuation of a preliminary decree can, however, affect only the property that was then in suit and new properties cannot be added : 29 *O. Judgment.—The parties to this appeal were originally members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. In the year 1915 Brahma Din, Sitaram, Ganesh Prasad and Jwala Prasad instituted in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, a suit for partition of the joint family property against Lalta Prasad, Ram Dayal and Ram Kumar and one of the female members of the family who was entitled to maintenance The suit was determined by a compromise in 1916. In the compromise the property was divided into 256 shares out of which Brahma Din was declared to be entitled to 112 shares, Sita Ram, Ganesh Prasad and Jwala Prasad to 63 shares, Ram Dayal and Ram Kumar to 52 shares and Lalta Prasad to 29 shares. The decree passed was in the main a preliminary decree of the nature for which provision is made in O. 20, R. 18. The property partitioned consisted of :

1. Revenue paying land owned by the family.
2. Land mortgaged to the family.
3. Groves owned by the family.
4. Groves mortgaged to the family.
5. Ten houses belonging to the family.
6. One house mortgaged to the family.
7. Rights under deeds and decrees and amounts due on parol debts.
8. Moveable property.

While the decree in part was a preliminary decree it was to a certain extent a final decree for it provided for the immediate partition of the moveable property It was stated that the revenue paying land belonging to the family should be partitioned by the revenue Courts. This has been done. The mortgaged property and the rights under the deeds and the amounts due as debts have also been partitioned. This much is admitted. In fact the only portions of the family property which have not been partitioned are the ten houses to which we have referred as item 5. Two of those houses have fallen down. Whatever has been done in partition by the parties has been done without the assistance of the civil Courts. On 30th January 1928 Brahma Din instituted a suit for an absolute separation of his 112/256th share in the ten houses in question. When the case was examined, it was found that two of the houses had fallen down. There was no opposition from the other members of the family except from Lalta Prasad. Sita Ram is now dead. Lalta Prasad had asserted that no partition could take place because the houses had already been partitioned. He further took exception that there were two other houses belonging to the joint family which had not been included in the previous suit. He desired that they should be added. He next took the plea (which was hardly consistent with the other pleas) that no suit could lie as Brahma Din had exhausted all his remedy by instituting the previous suit. The learned trial Judge passed a decree of this nature. He found that two of the houses had fallen down and he added the other two houses which Lalta Prasad suggested were joint family property. He found that there had been no previous partition and that Lalta Prasad's plea to that effect was without foundation. He then proceeded not to partition of Brahma Din's share of 112/256 but to grant another declaratory decree (in other words another preliminary decree) that Brahma Din held a share of 112/256 in the eight houses formerly in suit and the two houses added and that Ganesh Prasad held a 63/256th share in the same houses. It is to be noted that the decree as it stands cannot be executed. It will be necesssary for Brahma Din, Ganesh Prasad and Jwala Prasad, if they wish to have their share separated, to apply for a final decree They, however, seem satisfied with the relief which they have obtained. Lalta Prasad has appealed. In his grounds of appeal he reiterated that the houses had already been partitioned. His learned counsel has, however, not argued on that portion of the appeal, and has accepted the decision against his client in respect of that plea The learned counsel has pressed the plea that the present suit did not lie and that Brahma Din's remedy was to obtain a final decree upon the preliminary decree of 1916. The Allahabad decisions which the learned trial Judge has quoted against his view are based in the main on the pronouncement of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Nasratullah v. Mujibullah (1). It is to be noted that this decision was prior to the passing of Act 5 of 1908. Act 5 of 1908 laid down for the first time explicitly that in a partition suit there could be both a preliminary and a final decree. Previous to the passing of that Act there could be only one decree in a partition suit and that decree could undoubtedly become time barred. The decision of the Bench of the Allahabad High Court at p. 313 said :

"It appears to us that when a decree declaring a right to partition has not been given effect to by the parties proceeding to partition in accordance with it, it is competent for the parties or any of them, if they still continue to be interested in the joint property, to bring another suit for a declaration of a right to a partition in case their right to partition is called in question at a time when, by reason of limitation or otherwise, they cannot put into effect the decree first obtained. In this respect suits for declaration of right to partition differ from most other suits. So long as the property is jointly held so long does a right to partition continue. When a person having a right to partition and desiring to partition has his right challenged it appears to us he can maintain a suit for a declaration, provided his prior decree is not still enforceable."

We lay stress on the words "provided his prior decree is not still enforceable." As we understand it the preliminary decree of 1916 is enforceable. We adopt the view which was taken by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Tajammul Husain v Bande Raza (2). In our opinion Art. 181, Sch. 1, Act 9, of 1908, cannot apply in a matter like this

"There is no limitation applicable to an application made in a partition suit after the passing of a preliminary decree by which the shares of the parties are defined, in order that the proceedings may be continued for the purpose of actually effecting a partition and that a final decree in partition may be prepared."

This is the head note of that decision. We accept it as a correct statement of the law on the subject. In these circumstances Brahma Din's proper course was to apply for a final decree under which his share in the houses could be partitioned. Such an application is not time barred. It is the case for the learned counsel for the appellant Lalta Prasad that such an application is not time barred. But a second suit is not permissible because it is covering the same ground. But it is noticeable that an application for the passing of a final decree in continuation of the preliminary decree of 1916 can only affect the property that was then in suit. The addition of the two houses mentioned in list A attached to Lalta Prasad's written statement is not justified. The question is simply a question of procedure. Its decision will make little difference in expenditure of time or in any other way, for the present decree before us is not a final decree, and it would be necessary for Brahma Din, Ganesh Prasad and Jwala Prasad to have a final decree passed upon it Whether the final decree is based upon the present decree or upon the previous decree is obviously of little moment. But on the legal aspect of the case we have no choice except to allow the appeal and dismiss the suit. We have already indicated that the fact that we are taking this course will in no way prevent Brahma Din, Ganesh Prasad and Jwala Prasad from applying at once to have a final decree as a consequence of the preliminary decree of 1916. The appeal is allowed, and the suit is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case we direct the parties to bear their own costs.

(1) [1891] 13 All. 309=(1891) A. W. N. 117.

(2) [1920] 23 O. C. 281 = 60 I. C. 493 = 7 O. L. J. 538.

Judgment.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are these. Syed Hasan Bakar obtained a decree on 5th November 1925 against Sheo Narain Singh Sheo Narain Singh died on 5th March 1928 In execution of this decree Saiyed Hasan Bakar has attached certain property. The present appellant Chotkao Singh, a minor son of Sheo Narain Singh, has objected to the attachment on the ground that the property being joint family property the share of Sheo Narain Singh at the most could be attached ; and on the further ground that the debt on which the decree was passed was tainted with immorality. The learned trial Judge finding against him on both points, he has appealed here. The main questions have been decided definitely by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (1). At p. 139 (of 51 I. A) their Lordships said :

"If he (the meaning member) is the father and the other members are the sons he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt."

Thus the plea that the property is joint family property is of no value. Here Sheo Narain Singh incurred a debt. A decree was passed upon the debt and the whole of the estate is open to be taken in execution proceeding upon that decree unless the debt has been incurred for an immoral purpose. We now come to the second plea : Was the debt incurred for an immoral purpose? The judgment-debtor at the very commencement gave up the suggestion that his father Sheo Narain Singh was guilty of immoral connexions with women, but he proceeded to add that Sheo Narain indulged in intoxicating drugs as a result of which he embarked in speculative transactions The learned Judge has found on the evidence before him that it is not established that Sheo Narain Singh indulged in intoxicating drugs. We agree with that finding Even if the transaction in question were speculative we would not consider that the debt was tainted with immorality, for we hold, agreeing with the view taken in Mohammad Ali v Jhao Lal (2), that speculation in itself does not enter into the question. Speculation is not usually repugnant to good morals. It may be foolish but it is not, unless tainted with fraud, immoral. Apart from that we find on the facts that the transaction was not greatly speculative. It was certainly risky. As we have held that the debt was not tainted with immorality we uphold the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Order of Remand

Misra, J.—(29th March 1928).—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants against the defendant-respondent for arrears of rent for the year, 1333 Fasli in respect of the land situate in mahal Mathura Singh of village Khairapara, District Sitapur. The said mahal is owned by the appellants, Bisram Singh and Thakurain Raj Kuar as well as by Hem Singh and other co-sharers. Thakur Hem Singh is the lambardar of the mahal. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the produce of the defendant's holding for the year 1333 Fasli on accouut of the rabi crop was worth Rs. 264-11-0 and that on account of kharif crop it was worth Rs. 4, only, the total being Rs 268-11-0. Out of this amount, the plaintiffs alleged themselves to be entitled to a sum of Rs. 126-15-3. They have also claimed Rs. 6 5 0 on account of interest, the total amount claimed thus being Rs. 133-4-3.

The defence raised by the defendant was to the effect that he was not liable to pay the rent as claimed by the plaintiffs since his grain rent had been commuted by Thakur Hem Singh lambardar into cash rent, it being fixed at Rs. 42 a year. It was alleged by him that he had paid this amount of rent to the lambardar and he was not in any way liable to pay any sum. It was also pleaded in defence that the plaintiffs were not legally entitled to bring the present suit under the provisions of S. 126, Oudh Rent (22 of 1886), since mahal Mathura Singh constituted a joint estate in which a division had not been made among the cosharers, and the plaintiffs not being managers authorized to collect rent on behalf of all the cosharers, were not en-entitled to bring the present suit. It was also pleaded that Thakur Hem Singh lambardar was entitled to make collections; and that the defendant had in good faith paid his rent to him. The plaintiffs urged in their replication that a custom prevailed in this mahal by virtue of which all the cosharers therein were entitled to collect their rent, and consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to bring the present suit for their share of the rent They also contended that they were not bound by the lease which had been executed by Hem Singh lambardar in favour of the defendant under which the latter's grain rent had been commuted into cash rent, because that was an act of the lambardar obviously injurious to the interests of the plaintiffs and other cosharers and consequently they could not be considered to be bound by that action of the lambardar.

The learned Assistant Collector who tried the case framed the following issues:

(1) Is Hem Singh alone as lambardar entitled to collect rent?

(2) Is the land in suit grain rented, or is it held on a cash rent of Rs 42 a year?

(3) Has the rent in suit been paid to Hem Singh? And if so, whether in good faith or otherwise?

I may just state here that no issue regarding the custom pleaded by the plaintiffs was framed by the trial Court nor was any issue framed as to the validity of the patta granted by Hem Singh to the defendant under which the latter's rent had been commuted into cash rent.

The learned Assistant Collector decided issue 1 in favour of the plaintiffs by holding that each cosharer was entitled to collect rent of his share and that Hem Singh alone was not entitled to collect the entire rent as lambardar. As to issue 2, the Court decided that Hem Singh alone not being entitled to grant the patta the defendant was liable to pay grain rent. As to issue 3, the trial Court came to the conclusion that in view of its finding on issues 1 and 2 the payment made by defendant to Hem Singh could not be considered as valid payment of rent due to the plaintiffs. On these findings a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for the entire sum claimed

The defendant appealed to the learned District Judge of Sitapur who found that the custom as to collection by the different cosharers of their share of rent had not been made out, and that the lambardar was, therefore, entitled to collect the rent and as such the payment made to him by the defendant was good payment. In this view of the case he decreed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit
